SOME PRICES ADVANCE AT NORTH SIDE MARKET

Syracuse.— Many purchasers and few farmers were at the North Side Public Market yesterday. The unfavorable weather was given as the cause of the small number of farmers but those present made large sales of their offerings.

Several changes in prices were made in the poultry market. Live chickens sold at 16@17c and fowls at 14c a pound in crates and 15c separately. Dressed chickens were higher at 23@25c a pound. Dressed fowls advanced 2c to 22@24c a pound. Live turkeys sold at 22@25c a pound. Eggs continued to sell at 50c a dozen and butter was firm at 32@34c a pound.

Apples and pears commanded much attention in the fruit market. Apples brought 50c and $1.00 a bushel, prices ranging according to quality. Duchess, Sheldon and Keifers pears brought $1.00@1.25 a bushel. A small offering of pope orn sold at $1.00@1.25 a bushel; chestnuts brought $6@$8; hickory nuts $1.75@2.25. Dressed pork sold at 10@11c a pound.

Potatoes, cabbage and celery sold briskly. Potatoes brought 85c a bushel by the load and 90c@$1.00 a single bushel. Cabbage remained firm and sold at 25@35c a dozen heads and celery was unchanged at 25@50c a dozen bunches. Greeen peppers are becoming scarce and gardeners advanced thep rice yesterday to $1@1.25 a bushel. They had no trouble obtaining the high figure.

Black radishes are now taking the place of the white variety. The new offering sold well at 35@40c a bushel. Tomotaes are scarce, only a few bushels being offered each week. Farmers demand $2@2.50 for their offering and have little trouble obtaining the price.

Green tomatoes are gone and other lines of vegetables moved readily at unchanged prices.

The hay market was active, a better quality of hay being offered. No. 1 quality sold at $18@19.50 and No. 2 at $13@$16 a ton. Other lines moved at Monday's quotations.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Aristide Briand, New Premier of France.

M. Aristide Briand, who has just become premier of France for the third time, ranks among the ablest of the French statesmen. He was minister of justice in the cabinet of M. Viviani, whom he succeeded. A native of Nantes, in his fifty-third year, M. Briand, after graduating in the law, devoted himself to politics and journalism. Originally a revolutionary Socialist, time and experience have tempered his views.

The new premier has been a member of several cabinets. He first became premier in 1909 and handled masterfully the great railroad strike of 1910. The general confederation of labor called a general strike on all French railroads, and 30,000 men responded. France for a brief period was at the strikers' mercy. M. Briand adopted an effective measure to end the strike. He put out an order calling the strikers "to the colors" for three weeks' training as reserves, and directed them to protect the railroads. The strike collapsed, for Briand's shrewd move had made the strikers their own "strike breakers." His ministry fell in 1911.

President Elect Poincare asked M. Briand, then minister of justice, to form a cabinet in January, 1913. His tenure of office as premier was brief, for in the following March the senate overthrew his government on the question of proportional representation. During his last premiership he became involved in the Caillaux-Calmette affair, and for a time his political star was dimmed. He regained popularity by being chiefly instrumental in passing the three years' conscription law.

Leader of House Majority.

When the Sixty-fourth congress assembles in December the members of the house majority will have a new floor leader to direct their deliberations. Representative Claude Kitchin of the Second North Carolina district will be in the place formerly occupied by Oscar W. Underwood, now senator from Alabama.

As chairman of the ways and means committee Mr. Kitchin becomes the head and front of the Democratic party on the floor of the house of representatives. Although but forty-six years old Mr. Kitchin has had fourteen years' experience as a national legislator. He first went to congress in 1901 and has been there ever since, rising steadily in the esteem of his colleagues and has become a powerful member of his party. He is well posted on the tariff and was one of Champ Clark's lieutenants in the days when the Democrats were in the minority.

A native of the state he represents, Mr. Kitchin comes of a political family. His father was a congressman a generation ago, and his brother, William W. Kitchin, also served several terms as a representative of North Carolina in the national house from the Fifth district. The two brothers sat together in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth congresses. William retired to become governor of his state and later tried for the senatorship against Simmons, but was defeated. Claude remained on the job in congress and now ranks next to Speaker Clark as the most powerful member of that body.

SCIENCE—INVENTION.

Stove Coal In Demand.

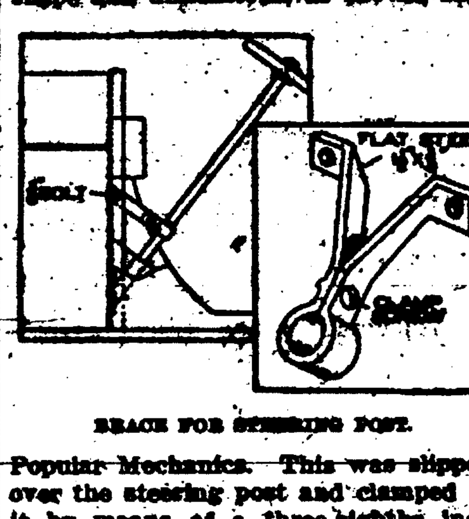
Stove and chestnut sizes of anthracite coal are in the greatest demand and make up over 40 per cent of the total shipments from the mines. They are essentially domestic sizes, and the relatively large proportion they make of the shipments serves as an index to the conditions governing the anthracite trade. Egg coal finds its way principally to the furnaces of residences, and pea coal is used in the same way to some extent, though it is also used for kitchen ranges, and some of it goes with the buckwheat and smaller sizes for use as steam coal. The same sizes come directly into competition with bituminous coal and are sometimes used mixed with bituminous coal for generating steam, chiefly in hotels, apartment houses and office buildings. —United States Geological Survey.

Construction Too Permanent.

A very good illustration of the fact that construction can at times be too permanent can be found in the case of an English railroad between London and Liverpool, which was built many years ago and was laid out with the intention of using only small freight cars with a ten ton capacity limit, says the Engineering Magazine. Owing to the fact that all cuts, tunnels, bridges, etc., were made so permanent by using masonry and stone construction throughout the cost of rebuilding the road later on was so great as to make it prohibitive. Today the freight rates between these two cities, a distance of approximately 200 miles, is nearly twice that charged between New York and Chicago, a distance of almost 1,000 miles.

Re-enforcing a Loose Steering Post.

A loose steering post on an old automobile truck was re-enforced in the following manner: A piece of flat steel stock one and one-half inches by three-eighths inch in cross section was annealed and then forged into the proper shape and dimensions, as shown, says



BRACE FOR STEERING POST.

Popular Mechanics. This was slipped over the steering post and clamped to it by means of a three-eighths inch screw and nut. The base in turn was fastened to the steel dash with suitable screws. This supported the steering post at two points and consequently made it very rigid.

Iron Pipe and Steel.

Viewing impartially all of the data presented so far, there seems to be little to choose between wrought iron and steel pipe, on the whole, as regards their resistance to corrosive influences, but one point may be mentioned with reference to the manner in which these materials corrode. With steel the rusting takes place more or less uniformly over the surface, while wrought iron shows a decided inclination to form deep pits. That this is a dangerous tendency can hardly be doubted. To paraphrase an old saying, a pipe wall is no stronger than its thinnest spot. Therefore to the extent in which wrought iron exhibits this defect in greater measure than steel it may be considered correspondingly inferior.—Engineering Magazine.

Magnet Cranes.

Before the advent of the magnet the handling of steel plates, steel rails, scrap iron, pig iron and other materials proved a tedious and difficult matter. There was delay in applying the hoisting tackle, accidents were frequent because of the slipping of hooks or appliances used to hold the material together, and with small pieces the cost was very high. Magnets have improved these conditions and have added an element of safety to the handling of iron and steel products. Regardless of the shape of the material, the magnet attaches itself instantly to its load, holds it as long as necessary and then releases it, all, the operations being completed without having a man approach either the magnet or the load. —Engineering Magazine.

A New Cuban Bagging Fiber.

Experiments are being carried on in Cuba with the fiber of a plant locally known as "malva blanca," which is said to produce an ideal fabric for sugar bags. According to the Havana correspondent of Sugar, the fiber is soft and silky, possesses a tensile strength greater than hemp, is capable of close weaving and not susceptible to shrinkage if wet. No special machines are required for handling the fiber, those adapted for spinning and weaving hemp, jute or henequen being suitable for malva blanca.

Steering Wheel That Tilts.

A tiltable steering wheel invented by two Michigan men saves the driver much trouble when entering his car. It tilts up parallel with the steering post instead of remaining at the usual rigid position at right angles to the steering post. The driver thus has the use of the entire space between the seat cushion and the steering post when entering the car or leaving it. A latch mechanism is provided by which the wheel is at other times locked in its normal position for steering the car.

AN INCIDENT OF THE FRONTIER

A Strange Duel In a Border Gambling House.

When a mining fever struck a new region in the west I thought I would go out and take a hand. One night soon after my arrival I went to a show that had come to the place where I had located. It was given in a big tent and consisted of acrobatic, sleight of hand and other such performances. There were two brothers, knife throwers, who showed great skill, Ben and Harry Halliwell, as their names were given on the roughly printed playbills. Ben's part was to stand with his back to a board while Harry planted knives all about him so that when Ben walked away he left his outline in knives on the board.

The Halliwell brothers were down for two performances, and just before the second a specimen of the toughest class at the mines, a thickset, red faced, thick lipped man, with Satan's own look, sidled around and got in behind the ropes on the plot reserved for the performers. He stood opposite the knife thrower and sidewise to the man at whom the knives were thrown. Harry had nearly pinned his brother in when I saw a flash of light on Harry's face just as he was throwing a knife. It went through the fleshy part of his brother's leg. I had been watching the man who stood opposite him, and a second before the knife that wounded Ben was thrown I saw the intruder manipulate a pocket mirror. It was he who threw the light of a lamp into Harry's eyes and caused him to missend the knife. The audience had kept their gaze fixed on the brothers, especially the one standing for a target, and nobody but myself seemed to have seen the cause of the failure. I'm sure if they had the man who had contrived it would have suffered for his act. Being unused to such scenes I prudently kept my own counsel. A tenderfoot is not fitted to take part in quarrels of the people of new countries.

I saw Harry Halliwell give the man a glance and was confident that he was aware of the cause of his wounding his brother. In that glance I also saw a premonition of revenge. Of course the incident ended that part of the performance. The brothers withdrew, and the bill was finished by the others. So far as I could see, the spectators supposed that an accident had happened, but were so used to scenes of sudden bloodletting that they soon forgot it.

The next day I learned that the man who had caused the trouble had been incited against Harry Halliwell for some reason not known to my informant. He passed under the name of Nevada Tim and had a black record behind him. His occupation was gambling, and he passed most of his time at the Metropolitan, a gambling den in the place. I was also told that he had been informed that Harry Halliwell had accused him of throwing a light in his eyes as he was about to throw the knife, and he was looking for Harry to kill him.

The afternoon after the performance, having nothing to do, I sauntered into the Metropolitan and stood looking at the game. I was surprised to see Harry Halliwell sitting at the table playing very moderately. He seemed more interested in watching the door than in the game. I went out after awhile, but something—I could not tell what—led me to go back. There was Harry Halliwell still sitting at the table, the door on his left, and now I noticed his brother leaning on a crutch standing opposite. Presently the door opened, and Nevada Tim walked in. I saw him start when he saw the knife thrower, and instead of walking straight up to the table, as he had started to do, he sidled around to the left.

As soon as the man entered I saw that both the Halliwells were aware of his presence. Ben drew a little off from the table, where he and Harry could better see each other, and his eyes never left their enemy for a second. Nevada Tim kept edging around to get in Harry's rear, but in an apparently careless way not likely to attract attention. I wished I hadn't come there, for I knew what he was bent on, and I wasn't sure the brothers did. Finally he attained a position directly behind Harry, and I saw him turn with sudden swiftness and level a revolver at the back of Harry's head, but before he could pull the trigger I heard a thud and at the same moment saw the handle of a knife protruding from his left breast. He pitched over backward and lay perfectly still.

Ben Halliwell had given his brother a signal which, had it come a few seconds later, would have come too late. Harry had turned only half around and thrown the knife over his left shoulder. So sure was his aim that he had pierced the heart in its center.

I had condemned myself bitterly for not interfering to save a man I supposed was not aware of his danger, though something told me I might go wrong in doing so. It turned out that I would have made a great mistake in interfering. The Halliwells had planned the affair, had kept out of Nevada Tim's way and gone to the gambling house to lay in wait for him. Furthermore, I found that a number of persons present as soon as Nevada Tim entered knew that either he or Harry Halliwell would not go out alive. Halliwell could not hit a barn door with a pistol.

My introduction to the country did not please me, and the same evening I packed up my traps and returned to the east.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE PICKLE JAR.

CRANBERRY KETCHUP. — Five pounds of cranberries, one pint of vinegar, two and one-half pounds of brown sugar, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one-half tablespoonful of cloves, one-half tablespoonful of salt and one-half tablespoonful of paprika. Cook the cranberries and vinegar about five minutes, or until the berries open; press through a fine sieve; add the other ingredients and let simmer till thick; then store in bottles as canned fruit.

Tomato Ketchup.—One-half bushel of ripe tomatoes (unpeeled), one quart of vinegar, one pound of salt, one-quarter pound of black pepper, twelve pods red pepper, one-quarter pound of allspice, one ounce cloves, three boxes good mustard, six onions, one handful of peach leaves and two pounds of brown sugar. Mix and boil until of right consistency, being careful not to let it burn; then, when cool enough, strain through wire sieve. The ingredients should all be put together and thoroughly cooked, and when done the ketchup should be quite thick.

Pickled Peaches.—Pare clingstone peaches or remove the skin by dipping the fruit in boiling water and rubbing with a clean cloth. Pour the hot spiced and sweetened vinegar over the prepared peaches and let stand overnight. Drain, reboil and pour over the fruit. Do this at least three mornings or oftener if convenient. On the last morning make sure that the fruit is tender by simmering in the sirup. Pack the peaches in jars, boil down the sirup slightly, pour over the fruit and seal.

"She Died of Things"

This touching epitaph was placed on a woman's tombstone by her affectionate husband.

Things—things and still more things—most women spend the better part of their lives battling with them. The housekeeper knows the story well. The multiplicity of her possessions and the care of them seem too often to become her chief concern. It is as if life existed for things, instead of things for life.

And it is not alone the housekeeper who finds herself a victim of things. The business woman perhaps finds the problem an even more serious one, for she, too, often accumulates not wisely but too well.

"Somehow I'm going to get ahead of these unruly possessions of mine," said such a woman to another when in the midst of a perfect orgy of clearing up her small apartment.

"I seem to spend half my time putting things away and taking care of them, collecting my scant wearing apparel and keeping it all in something like order."

"Perhaps," suggested the other woman, "you are starting at the wrong end of the problem. Instead of devising better ways and means of arranging your possessions and keeping them in order, why not apply a little more thought to the process of accumulation?

"Most of us accumulate twice as many things as we need or want. Whether it's clothing or bric-a-brac, it's quite possible that we would be much better satisfied if we had fewer things and had them better, and certainly life would be simpler."

In any event, it would be a happier arrangement for our executors, for things, unfortunately, even useless things, have a persistent way of staying on after we go.

Women by right ought to be contractors and engineers. They love to make things. They want to put two previously useless things together and make one perfectly useful thing, which, it must be admitted, is a worthy and commendable aspiration.

But while they are making, how happy a thing it would be if they always made things that were worth while! Creative effort is too precious a thing, too rare a thing, too desperately needed in this world to be squandered.

Therefore when a women suggests that by crocheting an edge or sewing lace around the cuffs of men's discarded shirts one may make excellent pot holders for the stove we feel impelled to take kindly but respectful issue with her.

Let us not burn our fingers on hot kettles if we can help it, and by all means let us use up old shirts in this excellent way if we so desire, but as long as we have breath let us save our constructive effort for a more lofty cause than belaced pot holders.

HIS EXPERIENCE A HANDICAP.

Sentenced to Help Jail Doctor For One Year—Penalty For Robbing.

Chicago.—George C. Wakeman, twenty years old, son of Edgar L. Wakeman, author and lecturer, will act as assistant to Dr. Irving L. Barnett, county jail physician, for the next year, by order of Judge Brothers in the criminal court.

The sentence was imposed after Wakeman pleaded guilty to a charge of robbing William Haldt of Glencoe, with whom he was out for a "good time."

Attorney Thomas J. Johnson, Wakeman's counsel, told the judge that the defendant had served three years in the medical department of the United States navy and had been honorably discharged.

Women More Forgetful.

Chicago.—Who is the more forgetful, man or woman? Samuel Kroes, who has been in charge of the La Salle street depot "lost and found" bureau for a number of years, indicts the feminine sex. Thousands of dollars in the trains and depots of Chicago are represented in the articles forgotten every year, the majority by women. Many of great value are left through absentmindedness.

BOX COAT SUIT IN BLUE ZIBELINE.

As a change from the costumes in smooth-finished cloths this box coat suit in blue zibeline trimmed with silk braid is effective.

The new zibelines are very lovely and a great improvement over the zibelines of former years. They are used with excellent effect to design tailored costumes, the box coat being one of the newest of Winter models. As shown here the jacket is worn with a plain skirt, pleated at the sides and finished at the high waist-line with a pointed belt, stitched under the pleats at either side of the skirt. The coat is trimmed with braid, wide bands of the trimming outlining the front and lower edges and soutache ornamenting the wide pockets. Silk braid also forms the high collar and trims the sleeves. In medium size the suit requires 4¾ yards 54-inch material, with 3¾ yards wide and 1 yard narrow braid.

After folding the material in half place the back into position first, laying it on the lengthwise fold of the zibeline. Opposite the back place the upper sleeve section, on a lengthwise thread, and to the right of the upper sleeve section place the lower sleeve section. The collar and pocket are laid next to the back, on a lengthwise thread and following the pocket is the front of the coat. The underfacing is placed along the selvage edge of the zibeline.

The collar, although it is shown in the fashionable high effect, may be turned down and the front rolled back. To do this cut off upper front edges of front and underfacing on double "oo" perforations.

The new zibelines show the same silky sheen found in so many of the new fabrics and will be liked by women desiring a change from the smooth finished materials almost invariably trimmed with fur.

Hats are large and hats are small, though the medium-sized hat is the one most generally seen. All depends upon the size hat that is becoming, showing that Fashion is more lenient in her decrees than those past years when every woman seemed but a reflection of her sisters.

NEW BLOUSES PRETTY AND WEARABLE.

A waist of light pink Georgette crepe with convertible collar and cuffs of the same material embroidered in pink silk.

The woman who has not a great number of blouses cannot afford to choose one so distinctive that once it is seen it will always be remembered; therefore with style she must combine good taste, proper lines and the other factors that go to make a waist wearable.

So many smart separate waists are made of Georgette crepe nowadays that every soft, dainty model one sees immediately suggests this material for its development. Light pink Georgette crepe makes an exceedingly fashionable blouse, of which this design is a type. The cuffs and collar are of the same material trimmed with embroidery. The collar, however, is a convertible model and instead of the turn-over effect the "Minstrel collar," which is the very latest form of neck finish, may be used.

The waist, in medium size, requires 2¾ yards 36-inch material, allowing for cuffs and collar of the crepe. To cut the waist, first fold the material in half; then place into position first the front section, letting the straight edge run parallel with the selvage of the crepe. Just below the front is the piecing for the under-arm seam. Next comes the back, which is the only section of the pattern placed on a lengthwise fold of the material. Opposite the back is the facing; then follow the collar, cuff, lap and, finally, the sleeve.

Soiree, a new American silk, has found quick favor and some admirable novelties in this silk are being produced. Separate blouses of soft, thin velvet are also exceedingly smart. When they are worn with three-piece costumes the waists match the color of the suits, but when used separately, bright colors are preferred.

How to Dress Children

It is the worst of mistaken pride to overdress a baby. If ever simplicity needs to be thrust upon any one the baby is the proper object. The clothes may be as dainty as you please, but they must be simple and the fewer the better. Babies feel the cold and heat more than adults, and they need free play for their rapidly growing bodies.

Layette garments are no longer elaborate and are provided in small numbers. Not more than six dresses nor more than three nightgowns are in the first outfit. The dresses are made without yokes, but the material is neat, plain and hemstitched. If lace is used it is mostly a very narrow edging, almost as fragile as the goods. Hand sewing counts for much in the beauty of such articles. Baby's first short clothes may reach to the soles of his little shoes, as usually by the time he is able to stand he will have grown so that the dresses will be short enough not to be in the way. When he is ready to take the first steps turn the dresses up at the shoe tops, and as he grows taller gradually make the length of the dresses shorter until they are just about to the bend of the knee.

Clothes lie much nearer to character than many of us suspect, and no mother does her full duty by her children who does not make their clothing a matter of careful study and scrupulous attention. Dress a child conspicuously every day with bright colors, ribbons and fancy frocks and you will surely develop in the child a display loving disposition, vanity, forwardness and self consciousness.

A child's wardrobe does not call for great variety. It should comprise no more garments than are consistent with comfort and tidiness. Why buy more dresses or suits than are needed when they are sure to be outgrown? Instead of making an endless number of garments to be outgrown instead of outworn, make your little daughter four each of petticoats, drawers, plain and afternoon dresses and two white, laced trimmed batiste ones for dress occasions. Do not permit her to wear in the morning the half soiled dress worn the previous afternoon, but instead put on her a dark one-piece dress with bloomers to match.

Many mothers wisely dress their little girls in cotton frocks all winter. With leggings, sweaters, bloomers and warm coats for outdoor life this custom makes for comfort in steam heated homes. Little serge gowns with bloomers to match and one-piece frocks over pretty guimpes may take the place of thin ones, but suitable clothing next the skin make ginghams, piques and such materials useful even during cold months.

Fancy footwear is attractive, but grimy little knees and soiled socks are not, while good quality stockings and black or tan leather shoes are always presentable and with leggings are comfortable all winter.

For wear with afternoon dresses make two waist petticoats of cambric, tucked and trimmed with effective but durable embroidery. The other two, for wear with her best dresses, make of nainsook and trim them with fine linen torchon. For the afternoon dresses use muslin for the four. Trim one with embroidery, another with lace, a third with bands and the fourth with hand embroidery.

No two of the dresses will look alike, yet when they are too much worn for further use you can easily make from the portions still in good condition two dresses which will look as well as entirely new ones. Make them simply, cutting them, if possible, by a one piece pattern. A dress made in this fashion and opened down the back from the neck to hem is ironed in half the time it takes for one which must be slipped over the ironing board. You can frequently make the guimpes from your own partly worn lingerie waists.

When Your Sweater Is Soiled.

Knitted or crocheted sweaters or scarfs can be washed to look like new. If the sweater is folded as flat as possible, placed carefully in a pillowcase and run through at intervals with basting thread to keep it in position it can be washed with the ordinary flannels. But if it is a very delicate sweater it is best to wash it separately in soapsuds made by dissolving a cake of shaved white soap in enough boiling water to make a gallon and to this adding a tablespoonful of ox gall. Souse it up and down with the hands, but do not rub it. Squeeze out the water by patting between the hands and rinse in three waters. Then wring it, place between two dry sheets and twist lightly. Press while still hot with a warm iron.

Certain Cure for Cough

"When my daughters Irene and Nettie were babies they were subject to croup," writes Mrs. Margaret Pickert, East Syracuse, N. Y. "Our druggist recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It acted quickly and they never needed any other medicine for this complaint." Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the sole reliance for croup in many thousands of homes and has never been known to fail. It contains no narcotic. For sale by all dealers.

SMARTNESS ITSELF.

A Grateful Variation From the Suit of Popular Flares.

SEAL AND SIMPLICITY.

Full skirted and box coated, this smart suit is featured in tan colored gabardine. The bottom of the short coat is edged with seal, as are the cuffs. A choker collar of seal fastens snugly, and the patch pocket and back of the coat are embroidered with disks of tan silk, different sizes of them giving an interesting detail.

A GRACEFUL GOWN.

A Beautiful Dance Frock For the Debutante.

Deep pink goldenrod satin is the base of this frock, the attractive tunic being tucked up slightly in front in a fetching drape. The back hangs in soft folds over net. The paneled front is of opalescent beads over net, as is the simple bodice, with its effect of bolero drape. Avoiding extremes, this gown achieves a beautiful simplicity.

WAR IS EXHAUSTING SUPPLY OF BLUE JEANS

Chicago.—If the European war keeps up it is quite likely there will be no more blue jeans. Toilers of the future may be garbed in overalls of pink or gray, predicts F. R. Hamburger, secretary of the National Association of Garment Workers, which began its semi-annual sessions today.

"The supply of blue vegeaable dye is just about exhausted," he said, "and we are unable to get more, as Germany is the sole exporter of the blue dyes used here".

The enormous demand for the armies for wool and its manufactured products will cause an increase in the price of clothing in America this Winter, other speakers said.

NEW MINISTER OF CHINA PROMINENT

Dr. Koo Recently Named Envoy to Mexico, Cuba and Peru.

A GRADUATE OF COLUMBIA.

One of the First Students Sent to America by China Through Boxer Rebellion Indemnity—Has Host of Professional Friends, Also Good Knowledge of International Law.

Washington.—Dr. Vi Kyuin Wellington Koo, who was recently appointed as the Chinese minister to the United States, succeeding Kai Fu Shah, is a graduate of Columbia university, where he received his doctor's degree. He was one of the first students sent to America by the government of China through the Boxer rebellion indemnity, remitted by the United States, and acquitted himself with great credit. He is well known in New York and includes among his friends many leaders in educational, professional and financial circles.

The new envoy attended St. John's college, Shanghai, and was admitted to Columbia in 1904, where he took a prominent part in undergraduate life. He was editor in chief of the Columbia Spectator, the university daily paper, and was a member of the Columbia debating team which defeated Cornell in 1908. The student board of graduates included him as a member. He also took an active part in track athletics.

Dr. Koo was only recently named Chinese minister to Mexico, Peru and Cuba and passed through Washington on his way to London prior to taking up his official position. He was presented to Secretary of State Lansing at that time and discussed the Mexican situation with him.

As an undersecretary at the Chinese foreign office Dr. Koo was a member of the commission which conducted negotiations with the Japanese minister in Peking last spring. It is said that he is a close friend of President Yuan Shih Kai and is in sympathy with the latter's leaning toward a monarchical form of government for China.

The impression was gained here that Minister Koo's appointment came as a surprise to the present minister. It is said that Peking was dissatisfied with his reports of the attitude of the American government and public opinion in the United States during the Chino-Japanese negotiations. The legation repeatedly applied to the state department for aid and counsel at that time, but the United States took no action toward restraining Japan in her demands upon China.

In 1909 Dr. Koo was made master of arts and for three years thereafter studied under Dr. John Bassett Moore. The degree of Ph. D. was conferred upon him, and he acquired a wide reputation for his knowledge of international law.

While a student in New York city Dr. Koo was closely associated with work in Chinese American circles. He was editor of the Chinese Students' Monthly and as president of the Chinese Students' alliance did much to advance the interests of Chinese students in America.

Dr. Koo left America in April, 1912, to take up his duties as diplomatic secretary to President Yuan Shih Kai. The Chinese society gave him a luncheon on the eve of his departure.

While on the Pacific slope, intrusted with a government mission, he received word of his appointment as minister to Mexico.

At the recent Bankers' club luncheon in New York Dr. Koo said, "The Chinese people have a liking for Americans which is as intense as it is justified, and when I say this I do not speak on behalf of only a portion of the people."

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Howard Buck, Captain of Wisconsin Eleven.

Howard Buck, captain of Wisconsin's football team, is recognized as one of the best tackles in the game. Last year he established a reputation for speed and daring and this year has added to his fame. Howard's position is left tackle, and by his strong game so far he is practically assured of a place on the all western conference eleven. In the games already played by the Badgers they have rolled up big scores.

Peter Volo Fast Four-Year Old.

During his career on the turf the champion stallion The Harvester trotted one mile in 2:01 and one mile in 2:02. Cresceus once trotted in 2:02¼ and again in 2:02¾. Etawah last year won five heats under 2:04, the fastest in 2:03¼. This year the four-year-old Peter Volo has on three different occasions trotted in 2:02, and his two other winning heats were under 2:03, making an average of 2:02¼ for all his winning performances. Etawah was considered a marvel in four-year-old form, but this record of Peter Volo's stamps him as being the faster colt, and he is so far in advance of all other colt trotters that a longer period will probably elapse before his record is beaten than marks any other reduction of the record for four-year-olds. The first champion at this age of which there is record was the famous Ethan Allen. He won in 2:36 in 1858, bringing great fame to the Morgan family.

The Amateur Golfer.

Under the amateur rule of the United States Golf association there are two things, and only two, that a golfer may do in connection with the game and receive money therefor, writes President Frank L. Woodward in the New York Sun. He may write about the game, or he may act as a golf architect. Everything else is barred. It is not intended that a golfer shall be barred from earning his living, but it must be clearly established that his connection with the game of golf has nothing to do with his getting or holding the position, with the conditions of his employment or the amount of salary received.

Sheppard to Coach Militiamen.

Melvin W. Sheppard, a former middle distance runner and holder of many records, has been engaged by the sixty-ninth Regiment Athletic association, New York, to coach its athletes for the coming year. Sheppard in his competitive days had an enviable reputation as a middle distance runner, and in his career as a competitor he has gleaned much experience which should prove valuable to him in his coaching. Up to about a year ago he still retained his standing as an amateur athlete, but he relinquished this to take up the duties of coach to the Millrose A. A. athletes.

White Sox to Keep Rowland.

Clarence Rowland will be retained as manager of the Chicago American league club for the 1916 season, Charles A. Comiskey, owner of the team, has announced. "There never was a chance of Rowland being dropped, regardless of all reports to the contrary," Comiskey said. "Of course I was disappointed at not winning the pennant, but I am not blaming Rowland. He got all that could be asked out of an entirely new team."

PANIC STRICKEN CREW CAUSED ANCONA'S LOSS

Vienna, Via Berlin (wireless to Sayvill).—The loss of a single life in the sinking of the Italian liner Anconia by submarine was unnecessary. This claim is made in a statement today by Austro-Hungarian officials.

Government officials expected that no action will be taken by the United States.

The full report of the commander of the submarine, which sank the Ancona, has not been received. However, the reports on which the statement sent out Sunday by the Austro-Hungarian admirality, was baser, justify the charges of cowardice against the Ancono's crew.

It is alleged that the crew of the Ancona were panic-stricken from the beginning and actually lowered life boats while the ship was moving fourteen miles an hour. These boats naturally were swamped, but it is asserted that there were still enough lifeboats to save everybody.

Furthermore, the charge is made that the members of the crew pre-empted the boats and rowed far from the steamer. The captain had been allowed almost ninety minutes for the safe removal of those aboard.

An Austrian official remarkedincidentally that the same panic-stricken conduct was reported in the case of the Italian crew of the liner Fireaze, which was sunk after the Ancona.

It is announced that the government has in its possession the original instructions to all Italian shipmasters to attempt to ram a submarine or escape, depending on the relative positions at the time of an attack.

It is pointed out in official quarters here that the commander of the submarine which sank the Ancona had no means of knowing whether that steamer was a peaceful outward-bound passenger ship or a transport.

It is declared that he was even justified in suspecting her to be a warship, as she is listed in the International Naval Register as an auxiliary cruiser, with a provisional armament of 12-centimeter guns.

MACCABEES PLAN LEAGUE FOR ALL MEMBERS

At the regular weekly meeting of the Maccabees held last night, a program of social events for the coming winter was outlined.

Captain Ives of the Basketball team addressed the members, telling them in detail of the plans of the basketball team. He recommended that dancing be held in connection with the games, similar to the manner of holding the State League basketball games. The large hall has been transformed into a basketball court.

Supporters of the team are enthusiastic over the prospect of a strong team, as plans are being laid to organize the entire membership.

After the business session two teams lined up on the court and the team captained by Ives won out with a score of 8-6. Referee Willy attributes the victory to the fact that one of the players of the opposing side forgot which team he was on and assisted Captain Ives' quintet in taking the ball several times.

Those who took part in last night's game were: K. O.—Ives, Boutin, Padgett, Baehr, Smith; T. M.—Hutchins, Lewis Freedman, Kemp, Shipman.

A. Z. Wolever acted as timekeeper.

HOUSEWIVES' LEAGUE HAS NO MONEY

New York.—The breach between the National Housewives' League and the New Jersey branch of the organization was not healed yesterday. No further action was taken, however.

Inreply to the criticisms and charges made, Mrs. Julian Heath, founder and president of the league, said last night:

"I can scarcely reply the charges are so vague. I court any investigation, however, that any person or body wishes to make.

"It is said the visitors from New Jersey were refused an examination of our papers. I really do not know what papers they could have examined., We have none—except the constitution.

"As to our financial condition. The books of our treasurer and secretary may be examined at any time. If my memory serves me I believe we have at least $6 in the treasury. It is impossible to collect the membership dues of 10 cents from all members.

"Our organization is said to total 800,000. I would say there are more than that in the body."

GRANBY CENTER SCHOOL TO HOLD EXHIBIT

Examples in manual training work will be part of the exhibit also. This will include bird houses, wind mills, feed hoppers, etc., all work of the pupils.

Attorney Boyd, of Granby Center, Mr. Charles Vandelender, Mrs. Dell Darrow, teacher of the school, and Superintendent Gardner will take part in the program of speaking and music.

The children of the school will entertain with several musical selections

During October the German pig iron output further increased to 1,076,343 tons against 1,034,124 tons in September, or 34,771 men working today, against 34,4 1 last month.

15 Teams Want to Play Games in City Hall; New Schedule

The high school girls practiced on the basketball court in the city hall yesterday afternoon. This was their first appearance of the season as Mayor Fox only yesterday announced the schedule. The girls will be priveleged to use of the floor on Monday and Friday afternoons.

As has been the case in other years, City Marshall John Youngs, will have charge of the enforcement of the schedule and he will exercise a strict policy. About fifteen teams have made application to the Common Council to use the City Hall court and the schedule has been arranged. According to Mr. Youngs, however, it may be necessary to make changes in the schedule within the next few days. The needed changes will be made at once and the schedule will remain intact for the rest of the year.

The schedule as arranged at present is as follows:

Monday afternoon—High school girls; evening, High school team, 7 to 8:30; Baptist church, 8:30 to 10.

Tuesday afternoon—Presbyterian church; 1st M. E. Scouts, 7 to 8:30; Junior Knights, 8:30 to 10.

Saturday—the State street, 1st M. E. church and the Baptist church small boys will have the entire day.

ALLIES FEAR SERBIAN DISASTER; INCREASE PRESSURE ON GREECE

London.—Extraordinary efforts are being made by the British and French governments, wholeheartedly supported by Russia and Italy, to prevent a complete and crushing Serbian disaster. It is recognized here that the position of the central Serb army, as well as the army of the south, which has been flanked out of its Babuna Pass stronghold, is critical in the extreme, and that the destruction of the former and the destruction or internment in Greece of the latter is imminent.

Cut off from all outside assistance except by way of the dangerous and impracticable trials through Albania and surrounded now on three sides by Germans, Austrians and Bulgarians, there is nothing to do ,in the opinion of military authorities here, but leave the central arm yto its fate. So it is with the southern army, and in just as great measure with the Anglo-French contingent, that the Entente governments are chiefly concerned.

Greece says she will intern and disarm any Serbian, British or French force that retires from Serbian to Greek territory. This, she says, she is bound to do by the circumstance of her neutrality. The Entente diplomatists are forcibly impressing on the Athens ministry that the allied forces, having entered Serbian territory over Greek soil unopposed and in fact officially invited by Greece to undertake such an operation, they are entitled to withdraw by the same route.

Despatches last night from Salonica and from Athens intimated that should King Constantine's advisers decide to open the frontier to the Allies in the event of a retirement being necessary, and thus conform to the demands of the Entente Powers, they will permit equally the passage of Austro-German or Bulgar armies in pursuit and thus maintain the spirit if not the letter of neutrality.

The success of the Bulgar flank attack on Babuna Pass and their advance from Veles, with the end of theb attle, along the Cerna, in which the French opposed the Bulgars, leaves to the Serbs only two lines of retreat. One of these—west into the Albanian mountains, where the tribesmen are said to be armed and encouraged by Austria —virtually was closed last night by a flying column from the extreme Bulgar right, which was interposing between Prilep and the frontier and was swinging around toward Monastir to catch the Serbs in a steel loop. The second avenue of escape is directly south into Greece, but this is contingent on the checking of the new Bulgar enveloping operation before it reaches Monastir. To effect this London heard last night a British force was speeding to Monastir over the railroad which connects that town with Salonica.

The Entente demand that Greece shall either join the Allies or translate her benevolent neutrality into a clear declaration that she will attempt to disarm neither the Serbians nor the Allies should they be forced back over her frontier, and that she will afford further facilities for the landing and transport of allied troops is being strongly presented. To emphasis the position of the Greek government should this demand be disregarded the British government yesterday ordered that no Greek vesel other than those loaded or loading shall leave a British port until further orders.

NEW SECRETARY COMES DEC. 1; IS NOT SENT BY AMERICAN CITY BUREAU

N. L. Whitaker, president of the Chamber of Commerce announces that arrangements have been completed with D. S. Hollenga, secretary of the Association of Commerce at Minot, N. D., for the secretaryship of the local Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Hollenga will assume his duties December 1st.

In conjunction with the engagement of Mr. Hollenga the Chamber of Commerce has severed relations with the American City Bureau of New York so far as their secretarial service is concerned. The Bureau was to render this service for a period of three years and the termination of this feature of the contract has been arranged on a basis of a money consideration paid to the Chamber of Commerce. In this connection, Mr. W. D. Heydecker, as an employe of the American City Bureau, who has acted [illegible] of the Chamber since its reorganization, has been recalled by the Bureau to take up work elsewhere and pending the arrival of Mr. Hollenga the office of the Chamber will be in charge of Miss C. A. [illegible].

Mr. Hollenga comes to Fulton with an enviable [illegible] as a commercial organization secretary, acquired through a number of years experience, chiefly in the west. His work has been of such a nature while at Minot as to attract widespread attention to that community, and it is believed that the local organization has been most fortunate in securing his services.

Plans for the future for the Chamber will be left by the directorate for Mr. Hollenga to determine and he will immediately, upon his arrival, enter upon a most aggressive campaign.

Pope Ready to Renounce Temporal Power for Peace

London.—Pope Benedict, Rome dispatches say, has decided to make one of the greatest sacrifices in history to further the cause of peace. At the December consistory he will renounce the immemorial papal claims to temporal sovereignty.

The Pope realizes the jealousies of the warring nations will nullify the best efforts of any mediator against whom a suspicion of selfish interest might lie. This, it is believed, is the chief reason for his willingness to relinquish one of the rights symbolized by the triple crown.

The Pope realizes, too, that the most delicate diplomacy will be necessary. This not alone in the preliminary peace negotiations, but in the ultimate settlement of tangled questions. He desires to actively participate in these negotiations.

To do so it is necessary he obtain Italy's consent. From the Middle Ages down to 1870 the temporal power of the Pope over Rome and a portion of Italy was recognized. Since that time the claim of such power, while disputed by Italy, has been stoutly maintained by Catholicism.

The Pontiff now is willing, declare the Rome reports, to renounce his earthly sovereignty, in order to bring his vast spiritual influence to bear on thew arring nations.

BULGARS HAVE TAKEN PIRLEP; LONDON NEWS

London.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram company from Athens, dated Wednesday says,:

"Official war despatches are still lacking but according to press despatches received here Pirlep is said to have been occupied by the Bulgarians, who are now two hours distant from Monastir and making a turning movement under command of German officers. The situation at Monastir is reported to be mose critical. Thef oreign consuls, except the French, have gone to Salonica, to which place the prefect of Monastir has sent the city's archives."

Telegraphing under date of Tuesday from Vodena, the Times' correspondent says:—

"The situation on the Pirlep front has slightly improved in favor of the Serbians, who yesterday forced the Bulgarians to retire a short distance from the position they held on Sunday.

"The Perfect of Monastir called a meeting of the representatives of the Serbian, Greek, Bulgarian and Turkish communities and advised them in the event of the Bulgarians approaching the city to go out and meet the Bulgarian commander and tender to him their submission in order to save in inhabitants from ill treatment at the hands of the enemy."

POWERS SURPRISED AT LENGTH OF WAR

London.—Lord Haldane, the onetime War Secretary, speaking at Hampstead last night, declared that the Germans would have reached Paris and perhaps Calais had not the government taken prompt action upon the warnings which he himself and others had given of German intentions.

The British government, he said, did everything possible to get aggressive ideas out of the heads of the other nations on the Continent, but that did not prevent the government from taking precautionary measures. Gt. Britain was not taken unawares, but was able to mobilize the army and navy at the first moment of the outbreak of the war.

Lord Haldane expressed the belief that there was not a single government among the Powers that has not been wholly surprised and taken aback by the magnitude and duration of the struggle which has since developed, and that nobody has been so much surprised as the German general staff, which "had expected a walkover in about three months."

Home Project Work Gets Its Impetus In the Nearby Schools

The Home Project Work, which Warren S. Gardner, district superintendent of schools, established in this section in the early fall will be brought to a close for this year tomorrow night when the pupils from five schools in the vicinity of Bowens Corners will meet in Grange hall there and exhibit the results of their work.

The officials of the State Department of Education place Oswego county in the foreground, in regard to carrying out the idea of home project work. Superintendent Gardner, in reviewing the work of the present season, has said:

"We trust it will remain a permanent feature of the school work." With the success attendant on this year's experiment, the parents of the school children will ask that the work be continued.

In connection with the Bowen's Corners exhibit there will be a program of speaking, music and oratory which has been compiled by Superintendent Gardner. A number of the prominent townsfolk as well as school children will take part in this portion of the exercises.

Mrs. May Rumsey, lecturer of Bowen's Corners Grange, will make the opening address. She will be followed by other speakers among whom are: Mrs. Albert Arnold, whose topic will be "Interesting the girl in the home;" Mrs. Stephen Arnold's subject will be, "The Home and School," Mrs. Noah Merriam will speak on "Home Decoration."

Superintendent Gardner and Attorney Floyd S. Spangle will make addresses, the last named taking for his subject, "The country boy in college." Mr. Albert Arnold, the town's supervisor, will speak on "Keeping the boy on the farm," Lawton Beardsley, ex-supervisor and a leading farmer of the town, who will talk on the same subject.

Arthur Coles, justice of the peace and truant officer, will make a short address for the benefit of the school pupils.

Mr. William C. Hubbard, one of the leading growers of produce in this section will lecture on corn culture. Mr. Hubbard was an exhibitor at the recent Grange fair in this city. "Dairying" will be the subject of Mr. Noah Merriam's talk.

Superintendent Gardner is enthusiastic over the success so far attending the work in his district, particularly in the matter of raising prize winning corn by the pupils in his district, so much so that he will see to the entry of the corn at the corn show to be held in this city, commencing November 30.

As one illustration of the interest taken by parents of school pupils, attention is called to the fact that at the school exhibit at Southwest Oswego there was an attendance of 300 persons; at Mt. Pleasant there were 200 present.

The prizes awarded to winners in the contests comprise ribbons —blue, red and white respectively.

WAR DECLARED UPON MOSQUITOES IN 3 STATES

New York.—War against the mosquito colonies of three States was declared by experts representing the United States Bureau of the Public Health Service, New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, at a conference held in the auditorium of the Department of Health here yesterday. The delegates to the conference were unanimous in condemning "the habits and characteristics of Miss Mosquito upon whom all the blame of being a disease carrying pest was heaped, while even the representatives— and many of them were women—from the salt marsh regions of New Jersey and the Rockaway peninsula gave Mr. Mosquito a clean bill of health and declared that he was an inoffensive and much maligned male, whose days are few and full of trouble.

HOSPITAL SHIP IS SUNK BY MINE

London.—The hospital ship Anglia, with about three hundred wounded men abroad, in addition to the crew, nurses and attendants, bound from France for Dover, struck a mine in mid channel yesterday and sank in a very short time. Nearly one hundred men, most of them seriously wounded and therefore in their cots, lost their lives.

The collier Lusitania, which was nearby at the time of the accident, immediately went to the assistance of the Angelia, and her boats had just been lowered when she also struck a mine and foundered. All her crew were saved

A patrol vessel succeeded in rescuing three hundred of the Anglia's passengers and crew, including some of the nurses. A number of bodies were recovered.

BETTER TAKE WARNING

The State of New York will never vote another appropriation "to finish the Barge canal." The present one was carried only after the most extraordinary efforts to push it through. Many of the voters gave it approval only with the reservation that this was positively the last hand-out. The politicians might just as well make up their minds to this now as to try it on again and get left. Finish the Barge canal with what they have got, or let it go to destruction.—Utica Observer.

MOVIES IN THE SCHOOLS

Chicago is to have the movies in the public schools, teaching the young idea by ocular demonstration. It is predicted that the experiment will so succeed that other cities will fall in line. One immediate advantage will be that of enthusing the pupil. No longer will there be hookey and it is fair to assume that pupils will be more punctual. When it is considered that the photo dramatists can portray the classics of literature on the screen in a manner which impresses capable critics, there can be no question that the camera may be effectively used to instruct in the rudiments and, by degrees to increase the fund of accurate information it is the duty of the public schools to impart.—Watertown Standard.

THE ACTIVITIES OF CITIES

Chancellor Norton of the University of Buffalo in an address before the delegates of the Association of Urban Universities at Cincinnati last night, touched upon a point in American affairs which has not as yet, apparently, impressed itself upon the people, and that is the tremendous growth of American municipalities and the development of municipal functions.

"The population of the United States at the time of the formation of the Constitution was rural. It is now urban," he said

And that tells the story of the changed condition of our affairs. Formerly the wealth of the country was in land and cattle. Now it is in stocks and bonds but taxation, in the cities especially, is still levied on estate. In 1810 the City of New York had a population of 100,000, and its annual budget was about $3,000,000. Municipal government is naturally the great problem of the country today, and it has increased more in its functions and activities in the last quarter of a century than any other institution of life.—Buffalo Times.

CIVIL-SUIT JURIES DOOMED?

Members of the Brooklyn Bar Association at a meeting held a few nights ago heard a proposition which indicated that the day of the juror as a judge of facts in civil suits is doomed The report was made by a special committee, headed by James M. Gray. The proposition relating to jury trials was but a portion of a hundred-page report on proposed court changes. Alfred F. Van Thun, jr., spoke on that particular proposition. He said in part:

"The theory of the proposed act, while recognizing the constitutional right of trial by jury, is to make a trial before a judge without a jury the normal mode of trial. A party who desires a trial before a jury must demand it within ten days after the cause is at issue or on the return day of a summons to appear, or it shall be deemed waived.

"A step in advance," was the way Mr. Van Thun characterized that proposed change in the civil court proceeding. This view was taken by many of the lawyers present in an informal discussion after the meeting of the bar association was over, the jury system is not giving supreme satisfaction in the administration of justice as between party litigants.

Members of the bar association have voted to receive the report of which the jury-trial proposition is a part and will give the proposed changes further study Later a decision will be made regarding those propositions which will be favored or condemned. A joint legislative committee will have the ultimate say in the matter, but the recommendations of lawyers throughout the state will be received and considered. —Batavia News.

LEND A HAND!

Last year this newspaper during the month of November gave to the public an explanation of the winter's campaign as planned by the local Salvation Army. Information was given that Ensign Fitzgerald would be grateful for any contributions of vegetables, fruit, and other supplies that could be added to the winter's store of the Army. The response was immediate, and one farmer alone brought to the city such a big load of good things that it served as a blessing for many a hungry family within the city during those long cold days we all remember so well.

This year, the Ensign states, he is planning on enlarging the field of work and in view of this fact the Evening Times gladly offers assistance in again reminding the public of the Army's needs.

While it is to be hoped the winter may not be as severe as last year, preparations must be made to meet the needs of many a hungry stomach and a half frozen body. Many little children each winter in this city, as well as any other city, face conditions that are enough to make a stout heart quail. Little folks, none of us like to think of as half-starved. The Ensign, through contributions received whether of potatoes, apples, vegetables or clothing brings gladness and hope to many a home during the long winter months.

The work carried on by the Salvation Army in all cities is indeed commendable in its efficiency, and richly deserves every bit of encouragement it receives.

THE UPRISING

How sweet the hour of three o'clock,
  The room with peace and sunshine full,
Where all the happy students flock;
  Decked in their homespun flax and wool.

A knock at the door; the teacher leaves
  And every boy of learned art
Begins to play; then trouble starts,
  While every scholar's beaming face
Is breathing mischief throughout the place.

The teacher came; his angry looks
  Wrinkled his brow of thought and care,
And stately as a rooster walks;
  He led himself unto his chair.

The teacher rose; his voice was strong,
  He piped again the same old song;
He spoke of talking in the school
  Of passing notes and different rules,
Then from his rousing tongue of fame
  The startling words for order came.
The stirring sentences he spake
  Compelled their hearts to tremble and quake.

Even as he spoke, his speech renewed
  Just as the frost in the higher altitude,
Continued to talk, he ne'er would tire,
  Then swept his kindling glance of fire
From freshman small to students higher.

A moment there was of awful pause
  When some one cried, "Cease teacher, cease,
The school house is the place of peace,"
  The other answered, "Yea 'tis so
But not when you are against my cause
You all are bound to obey my laws,
  In this the dawn of education,
Work and play are not relation."

And now before the open door
  The principal stood; 'twas ordered so,
His piercing eyes with fire gaipse
  Passed through the room o'er and o'er;
And then his words to end the strife
  Fired the teacher with fiercer life,
And up in front with wild increase
  Forgetting his duty of restoring peace,
The teacher spoke as ne'er before.
  It seemed as if he would never cease
And every word its terror flung
  From off his jubilant iron tongue,
Was ——————.

"Who dares," this was the ending cry,
  As striding from the desk he came,
"Come up in front and me defy,"
  A hundred hands Flung up reply,
A hundred voices answered, "Not I."

NATIVE AND FOREIGN CHILDREN

Doctor Guilfoy, who is head of the Bureau of Public Health Education of New York, has discovered that the children of immigrants are healthier than the children of native Americans In native families forty-four out of every 1,000 boys, and thirty-five out of every 1,000 girls, die before reaching five years of age. The foreign-born ratio is thirty-nine boys and thirty-two for girls.

The physician explains this condition by saying that American mothers let social affairs interfere with their maternal duties; that bottle-feeding and general neglect cause much sickness among American babies.

This indictment of American mothers may be true or untrue. But there are other reasons which might account for the hardier constitutions of immigrants' babies. Generally both the parents have occupations which necessitate physical exercise, and which develop a capacity for bodily endurance. The latter may be inherited by theb abes. European mothers, especially those of the peasant type, know more about the essential points in caring for children than young American mothers, and put more faith in discipline and less in coddling.

It is not pleasant for Americans to be told that they are less careful and wise in rearing children than the immigrants who come across the ocean in the steerage That this national defect is due to neglect is doubtful. If it is due to ignorance of parents, which is more likely: the health departments o fthe various cities and towns should issue informative pamphlets in every case where a birth is recorded.—Rochester Democrat-Chronicle.

CITIES TO SETTLE SMALL CLAIMS; NO PROCESS

Columbus.—Courts of concilation are becoming an institution in Ohio. They are based on the theory that the least litigation is the best for all the people and so they strive to settle claims without real process of law. Cleveland has one which permits every claim of $35 or less to file a petition without cost and without the aid of an attorney. When a claim is filed the court notifies the defendant by mail and he comes into the tribunal to talk things over. If A says that B owes him $20 and B says that the amount is not more than $15, it is usually not difficult to have both reach an agreement as the reasonable settlement. Many times the would be litigants "split the difference" and go away happy. The experience has cost them not a penny. Cincinnati has been trying the same sort of a stunt, but not in an official way. Other cities are talking about it. Columbus is about to try an experiment patterned after the Cleveland plan, excepting that the amount of the claims to be settled by conciliation will be smaller. Here in Columbus only claims of $15 and less may be subject to the jurisdiction of the new court, which will be simply a part of the new municipal tribunal just created. And the amount is made smaller for the simple reason that if it were made bigger the lawyers would kick on losing fees. Yes sir! The lawyers don't like the new idea a little bit, for it spells lack of litigation and lack of litigation means a smaller income for the legal profession. In Cleveland they started in to make the conciliation claims $50 or less, but the lawyers kicked and got the maximum reduced to $35. But the notion is gaining headway, slowly but surely, and not even the combined efforts of the legal profession seem able to check it.

DOINGS OF THE VAN LOONS

It looks as if Father was right

MISS BEULAH LIVINGSTONE.

Miss Beulah Livingstone enjoys the unique distinction of being the first woman theatrical business manager in the country.

Still a girl of twenty-five, Miss Livingstone has forged ahead remarkably from a kindergarten teacher timidly venturing into the magazines by composing children's tales to a position of tremendous responsibility, requiring the handling of large sums of money and constant judgment in the writing of all advertisements, booklets, window cards, designing the three sheets, attending to correspondence, paying salaries and generally running the business end of a play in one of New York city's new theaters.

This southern girl, with her golden hair and laughing eyes, is the very last person you would expect to find in an office with her own name on the door. She was born and educated in Georgia.

A few years ago she went north and entered a normal school, later becoming a kindergarten teacher on the east side. In this corner of "the great melting pot" nearly every nationality was represented. These children could not understand, as a class, tales that the average American child can grasp. So she wrote her own stories and finger plays. One morning the supervisor demanded where she had got them, as she had not seen them in the other schools. The young pedagogue blushingly replied that she had written them herself. Later she sold these, her first "masterpieces," to the New York Tribune.

At the end of her first scribbling year Miss Livingstone had saved enough money for a trip abroad.

Armed with letters of introduction to Rodin, Zuluoga, D'Annunzio, Beerbohm Tree and Sir Oliver Wyndham, she traveled through Europe and Africa, selling her stories of a trip through the desert on camels. Returning home, she resigned her position as schoolteacher and, thrilled by her success at breaking into print, began free lance work, writing everything from "how to ice cake" to stage stories.

While in France she met Lou Tellegen, Sarah Bernhardt's leading man, who asked her to become his press agent. Few women have made good in this line of work. Most press agents are men. But Miss Livingstone was soon recognized as one of the most successful members of her profession, next representing such stars as Anna Pavlowa and Mr. and Mrs. Castle, and last winter she did the press work for the company that produced "Alice In Wonderland."

The theater business promises to be a fascinating field for women of special gifts, both as producers and as managers.

PLANNING THE NEW HOUSE

Interior Arrangements Should Have as Much Care as the Outside of the Home.

Things one should not do in planning a home have been enumerated from week to week on the Home Builders' page of the Sunday Herald during the past few months. But in addition to the things that should not be done there are many little things that should be done, some of which, seemingly unimportant, are in reality very important. Following are a few of the "Do's," combined with "Don'ts:"

Don't treat the piazza as an architectural excrescence; make it a real out-of-door living room. It should command a good view, have a western exposure and be so located as to afford privacy and rest to those occupying it.

Don't plan for other than wide openings between the hall, living room and dining room. These wide openings give an air of spaciousness and gracious hospitality.

Don't buy a building site without first having the architect visit the site with you. You may in this way avail yourself of many valuable and helpful hints.

Don't plan your house until you have selected your building site. To do so is about as difficult and will result more disastrously than buying a hat without first trying it on.

Don't forget that a cheery entrance hall affords to the casual visitor agreeable anticipations that a further acquaintance with the house will be equally cheery.

Don't fail to locate the kitchen range out of reach of cross drafts. Much time and fuel are wasted, often with disastrous results to the cooking, by not obtaining this condition.

Don't omit the shower from the bathroom. You will be more than repaid in health and comfort for the extra outlay.

Don't fail to conceal, if possible, the hot-water boiler in some convenient closet in the kitchen. The boiler is not a decorative feature, even with much time expended in polishing it. This time can be spent to better advantage in numerous other ways. The water keeps hot longer if the tank is concealed, which is an advantage economically.—Boston Herald.

Nests Under Buggy Seat.

Cleveland, Ga.—When Wesley Nix of Etris arrived at camp meeting he discovered while assisting his family from the vehicle a hen sitting on eggs under the seat of his buggy. He prevented Biddy from attending meeting and returned home with the sitting hen still on duty.

Human Weakness.

We move too much in platoons; we march by sections; we do not live in our vital individuality enough; we are slaves to fashion, in mind and in heart, if not to our passions and appetites.—Chapin.

For Thanksgiving.

On a table covered with the snowiest of white linen is spread a circle of red oak leaves, gathered in October before they could become shriveled and dried. From this circle at the center of the cloth extends to each corner a line of the leaves tacked lightly in place.

But the glory of the table is a huge pumpkin hollowed out and filled with a golden mass of yellow chrysanthemums. As the turkey is brought to the table it should have an enormous chrysanthemum in the breast.

Where artificial light is preferred for the long dinner at the middle or end of the day oak leaves are not used on the cloth. Instead two large branching candelabra adorn the ends of the table on either side of the flower filled pumpkin. Their candles furnish the only illumination in the room except perhaps for one or two candlesticks or lamps on mantelpiece or serving table. The latter should be hidden beneath crape paper shades or inexpensive papier mache globes in the shape of pumpkins with grimacing faces, which are on sale at all good confectioners.

French Fruit Salad.

Remove the skin and seeds from one cupful of white grapes, cut three bananas in cubes and cover immediately with lemon juice. Remove the skin and white from six oranges and cut in small pieces. More "Failures at 40" Than Ever Before

By G. O. REED, Terre Haute, Ind.

What chance of success has a man after he reaches the age of forty?

In the last few months any observant person who has come in contact with the "down-and-outs" has seen more "failures at forty" than ever before. I refer particularly to the men who have been out of employment for months and who were never idle before for more than a week or two in each year.

Those who haven't found it necessary to hunt up another job in order to exist will never know the heartaches resulting from such an experience. It is a hateful predicament to be in even when industrial conditions are at their best.

I have met many men of middle age in the last few months who were out of work through no fault of their own, and who would have been glad to accept even a menial position if it were possible to get one. In this day of hustle employers are calling for the younger men. Youth is a great factor nowadays in the commercial world for turning out a "good day's work," and a man at middle age gets scant attention when applying for a situation, regardless of his ability or experience. The laborer that is worthy of his hire in this generation must be able to produce abundantly. He is merely a "cog in the wheel" of the great industrial system.

I have heard of cases wherein men have made good after forty years of age who before were comparative failures, but they are few, and most of them were prisoners in their respective lines of endeavor.

What chance has a failure at forty?

Vital Importance of Weight Standards

By Chas. Quinn, City Sealer, Buffalo, N. Y.

The question of weights and measures and the problems which the people of the United States have to contend with without their knowledge or perhaps their appreciation is one which is of vital importance. I believe congress should jump into the breach and do the needful in legislating a uniform weight for every known carrier or measure universally used. For instance, a bushel of onions in some states is accredited as weighing about 53 pounds, while in other states the weight is classified as about 59 pounds. The hardship consists in the fact that farmers may ship commodities to one state from another, and where they ship hundreds of bushels of vegetables at a stated weight the consignee has but to pay for the weight estimated by the state in which he resides.

A carload of onions may weigh accurately so much in one state, but when the consignee of another state has to pay for it the weight of the bushel in that jurisdiction may be more or less, as the case may be.

Every known measure should have a uniform weight all over the United States, and a barrel of potatoes should be judged as to have as much weight in New York as in California. But this condition does not exist.

Then, again, all grain hoppers should be tested at stated intervals. Buffalo's port has shipments of grain amounting to 300,000,000 bushels annually, and the weights often vary to an alarming extent because the hopper in Minnesota or elsewhere is out of kilter. Who pays the difference? Why, the poor consumer, of course.

This is a situation that cannot be too forcibly impressed upon congress to afford a remedy.

Temptation Shows Worth of Person

By Rev. Preston Bradley, Pastor of Wilson Avenue People's Church, Chicago.

It is impossible for us to understand the moral development of a man without some knowledge of the temptations that have crossed his path. In analyzing these factors which have entered into the moral success of a man we find that the part his temptations have played is the leading role in his drama of life.

The highest example that we have of the moral life is found in the character of Jesus. His biographers have portrayed the character and scope of his temptations. There was nothing startling or unique in the temptations of Jesus. They came at a time in his life when they were most severe and at a time when he was the weakest. They were real tests of his power. They revealed his humanity. Without temptation in his own life he could have had no sympathetic attitude for humankind.

The man whose life is spent in ease and refinement can never appreciate the position of the man who is having a terrific struggle.

The man whose heart has never been torn by a great grief can never understand the value or depth of his own happiness.

The man whose whole moral nature has not been swept by some mighty surge of a great temptation can never feel the moral security of one who fought and won.

Great and terrific temptations are necessary to strong and powerful lives.

CHARACTER.

It is not what a man gets, but what a man is, that counts. He should think first of character and then of condition. He that has character need have no fear of his condition. Character will improve condition.—Beecher.

BLAMES HIGH MEAT COST FOR PELLAGRA

Says Poor In South Eat an Excess of Fats.

Washington.—The spread of pellagra in the south in the last seven or eight years is largely due to the high cost of fresh meat, which has led the poorer classes to eat too large an amount of carbohydrates and fats. This is the conclusion announced by Edgar Sydenstricker, statistician of the United States health service.

"In the northern states," he says, "the average family was found to consume between 1,000 and 1,100 pounds of protein, while in the southern states the protein consumption averaged between 700 and 800 pounds.

"The southern family consumed nearly a pound a week less of fresh beef, nearly half as much milk, very much less of other meats and hardly any salt beef, as compared with northern families.

"While families in northern states were found to consume larger quantities of butter, families in southern states consumed over 60 per cent more lard and nearly three times as much salt hog products."

The lower wages in the south, even in the mill districts, put the people down there at an economic disadvantage with the west and north, he asserts.

"BOOM IS ON," SAYS PATTERSON

Cash Register Man Advises Merchants to Advertise Now; Spends $200,000 Month for Publicity.

Dayton, Ohio—In the convention of salesmen of the National Cash Register company ,gathered here from all parts of this contiment, reports were made indicating the general improvement of business everywhere. Out of the eight hundred salesmen present, all but one said that his territory was moving fast toward a business boom.

On theb asis of these reports, John H. Patterson, president and general manager of the Cash Register company, predicted that the approaching era of prosperity would probably exceed anything this country has ever known.

As a preface to his remarks, he reviewed, theb usiness depression of the previous two years. This he said, had affected all lines—agriculture, industry, mining, commerce and finance.

"Now," he continued, "the boom is on. Agricultural interests are the first to feel it. The farmers have record-breaking crops, with a big demand. Confidence has been re-established. Various industries have picked up, one after another. Then the stores needed goods, and factory wheels began to move. Then commerce and transportation reflected the change. Finally, it was manifest in the financial world. We have plenty of money and theb est banking system in the world today.

"We have three big federal organizations taking care of these various interests: First, the Interstate Commerce Commission; then came the Federal Trade Commission; and finally, the Federal Reserve Board, with its chain of reserve banks. The value of these three boards or commissions to the country cannot be estimated.

"Through the aid of the reserve banks, the various banking institutions of the country began to loan money where people could not get it before. Now with big crops and big demands with little foreign competition, we are at the commencement of an era of prosperity such as this country has never seen before.

"All this great prosperity cannot come in a day. It will take time. But conditions everywhere are improving The farmers are prosperous. The mills of Pittsburgh are busier than ever before. Railroad stocks are going up. It is only a question of a short time before the wave of prosperity will be upon us.

"Now is the time for storekeepers to advertise," added Mr. Patterson. He is backing up his opinion with his money. His company is spending more than $200,000 this month for advertising. In addition, it has spent $50,000 to have the 800 members of its selling force attend its school at Dayton for three days, where they were taught the new and up-to-date ideas for their business.

SELLS BLOOD TO PAY FOR FORGERY ACTION

New York.—Henry Troller, chauffeur, sold one pint of his blood for $15 at a transfusion operation in the Presbyterian Hospital yesterday in order to pay back part of the proceeds of a check which he was accused of forging last July. No one at the hospital knew he was a fugitive from justice.

Detectives had lost all trace of him. With the $15 in his pocket and his right arm in a sling, he communicated with Miss Tina Seitz, telling her he was sorry she had been forced to pay the check, but that he had earned some money at last and would make a payment. Miss Seitz told the detectives, and in an hour they locked up Troller at Police Headquarters.

FIRST BIG GAME IN MANY YEARS

Dartmouth Ranks With "Big Six" in Gridiron Estimate ---Orange Stands Nearly Equal in Points.

Syracuse.—For the first time in a number of years, Central New York football fans will have an opportunity to see one of the "Big Six" in college football, besides Cornell, Saturday when the Dartmouth eleven oppose Syracuse in the Stadium here

Dartmouth has always been conceded a place among the top-notchers, along with Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Pennsylvania and Cornell. It is the first time in many years that any one of these teams has been seen on a Syracuse gridiron.

In games won and lost thus far this year the two teams stand very nearly equal. Each has played eight games, seven of which resulted in victories. Princeton was the only team to defeat either Dartmouth or Syracuse. In comparative scores Syracuse stands far ahead of the Green Mountain Boys.

Critics consider the Orange slightly superior because of the great victory over Colgate last Saturday. In spite of this, Head Coach Frank J. O'Neill insists upon having his team in tip-top shape for the battle on Saturday.

The Orange was at the height of its career last Saturday and all this week the coaches have been trying to hold the men in condition. Ig this can be accomplished Dartmouth is due for a busy afternoon here. No new formations are to be given the Orange but all attention is being paid to a defense for the Dartmouth formations.

The seat sale for this game has been very nearly as large as that for the Colgate game when 24,000 were in attendance. Alarge section of the stadium is being reserved for Dartmouth men and another for the Cornell alumi and students.

BOWLING SEASON OPENS ON ONYX ALLEYS TONIGHT

Capt. Rear hopes to keep the West side team on top in the standing of the teams throughout the season. His expected average of more than 200 for this sason will assist materially in carrying his team through with a number of wins. Last year Rear averaged 206.

The lineup for tonight will be as follows:

Crescent A. C.—Van Buren, Capt.; Pringle, Blake, Rathbun. Bowers.

West Side—Rear, Capt.; Brown, Dingle, Stearns, Chubb.

No One Ever Published Such An Advertisement As This Before

Conditions have never before warranted such action.

The situation as relating to your Drug Store wants is serious.

What we have to say will benefit every druggist in town, and if you have any doubt as to the correctness of any statement or any price quotation our competitors will "bear us out".

The druggists' profits are less now than ever before. The items which we have advanced in price 100% cost us from 200% to 500% more than ever before. So it is a case where the consumer is not standing the blunt.

Therefore, if you can possibly anticipate any of your drug wants now, for the sake of your pocketbook—stock up!

READ A CLIPPING FROM THE MOHAWK VALLEY'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER;
"The Amsterdam Evening Recorder"

...bonds is still highly problematical, confidence was expressed yesterday ...

"Life isn't one long sweet song for the druggist—not just now anyhow. When a customer comes in and inquires the price of epsom salts, for instance, and finds that it has jumped about 400 per cent. said customer is due for a severe shock, and all because of the European war. The Man About Town talked with Druggist Van Aken today and learned something about the advances in drugs and chemicals that he had not known before. In certain lines of trade that do not loom as large in the public eye as do those which require big importations from foreign countries, the affects of the war have not come so prominently to the attention of the consumer. Southeastern Europe and southern Russia, together with The Levant, may truthfully be called the garden of the world for botanical drugs. Chammomile flowers, celery seed and sage, simple herbs, for instance, come from that section, where they are grown by thrifty housewives who use every available place for planting. While in individual cases, the amount may be small, in the aggregate it constitutes almost the entire supply, which now is shut off by the war, with the result that celery seed, for one thing has gone up from 20 cents to 60 cents per pound.

"In chemical drugs there has been an ever greater advance. Aspirin, for instance, which is one of the most widely used chemicals, has advanced fully 100 per cent Saltpetre, which is used in the manufacture of gunpowder, has jumped 400 per cent. in price, and permanganate of potash, which is much used as a disinfectant, instead of being 15 cents per pound, can not be secured for less than $1.75 for a similar amount. Mercury salts, calomel and corrosive sublimate, have gone up from 65 to 70 cents per pound to $2. Alum, which formerly could be bought for six or seven cents a pound, is now 14 cents at wholesale. Epsom salts has joined the aeroplane company with an advance of 400 per cent., while Rochelle salts have doubled in price. Neo Salvarsan has risen from $6 to $25 per pound, and is difficult to obtain. Cod liver oil, one would think, must come from flying fish, for it has gone up 400 per cent., and the reason advanced is that the Germans are extracting therefrom the glycerine for use in explosives, while the butter fat is eliminated from the residue and converted into 'butter.' There has been a great advance in chloride of lime and boracic acid, and carbolic acid has risen from 30 cents to $3 per pound."

Pretty poor advertising you say. Money wasted—maybe so. However, we are willing to spend money for the good will of Fulton folks, and we have an idea that just this sort of advertising you have been reading for two months past will have something to do with your opinion of the Kline-Wood Store. It is but a part of the KLINEWOOD WAY.

ADVERTISING is a force for higher honesty; for when men found that goods would sell by advertising their merit, they began to put more merit into the goods in order to advertise their merit.

The little daily newspaper that has made as rapid strides in the subscription and advertising departments as any one of its age in the country. IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Frank Glick, captain and quarterback of the Princeton football team, is a senior in the university. He is playing his fourth year of football at Princeton, one on his freshman class eleven and three as a varsity man. Before entering college he had played for four years on the team of the Central high school at Pittsburgh. Until this year at Princeton he has usually started the season at halfback, only eventually to be transferred to quarterback. Most Princeton men credit Glick with the remarkable awakening of the Tigers in the fourth quarter of the Yale game last year. Immediately upon his entrance into the struggle at quarterback the Princeton eleven displayed a power of attack that scored two touchdowns in the last eight minutes of play.

De Palma's Hard Luck.

Barring accidents, Ralph De Palma, the crack automobile driver, has never failed to finish well to the front in any race he has entered, and he has won many first prizes. His most unfortunate experience was in the 500 mile race at Indianapolis in 1912. With only a little more than a lap to go and while eleven miles ahead of his nearest competitor, the connecting rod broke and punched a hole in the crank case. De Palma and his mechanic, seeing that the engine was out of commission, tried vainly to push the heavy car around the two mile track, but found the progress was too slow to enable them to finish ahead of the others, and he had to watch the prize of $40,000, which seemed almost within his grasp, go to another. "It is all in the game, and I have no kick coming," was his sole comment.

Hint For Golfers.

Four times out of five overswinging is not caused by allowing the arms to go too far around, but by letting the wrists (especially the right one) buckle at the top of the swing and so drop the club head six inches or so down one's back. In the effort to lift it up again the club head is generally thrown out of its original orbit, and a poor shot results. To counteract overswinging be sure the left elbow is practically straight at the top of the swing and that the knuckles of the right hand are on a level with or even higher than those of the left hand.

The Season's Leading Jockey.

According to people who know, Tommy McTaggart, who rides for the Whitney stables, is the season's best jockey. He has all the qualifications that go to make up a first class jockey, and he puts these qualifications into play. Therefore he is unexcelled in his calling. Tommy McTaggart is twenty-six years of age and has been riding nearly seven years. With good luck he expects to ride for seven more. He was born in New York city, became fascinated with racing when he was a youngster, became an exerciser and eventually a jockey.

New York Horse Show.

As a public object lesson in the utility of the thoroughbred horse off the race track the National Horse Show association has this year opened several competitions exclusively for the thoroughbred saddle horses, thoroughbred hunters, thoroughbred polo ponies, etc., and is so arranging its program for the annual exhibition at Madison Square Garden, New York city, Nov. 6-13, that all these classes may be judged on the same day, which will be officially designated as "Thoroughbred day."

Boxer Mellody Loses Eye.

Billy ("Honey") Mellody, the former champion welterweight of the world, one of the gamest boxers that ever donned a glove, recently submitted to an operation for the removal of his left eye at the Massachusetts Charitable Ear and Eye infirmary.

"Honey" lost the sight of the left eye, due to a blow that ruptured the capsule of the lens.

SCIENCE—INVENTION.

Agitator For Paint Barrels.

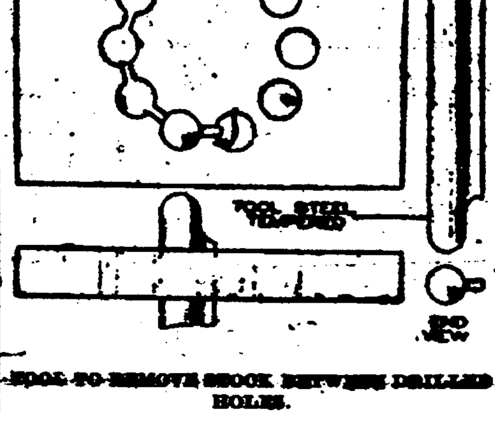
A patent has been awarded in this country for an agitator for barrels, a device which it is claimed will be of great value to the various industries which use mixed paints or other coatings. The device is placed in the barrel at the paint factory before it is filled. It consists of a shaft connecting both ends of the barrel, and on it are fastened two stirring blades, one at each end, with a steel wire brush affixed halfway between the two. When the paint or other covering material is to be withdrawn the barrel is put in a horizontal position and tapped at the head. At the other end a small crank is fastened to the shaft. When the crank is turned the steel brush passes through and dislodges the heavier pigment at the lower center of the barrel and scatters it throughout the mixture. When the center pigment is disturbed the remainder of the pigment flows toward that part of the barrel and comes under the action of the brush. In addition to eliminating waste, the inventor claims that the device will produce an even consistency of the material.

A Chance For Inventors.

It has probably occurred to every one who is forced to rely on protective coatings of one sort or another to keep iron and steel from rust and decay that this method of combating the corrosion problem is of the same order as locking the barn door after the horse is stolen. In other words, since rusting is a consequence of the tendency of iron to go into solution when in contact with water, why not add something to it or treat it in some way so as to eliminate or decrease this tendency? An enormous amount of labor and material, to say nothing of time, is used up every year in coating and protecting iron from adverse conditions, and with the rapid increase in the demand for this metal a correspondingly greater amount of labor, material and time is required. Obviously any procedure which would lessen the need for such thorough protection would be a very real saving.—Engineering Magazine.

Tool For Use In Die Making.

In making a die it is often necessary to remove a part of the metal by drilling holes close together on the line of separation, then chiseling out the metal between the holes, says Popular Mechanics.



TOOL TO REMOVE STOCK BETWEEN DRILLED HOLES.

The tool illustrated is quite convenient for removing this metal. It is made of tool steel with the body a sliding fit in the holes drilled; then a side gutter is formed to extend into the next hole, with a cutting edge on one end. It is only necessary to drive the tool through the holes.

Cultivating Timber.

The aim of scientific forestry is to bring the forest up to its highest state of productiveness and keep it there. In the United States, where forestry is not practiced except on government and state lands, and there only during the last few years, the estimated annual production is twelve cubic feet per acre. In Saxony, where forestry has been practiced for many years, the annual production is ninety-three cubic feet per acre. If our final forest area of 450,000,000 acres is made to yield an average of fifty cubic feet per acre, as can be done by the practice of scientific methods, there would be enough wood for a per capita consumption of 150 cubic feet by 150,000,000 people.—Engineering Magazine.

Softening Rust.

A simple method for removing rust consists in dipping the article first into a strong hot potash bath for about half an hour and then immersing in a cold muriatic acid pickling solution composed of two parts of water to one of acid. This removes the rust in a few minutes, leaving the metal apparently attacked but very little. The previous soaking in the strong hot potash solution is responsible for this rapid pickling, as a test proved, for without the previous dipping sixty-five minutes were required by the acid bath against four minutes when previously treated in the potash bath. Apparently a chemical reaction is set up, changing the character of the rust, softening it and making it readily soluble.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Lubrication of Engines.

Don't get the idea that any kind of oil or grease will do for your engine. No matter if you are lubricating a tractor, a stationary engine or a fine touring car, you will find that the best oil is the cheapest in the long run. And for the differential and transmission gears the best grease is none too good. Graphite grease is particularly good for gears, as it prevents wear to some extent. A scant teaspoonful of graphite powder put into a quart of oil and poured into the crank case occasionally is a fine thing for an old motor, as it improves the compression.

The Pawned Watch

By EUNICE BLAKE

One morning a man entered a pawnshop in the town of Hurdsville and offered a good watch as security for a loan. The broker examined the watch, then looked up at the man who had brought it in. The latter, though fairly well dressed, had a troubled look in his eye.

"Whose initials are these?" asked the broker, referring to some letters engraved on the case.

"Oh, if you're going to hunt up my ancestors it'll take too much time," replied the man, and he reached for the watch. The broker surrendered it, and the man departed.

Now, it happened that the broker was in touch with the police and was giving them information as to suspected stolen goods offered at his shop. He telephoned the incident, describing the man, and a detective was put on his track.

Let us go back three years.

Hiram Jenks, a bachelor with no relatives, one day called his clerk, Thomas Wentworth, into his private office and said:

"Tom, I have something important to say to you. When I first went into business I associated with me a man named Perkins. He speculated with funds belonging to the firm and sank money for me as well as himself. After a quarrel I put him out of the firm, and when we parted, giving me the ugliest look I ever received from a man, he said that he would get even with me some day. Since that day I have at times been fearful that he would keep his word. I suppose it is weak and foolish in me to brood over it, but I can't help it. At any rate, I wish to make provision in case anything happens. You will find a will in the safe leaving what little I have to you, and you can run this business just as I am running it now."

Jenks and Wentworth lived in rooms over the store. One morning the latter arose to find his employer murdered in his bed. Whatever valuables were in the room had been taken, leaving the impression that the murder had been committed for plunder. No clew to the murderer could be found, and when Wentworth presented a will in his favor for probate a suspicion was aroused that he had murdered the testator, who was still a young and healthy man, that he might enjoy the bequest in reality instead of in prospect. Up to this time no evidence whatever pointed to Wentworth, but now the police, who had been blamed for not hunting up the murderer, began to pick up threads and in time concocted a scheme to fix the murder upon him. It is astonishing how by constant digging and putting this and that together an apparently good case may be made against any accused person. Although this evidence against Wentworth rested on the flimsiest foundation, it was enough to set tongues wagging, and when the structure seemed to the state attorney to be complete the young man was arrested.

Wentworth was taken all aback at the accusation. He was incapable of doing anything to work up a case in his favor, but he had a sweetheart who, after the first shock, being satisfied of his innocence, went to work diligently for evidence to prove his innocence. Tom told her what his employer had said to him when at the time he informed him that he had made him his heir and his fears that the man who had asserted he would get even with him some day would make his words good. She began first to learn something about Perkins from the time he and his partner had separated. She finally located him one year after his threat and by dint of following up different leads kept on his track to a short time after the murder.

When the case came to trial the prosecution brought forth the evidence that had been adduced by the energetic police—he was relying on the political influences of the force in a coming election—bringing forth testimony of neighbors to prove that no one entered or came out of the store between 10 p. m. and 7 a. m., that a voice believed to be Jenks' had been heard to cry, "You ungrateful villain!" and that Wentworth had been seen a few days before the murder to steal into the house with a bludgeon.

The defense took no trouble to refute any of these charges. The sweetheart of the accused, Miss Marian Thorndyke, was the only important witness on the other side, and her testimony was elicited, as usual, by questions of counsel. He led her to state how she had hunted for Perkins, how she had finally got on his track and how she had located him not a week before the trial. Then he produced a gold watch bearing the initials "H. T. J.," and he proved by those who had seen it in Jenks' possession that it had belonged to him.

This evidence having been introduced, counsel proceeded to show how Miss Thorndyke had located Perkins and was watching him when he tried to pawn the watch. The notification to the police by the pawnbroker had been communicated to her, and Perkins had been arrested. At this point the attorney rested his case, and the jury acquitted the prisoner without leaving their seats.

At the trial of Perkins for the murder of Jenks, Wentworth, being now free, was a competent witness and told the story Jenks had told him of the quarrel between the partners and Perkins' threat. This, taken with his trying to pawn the watch, was sufficient evidence to convict him.

FOR THE TEA TABLE.

Nothing is better with the cup of afternoon tea perhaps than a slice of crisp buttered toast. But now and then a sweet cake is relished as a change. Moreover, it is far easier to prepare tea and cakes than tea and toast, for the cakes can be made ahead of time and kept in one of the pretty cake boxes specially made for tea table use. Some of them are tin boxes covered with chintz or cretonne; some of them are tin boxes painted or enameled daintily.

Here are recipes for some delicious cakes and cookies, all of which can be kept on hand for many days without losing their freshness:

Marguerites.—Cut a sheet of sponge cake into small rounds with cooky cutter and dip in melted sweet chocolate. While still moist form a daisy on the top of each, using blanched almonds for petals and round yellow bonbons for the centers.

Ginger Nuts.—One and three-quarters pounds of sirup, one pound of moist sugar, one pound of butter, two and three-quarters pounds of flour, one and one-half ounces of ground ginger, one and one-half ounces of allspice, one and one-half ounces of coriander seed, sal volatile size of a bean, a little cayenne, flour enough to roll out, but not thin. Cut with a wineglass or roll between your hands into small balls and pinch.

Citron Heart Cakes.—Beat half a pound of butter to a cream, take six eggs, beat the whites to a froth and the yolks with half a pound of sugar and rather more than half a pound of sifted flour; beat these well together, add a wineglass of brandy and quarter of a pound of citron cut in thin slips; bake it in small heart shaped tins or a square tin pan rubbed over with a bit of sponge dipped in melted butter; put the mixture in half an inch deep; bake fifteen or twenty minutes in a quick oven.

Nut Wafers.—One cupful fine brown sugar, one tablespoonful butter, mixed together; add one beaten egg and one and one-half tablespoonfuls flour, heaping; one cupful chopped English walnuts. Drop with a teaspoon on well buttered tin sheets. Bake in hot oven. Cool slightly before removing from the tin.

Oatmeal Cookies.—Four cupfuls rolled oats, two cupfuls wheat flour, two cupfuls brown sugar, one cupful butter, [illegible] cupful water or milk, [illegible] quite thin and [illegible]

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

The Straws That Walk.

In one of those moments when the baby of the family demands something extraordinary to amuse him show him "the straws that walk." Bend two pieces of broom straw that are about an inch in length so that each forms an inverted V with sides of equal length. Set them astride a long straw four or five inches apart and, holding an end of the straw in each hand, rest the "feet" of the short straws on a bare table or any other flat, smooth surface, with their points toward each other at an angle of forty-five degrees. By slightly moving the long straw you can make the two small pieces move rapidly toward each other. Meeting midway, with points touching, they will often stand braced together so firmly that you can remove the long straw. If, instead, you dislodge them by a slight jar, one will pass under the other, and each will continue its way unhindered.—Youth's Companion.

Boy Scouts Growing.

The quarterly report of the chief scout executive, James E. West, states:

From June 1 to Oct. 1 29,373 boys were registered as compared with 17,800 for the same period of the preceding year. 1,521 men were commissioned as scout masters as compared with 700 and 1,502 as assistant scout masters as compared with 634.

Various badges, numbering 30,921, were issued as compared with 20,108. This, together with a substantial increase in cash receipts in all departments, tells the story of the development of scouting during the past four months.

There are today in good standing, according to our records, 143,084 scouts as compared with 93,973 at this time last year, 6,549 scout masters, 5,822 assistant scout masters and 389 local councils.

The Two Frogs.

The frogs were neighbors. The one inhabited a deep pond, far removed from public view; the other lived in a gully containing a little water and traversed by a country road. He that lived in the pond warned his friend and entreated him to change his residence and to come and live with him, saying that he would enjoy greater safety from danger and more abundant food. The other refused, saying that he felt it so very hard to remove from a place to which he had become accustomed. A few days afterward a heavy wagon passed through the gully and crushed him to death under its wheels.

A willful man will have his way to his own hurt.—Aesop's Fables.

A Friendly Bird.

An English lady residing in the country has a pet blackbird. Last summer the bird's cage was placed in the open window, and a wild blackbird flew down to it, looking through for a minute or two at the prisoner and then flying away. A minute afterward the visitor returned bearing a worm in its beak. This act of friendship was repeated again and again until the caged blackbird and his mistress had to leave. The two birds had been separated for eight months, but recently the lady returned to the country and had not hung the cage up half an hour before the same wild blackbird was seen flying down to his old friend.

Telling the Time.

First, tell one of your friends the trick, as two are needed to perform it. Then one of the performers goes away, with her back turned. Then, addressing your audience, tell them that the person just gone away can tell them the time that they chose from 1 to 6. If they say 4, do this: Tell the person who has gone out to come in. Then say, "Girls and boys, this girl can tell the time." To the girl say, "Dare you tell the time?" Of course she will say 4 o'clock.

This is how it is done:

Let A equal 1 o'clock; B, 2 o'clock, etc. Begin a sentence with A if it is 1 o'clock, but the sentence must be said to the girl.

Frog in the Middle.

To play this game one player is chosen for the frog and sits in the center on the floor in tailor fashion. The other players stand in a circle around the frog, repeating, "Frog in the sea, can't catch me." They dance forward toward the frog and back, tantalizing him and taking risks in going near him. The object of the game is for the frog to tag any one of them, whereupon the latter changes places with the frog. The frog may not at any time leave his sitting position unless released by tagging another player.

The Magical Key.

Dear boys, have you heard of the wonderful key
Which unlocks the ears of the people you see,
So they quickly will hear what it is you would say
And always reply in a courteous way?
It's a very small key, and quite easy to use,
And yours without money or cost, if you choose.
Yet unless it is used people often won't hear
Your requests or to misunderstand will appear,
Though you shout them out loud and will sometimes reply
Rather harshly, though you can't imagine just why.
But just first use the key and attentive they'll be,
It will unlock their ears in a jiffy, you'll see,
So they'll hear what you're asking and hear it with ease,
And the key, little boys, is the little word "please."
Yes, the little word "please" is this wonderful key.

BECOMING FROCK OF UNASSUMING DESIGN.

Simple yet attractive frock of blue gabardine trimmed with embroidered silk revers. The skirt, which is attached to the waist under a narrow belt, is a three piece model.

There will always be women who love severely simple frocks, yet who wish crowded into these models the maximum of chic. This one-piece costume in blue gabardine is effective because of its simplicity. The revers of blue silk are embroidered with blue, gold and black silk, adding the only note of luxury to the frock. In medium size it requires to make 3¾ yards 54-inch gabardine, with ¾ yard blue silk for the revers and collars. The front and revers are cut in one, so that the silk will have to be applied as a facing.

After the gabardine is carefully folded the back gore is first placed into position, followed by the shield. Only the back gore, however, rests upon the fold of the material. The cuff, opposite the back gore; the front gore, which is placed to the right of the cuff, and the shield, to the right of the back gore, are all laid on a lengthwise thread of the gabardine.

The remaining sections to be laid on the lengthwise fold are the collars, back, strap and belt. The sleeves, front and rever are placed on a lengthwise thread. If a round neck-line is preferred to the high collar on the shield, cut out on small "o" perforations.

The single and double "o" perforations indicate the shorter lengths of the skirt.

Although gabardine is extensively used for one-piece frocks, broadcloths are in again and with a softer surface than of old. Whipcord, velours de laine and gloveskin cloth are also in good favor with makers of smart frocks.

A new weave like hop sacking is intended to take the place of gabardine.

The French Revolution has certainly suggested many modes—the Merveilleuse, the Directoire, the Robespierre and the Incroyable have set their impress on the styles of today, but others blend with them.

FLOUNCES LEND FROCKS INDIVIDUALITY.

A frock for youth figures effectively carried out in soft silk crepe de Chine, the skirt having a deep satin flounce.

Fashionable designers are indeed resourceful, and they impress into service any feature that will add to the individuality of a frock. The flounce is used to gain the soft folds and graceful lines that are so much to be desired this season. The dress shown here is made of soft cream white silk crepe, the skirt having a deep flounce of soft satin, above which is an embroidery design worked with beads. Rows of shirring are used to fit the waist into the figure, the sleeves are short puffs and the V-shaped neck is finished with a simple ruffle of crepe. In average size the dress requires 3 yards 44-inch crepe, 3 yards 36-inch satin for the flounce and 1 yard 27-inch lining for the underbody.

To make the underbody plait the front and back, bringing "T" to corresponding small "o" perforations. For the open neck, face the center-front of the underbody to triple "ooo" perforations. Close seams as notched and turn hem in back at notches. Adjust the belting 2 inches wide underneath lower edge of underbody.

For the outer front and back close the seams as notched and turn hem in back at notches, the large "O" perforations indicating the center-back. Gather along the shoulder seam and at lower edge between double "TT" perforations, also 1½ inch above lower edge and 1½ inch below shoulder seam in front. Arrange on underbody, center-fronts, center-backs and under-arm seams even; stitch shoulder edges together, drawing gathers to fit. Stitch gathers at lower edge to position, lower edges even.

For the short puff sleeve, close seam as notched and gather on crossline of small "o" perforations; draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape under gathers. Sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing any fulness.

Next, close the back seam of the skirt from large "O" perforation to lower edge. Gather on crosslines of small "o" perforations, adjust foundation yoke under gathers, center-fronts, center-backs and upper edges even, and bring single large "O" perforation and double small "oo" perforations to corresponding perforations in foundation yoke. Join flounce sections as notched; sew to lower edge of upper skirt section, notches, center-fronts and center-back even. Adjust skirt, stitching upper edge over lower row of gathers in waist, center-fronts and center-backs even.

Bead is so fashionable that a band of this trimming could be added to the bottom of the flounce, if desired.

INTERESTING DESSERTS.

BROWN BETTY.—Put a layer of sweetened apple sauce or chopped apples, sugared, in a buttered dish; add a few lumps of butter, then a layer of bread or cracker crumbs, sprinkled with a little cinnamon, then a layer of sauce, etc., making the last layer of crumbs; bake in oven and eat hot with cold cream.

Tapioca Cream.—In a double boiler cook a pint of milk and a heaping tablespoonful of granulated tapioca until the latter is clear. Add four tablespoonfuls of sugar and the yolk of an egg well beaten. Cook till it coats the spoon. Remove from the fire, add a teaspoonful of vanilla and half as much lemon and the stiffly beaten white of the egg. Beat it into the custard, pour into glasses for serving and set aside to become cold.

English Drop Cakes.—Cream a cupful butter, then add successively a cupful sugar, an egg, one-half teaspoonful soda dissolved in one-half cupful of sour cream, one-half cupful raisins (seeded and chopped), one-half cupful of almonds (chopped finely), one-half teaspoonful vanilla and two and one-half cupfuls of flour. Drop by spoonfuls one inch apart on a buttered sheet in a moderate oven.

Mock Cherry Pie.—Two cupfuls chopped cranberries, a cupful chopped raisins, two cupfuls sugar, a tablespoonful flour, one-half cupful cold water, two teaspoonfuls vanilla. Mix well and bake between two crusts.

This pie was such a favorite with one family last year that the home cook prepared large quantities of this filling, cooked it and sealed it in a stone jar. This will save time and labor as well as the trouble and expense of buying cranberries in small quantities. Best of all, mock cherry pie can be had on short notice.

Apple Junket.—Make the junket as usual. Peel and core three apples, cook them with a little water until they are smooth and without lumps, sweeten to taste and add a little lemon juice and grated rind. Beat up the whites of two eggs until they are stiff; then gradually beat in two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar. When the apple puree is cold mix the two together and beat until thoroughly blended. When the junket is quite firm spread the apple meringue over it and garnish with a few preserved cherries.

A Peculiarity of Husbands.

Whoever said all men may not be alike, but all husbands are, knew a good deal about husbands. Horatio is a husband—mine. One of his peculiarities is to ask me if I do anything a little unusual, what on earth I did it for, in a tone I have noticed in other husbands, and when he uses that tone I never tell him. A woman doesn't always know why she does things, does not always have time to think in advance. She only knows she must do them and thinks afterward.—Kate Langley Bosher in Harper's Magazine.

A "Coulee."

The term "coulee" is generally applied throughout the northern tier of states to any steep sided gulch or water channel and at times even to a stream valley of considerable length. The term was doubtless derived from the French verb couler, meaning to flow. This use of "coulee" should not be confused with the geologic use of the word, which signifies a solidified stream or sheet of lava.—Northern Pacific Guidebook, United States Geological Survey.

Dumbbell Drill by a Little New York Girl.

© by American Press Association.

The little girl in the picture lives on the east side of New York city, where also live many thousands more like her. She, in company with a large class, is going through the dumbbell drill at one of the playgrounds provided for their amusement and instruction. The little girls and boys are taught folk dances and athletic exercises by competent instructors, and many of them become very proficient. The drills and exercises are usually done to the accompaniment of music, and the little folks enjoy them hugely. When the children get tired of an exercise they change to others and either skip in rings, dance the folk dances or the hesitation.

Rebuked by a Donkey.

John and James were tramping through a dusty lane one day when they spied a little toad in the road.

"Look, look!" exclaimed John. "Here is a toad. Let's stone him."

"Why?" asked James. "He isn't hurting you, is he?"

"No; but it would be fun to see him jump. Come on, see if you can aim straight."

James felt that it would be wrong to hurt the innocent thing, but John had often called him "baby" and "coward," so to avoid a repetition of these remarks he took up a stone and was about to throw it when a donkey cart came up the lane. The cart was well laden, and the donkey's burden was heavy, but the donkey trudged on, his head down, and thus it happened that the animal spied the toad almost under his foot. He stopped short and kept his foot up until the toad hopped safely out of his way. Then the donkey moved on with his load.

James dropped the stone without attempting to aim.

"Rebuked," he cried, "rebuked by a donkey! I say, John, that donkey has more horse sense than you and I."

"Yes," answered John, blushing for shame, "that donkey has taught us a lesson in kindness to dumb creatures."

Hul Gul.

A very good game to play is hul gul. The players are supplied with an equal amount of beans. The leader takes a certain amount in his or her hand and says: "Hul gul, hand full. How many?" Each player guesses how many beans the leader holds in his fist. If the player guesses more than is in the hand he must give the difference; if less, the leader must give him the difference. At the end of fifteen minutes the game is finished. The beans are counted, and the player who has the lesser number of beans is the loser and pays a forfeit to the leader. The person having the most beans is the leader for the next game.

EUROPEAN WAR SHOWS NEED OF VOCATIONAL TRAINING

"Make America the most efficient workshop, raise the level of industrial intelligence among our workers and we shall be best prepared not only to effectively build artillery and operate guns, if the need comes upon us but we will also become so powerful industrially and economically that any nation will think twice before attacking us," says Alvin E. Dodd, Secretary of the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, which will hold its annual convention in Minneapolis, January 20, 21, 22, 1916.

The European conflict has proved that it is not numbers that count most, nor courage, nor patriotism, nor armament, but the industrial, economic and social organization of the country. If we are to organize the nation industrially, as Thomas Edison advocated recently, we must begin to stop the wastage of young men turned out into the world with practically no equipment to earn a livelihood. "We have not been doing this to the degree we should" said Secretary of Commerce Redfield, who is the President of the National Society," "and this presents a weakness which may well alter our place in the industrial and commercial world."

To deal with this condition, the National Society has been conducting for the past seven months an industrial survey of the city of Minneapolis, for the purpose of determining to what extent the worker in Minneapolis can progress in his job; to what extent the city's industries may give special training which they do not now provide; to what extent the schools can be a factor in providing the needed training.

What the survey found out will be the basis for an important part of the discussions at the convention which will bring to focus on the Minneapolis problems the widest possible cooperative judgment and advice in determining what forms of vocational education will be best suited to its needs.

Dr. F. E. Spaulding, Supt. of Schools, in Minneapolis, who is largely responsible for having the National Society go to Minneapolis for its survey and convention, says, "Out of the findings and recommendations which will come as a result of this survey. Minneapolis expects to develop a program of practical education which it will take several years to completely work out but which should place the city in the forefront in the vocational preparation of its workers."

A number of speakers of National prominence will take part in the program which will be attended by business men, representatives of chambers of commerce, educators, school board members, trade unionists, as well as some of the prominent philanthropists of the country. Some of the topics to be discussed are:

"Problems of Industrial Education Under Public Administration."

"Industrial Education Experiments in New York City."

"Trade Education for those in the Mining Industry."

"Trade Training for Girls and Women".

"Possibilities and accomplishments in Trade Agreements for Industrial Education."

"The Department Store as a Training School."

"Trade Unionism and Vocational Education."

"How to Study a Community for Purposes of Vocational Education."

BUFFALO TO SHARE IN NATIONAL SHOW DISPLAY

Buffalo—Plans for Buffalo's part in the Electrical Prosperity Week, which is to be celebrated nationally, November 29th to December 4th, are progressing rapidly. The committee of Jovian Club members, boosting the celebration in this city, has already secured the support of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations, which promise to do everything possible to make the celebration a big success.

The members of the Jocian Club are making an active campaign to arouse greatest interest in the celebration. Electric signs, announcements in show windows, decorated buildings and other features are being prepared to herald the coming of Electrical Prosperity Week.

The object of the celebration is to bring to the people of the country, a greater realization of the advantages of electricity and of the immense strides made in this science in recent years While everyone realizes and admits what a great and powerful force electricity is, few are familiar with its immense possibilities as a business factor, outside of general vague ideas gained from hearsay.

JEFFERSON CO. TURKEYS CHEAPER THIS YEAR

Adams.—Turkeys appear to be plentiful in this section this year and the price around 16 and 17 cents a pound is a cent or two lower than last year at this time. Seth Whipple, who annually ships out a large number of the birds, says that this year he will not ship as many to New York and Boston as in former years, but will ship a large number nearer home, to Watertown and Syracuse. His total shipment for Thanksgiving, however, will not be as large as last year.

Chickens are in great demand this year, according to Mr Whipple, who will ship out about a ton and a half for Thanksgiving.

Ducks are slightly lower in price than last year and many will be shipped out of here. Several others raise turkeys for sale among the farmers near here and the total shipment of turkeys and fowls for Thanksgiving will undoubtedly be large.

AIR BRAKE CO. TO BUILD ANOTHER PLANT

Watertown.—It became known this afternoon that the New York Air Brake company has completed plans for the erection of a new building of large dimensions adjoining the plant of the New York Engine company, where the brass cartridge cases for shrapnel are pressed out.

This building will be a machine shop in which many large presses and machines used in making shrapnel, will be installed, there not being room in the present plant. These machines have already been ordered so that they will be ready to install as soon as the plant is completed for them.

Human Mortality.

Taking the average for the world around, fewer than half of the babies born live to be fifty years of age.

FULTON IN LINE OF 300-MILE AUTO RACE

Utica.—Miss Nina Fitch of Lowville will have a competitor for the proposed 300-mile auto race Thanksgiving day, if the state highway department gives permission for the use of the roads in the northern section of the state. The Beatty Motor Car company of this city has accepted the challenge made by the McCluney Automobile company of Utica for Miss Fitch.

There is little doubt that the race will be ararnged, and H. A. Babcock of Lowville, who conferred yesterday with Frank Wenzel, head of the Albany bureau of the State Automobile Association, feels that permission for the use of the roads will be granted by the state. A sideb et of $1,000 is being arranged by thec ompanies, whose cars will complete, and as both women drivers have an enviable record a fast race through the north country is expected.

The proposed route is from Utica, to Alexandria Bay, through Watertown, and back through Watertown to Oswego, Syracuse and Utica. Miss Gertrude Stanton of Riverside Drive, New York, has accepted the proposition to drive a Chandler car for the Beatty company, while Miss Fitch will probably drive a Studebaker Six.

A COMEDY TREAT COMES TO QUIRK ON SATURDAY

The popular taste of amusement goers is running towards comedy, that is why all the big successes on the metropolitan stage are farce and musical comedy. "Peck's Bad Boy" which will be the offering at the Quirk Saturday matinee and night, is nothing but a big fun show. It is a farce in two acts with music, which has scored a big hit, and which make the most enjoyable evening's entertainment. The new book and lyrics are from the pen of Irving Berlin, composer of such wonderful songs as "My Bird or Paradise," and others. There are sixteen song hits in the show and a special scenic production is carried. Seats on sale at Box office now. Prices, matinee, balcony 10c; main floor, 20c. Evening, gallery, 10c; balcony, 20c; main floor, 30c.

D. A. R. WOULD HONOR MEMORY OF MRS. WILSON

Baltimore. — Thomas Jefferson Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution ,adopted measures today to take an active part in the nation wide movement for a fitting memorial to Mrs. Ellen Wilson, deceased wife of the President. It will be known as the Ellen Wilson Memorial and will be devoted to the work that interested Mrs. Wilson—the education of Southern mountaineers and relief of the inhabitants of slums of cities.

PAPER CO. CASE HOLDS OVER UNTIL TUESDAY

Syracuse. — Because Sanford W. Smith and Edward J. Mone, deputies from the office of the attorney-general appearing for the state in the claim of the Battle Island Paper company for damages amounting to $1,875,000, were obliged to appear in a case before the Court of Appeals at Albany, the hearing here has been adjourned until next Tuesday norning.

The chief witness yesterday was J. C. Murray ,former superintendent of the paper company, who continued his testimony from the day before.

His evidence largely was relative to the amount of power used in the sulphite mill, for which the company seeks $500,000 for consequential damages. Long documents and lists of figures were offered in evidence in regard to the power at the mill, whicl was said to average about 512 horsepower a day.

The testimony was regarded as important by the attorneys of the company in that the state previously had claimed the amount of power varied with the rise and fall of the Oswego river due to natural conditions. The witness said he was an expert at judging power.

The question of the power of the mill is on e of the arguments in the case, and the attorneys disagree on this point. Counsel for the state asserts the plant was fully developed and claims the damages sought are excessive .

The attorneys for the company allege the plant was not fully developed and that with the addition of more wheels a power of 1,000 horse could have been developed.

The question of steam power for the mill also was gone into yesterday before adqournment was taken.

8000 ATTEND GREAT EDUCATOR'S FUNERAL

Tuskegee, Ala.—Simplicity marked the funeral of Booker T. Washington, negro educator, race leader and author, which took place yesterday at Tuskegee Institute. Eight thousand persons came to Tuskegee to pay the last tribute of respect to Dr. Washington, only 2,500 of whom could get into the chapel.

Public Spirited Citizens to Take First Step Toward Securing Quarters for Boys' Club. Public Meeting Called for Monday Afternoon. Professional and Business Men Join Mayor-Elect in Pushing the Project

A meeting of the citizens who are interested in forming a boys' club in this city has ben arranged to take place in the City Hall Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. It can be definitely stated that a club will be formed as a self-appointed committee of men interested in the movement have already secured pledges of over $200, and in addition hav ethe promises of a number of business men to lend added support to the plan.

While the quarters for housing the club have not been looked into, it is likely that at Monday's meeting a committee will be appointed to interview the owners of available sites.

Superintendent Benedict of the Communal Home, Syracuse, a professional social worker has notified The Times that he will gladly lend his cooperation in organizing the club along the lines advocated by the best social workers of the country and will gladly come here and give his aid if desired. Mr. Benedict was engaged to assume charge of the Communal Home, an institution similar to the one planned for this city, when it was seen that "amateur social workers" were not sufficiently competent. Prior to his appointment at Syracuse, Mr. Benedict held a position of high standing in Pittsburgh and due to the work which he had done in that city, was recommended to the Syracuse institution.

District Superintendent Gardner, on behalf of the school authorities, is heartily in favor of the project and he has stated that he will urge the support of the local Board of Education in the movement.

Among those who are taking an active interest in promoting the club are Chief of Police Dyer, Judge Wilson, Supt. Gardner, Attorney Floyd S. Sprague, Mr. William H. Spanswick and Mayor-elect Lewis. Several of the men have been instrumental in forming similar organizations and they have outlined tentative planc for the new institution which will be discussed at the first meeting.

It is not intended that the Boys club shall be a reform institution with an enforcement of strict disciplinary methods but a meeting place where the boys can play and at the same time be taught if they desire, things which will be of benefit to them in later life.

The first arrangements will undoubtedly include a gymnasium. The gymnasium equipment has already been promised to the club. Sloyd work and other handicrafts will be introduced and the boys who are interested in drawing will be given instruction in regularly formed classes. It is planned to have lectures once a week. Prominent speakers talking part.

To divide the boys into classes, which is necessary, a building containing three or four small rooms and one large room will be needed. The Foster Theatre block has been suggested as being the best suited of all the vacant places available and if possible an effort will be made to secure the theatre and several of the side rooms, if only for temporary use.

No formal notification will be sent out in connection with the meeting on Monday afternoon and any person interested in the movement is invited to be present at the meeting.

Hillstorm Shot to Death by Riflemen

Salt Lake City.—Joseph Hillstrom, the I. W. W. poet, convicted of the murder of J. Morrison and the latter's son, Arling, was shot to death at 7:41 a. m. after efforts by President Wilson to secure a reprieve for thec ondemned man had failed and after the State Board of Pardons had decided that eleventh-hour evidence which had come to light was insufficient ground for a reprieve.

Hillstrom went to his death before four expert riflemen in a state of almost complete collapse. He staggered to the chair in which he was to receive the volley of his executioneers and his head dropped as he was strapped in. At Hillstrom's request, however, he was not blindfolded.

Joseph Hillstrom was the nineteenth person to meet the death penalty in Utah and the fifteenth to choose shooting instead of hanging. Of the four who chose hanging two were Indians. The third declared he wanted to be hanged "to give the State as much trouble as was possible." The first two executions in Utah were those of two Indians hanged in 1855. The first man to be legally shot was William Cockroft in 1861. Awoman has never been convicted of murder in Utah.

The death squad is hidden from the victim and each of the riflemen receives as his pay $40 in gold.

Four of the rifles are loaded with ball cartridges and the fifth contains a blank cartridge so that each executioner may believe that he had nothing to do with the condemned man's death.

NATIONAL DEFENCE DAY TO BE CELEBRATED HERE; PLANS BEING WORKED OUT

Interest is being aroused in this city by the announcement which comes from the National Defence League, asking that the Chamber of Commerce cooperate with the mayor in observing December 6 as "National Defence Day."

Mayor Fox has the projected celebration under consideration and he will in a few days make known his appointments of a committee of citizens to carry out a form of program.

It is likely that thel ocal Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, and other patriotic societies will take an active part in whatever celebration is held. The Daughters in many cities of the country are intensely interested in the new movement for national defence which has been launched by the women of Washington, D. C. The movements which has been launched by the members of the woman's section of the Navy League, is the formation of a nucleus of an organization of 1,000,000, women in the United States, whose aim it will be to work for a national defence and a national policy for preparedness.

It is probable tha tthe outcome of whatever is done here by the mayor's committee will be thef ormation of a branch of the national organization.

The communication received by the Chamber of Commerce is referred to Willis P. Morin, vice president, who hopes to enlist the interest of every citizen in a movement that will carry the voice of the people to every U. S. Senator and Congressman at Washington. On the day set apart for observance the people will be requested to display flags on dwelling and places of business and do every thing possible to create enthusiasm.

MONARCH MILLS RUSH SHOULD LAST UNTIL NEXT JULY; ALL MACHINES BUSY

There is no depression in trade visible at the Monarch Knitting Mills, in Erie st., near 5th. During thel ast few weeks the company, with W. H. Spanswick as president and manager, has been receiving orders galore for its products from all over the country. When seen at his place of busines one week ago, Mr. Spanswick told The Evening Times that, provided not another order came to hand, the mill could be kept running full time for the next four months filling the orders then booked. Since the date of that conversation more new business has been received, and now Mr. Spanswick says that prosperity is to be spelled in the Erie st. plant with a large "P," and the spelling is bound to last until at least the middle of next year. Of course, this means that the wheels will be kept running on the orders in hand until that time, but does not include the work that is bound to come from time to time.

The mill at present presents a pleasing spectacle. It is utilizing every inch of the three floors in the building and machinery is buzzing on every one of the floors. Until a rearrangement of the machinery and equipment was effected, recently, one floor of the building had to be used for storage of goods, in cases, but now this is all changed and the firm finds itself compelled to add a large storage warehouse to its facilities. The necessity for keeping goods in storage here arises from the fact that much of the mill products is shipped direct to retailers at distant points and it is inconvenient and expensive to ship goods to the New York City warehouses, there to await orders for reshipment to customers in the south and west.

The Monarch Knitting Mills is one of Fulton's hustling young industries. Its stock is owned principally by different citizens and business men of this city, and its products find quick sale in the large department stores of the leading cities. The allied industries, the Monarch Mills and the Spanswick Manufacturing company came to Fulton at a time when the former Chamber of Commerce under the presidency of Mr. E. J. Penfield was a factor in securing industries for the city.

FIVE ARE HURT AS CAR STRIKES TELEPHONE POLE

Mrs. Merritt Tallman, residing between Dexter and Fairdale, was made unconscious in an automobile accident early this afternoon and the four other occupants of the car injured. The driver of the automobile, W. J. Scott, had one finger cut off entirely and he received a number of other bodily injuries. His face was badly cut and there is a deep gash on his lip. So far as could be learned, the injured are: Mrs. Sherman and H. P. Dugan of Sterling Station, and Henry DeMas, also of Sterling. Mrs. Tallman received a broken nose and a number of bruises. Dr. Cusack, who was called to attend Mrs. Tallman, is unable to tell whether there are internal injuries. Mrs. Tallman recovered consciousness after being taken into the home of Burt Hall in Granby, near the place where the accident occurred.

None of the passengers could give a collected account of how the accident occurred. Thea utomobile had been driven between two rigs passing in opposite directions and it suddenly swerved to the side of the road, crashing into a telegraph pole with great force. The car was not overturned but the impact threw all the occupants out.

DeMas and Dugan noticing Mrs. Tallman's condition, carried her into the Hall home. Scott was able to arise and a few minutes later was taken to his home in this city.

Another automobile of the Wilson &Scott firm brought the two men passengers into this city. Dugan claimed he was not injured, but DeMas said that his knee was hurt and he also showed a cut on his head. Wilson offered to take DeMas to a physician, but the man refused to go, saying that he would wait until he got home and would call on his family physician.

At the time the acident occurred, the car was proceeding toward Fulton. The body of the car is completely ruined as a result of the collision.

Thec ar which figured in the accident was a new seven passenger automobile and it made its first trip in the Fulton-Hannibal passenger service on the first of this month.

NO DICTATION FROM TEACHERS' UNION

The Supreme Court of Ohio has just decided against the unionization of the public schools of that state. The decision is in accord with public policy and common sense and should not have been otherwise. The 1,800 school teachers in Cleveland had organized as a Grade Teachers' Club to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor. The Board of Education had announced that teachers joining such an organization would be dismissed. Six officers of the Teachers' Union were discharged, and a fight was made to reinstate them. The Supreme Court in Columbus has decided against the teachers and in favor of the commissioner of education.

Organized labor, legitimate in its field, is a private organization as much as a great organized industry. The interests of the members of organized labor are frankly paramount to all other interests. This country cannot stand for interference in its education, whether from great aggregations of capital or of organizations of labor.—Auburn Citizen.

CITIZENSHIP KNOWS NO POLITICAL PARTY

There is to be only one issue in the campaign of 1916, The World says, the issue whether this country is to be, in its national aspirations, ideals and sympathies, all American or half-alien. "The German vote has forced this issue, and the American vote will have to decide it." The Germans claim to have defeated Congressman Fitzgerald and Mr. Healey because they were Democrats, so as to rebuke the president. The Berlin Morgenpost calls the late election "a heavy moral defeat for the president," because of his refusal to make the United States a vassal of the German Empire. There is a German conspiracy against the president and his party, against American industry, American finance, and the fundamental institutions of the American people. The issue is made, and there's nothing for Americans to do but vote the Democratic ticket. (So says The World.)

Issues are not made that way. One party does not make an issue. It takes two. You can't quarrel with a man who agrees with you. President Wilson's opponent in 1916 will not necessarily be the kaiser, but the Republican candidate. His opponent will be the kaiser only if the Republican party becames un-American and traitorous. It may turn out that that is the case, and then The World's expectation will come true; but it is not well to be so cocksure about it at this stage of theg ame.

The Republican Party has many faults, but it has never been unpatriotic. Its record forbids the assumption that it will take its orders from foreign conspirators or hoist the German flag over the White House at the behest of modern Copperheads; still less that it will support the proposal to disarm the United States and leave the country naked to any foe. Supopse the Republican party should nominate a candidate just as outspoken against alien conspirators and foreign domination as is Mr. Wilson; suppose, and it is a probable suppositions it should nominate a man even more outspoken, one so outspoken as to receive the support of Colonel Roosevelt. Where would be the issue? What would the conspirators and their rank and file do then? Nominate Mr. Bryan and flock by themselves? They would be hard put to it to find a way of deliver ing their lesson by administering "a heavy moral defeat" to the other candidates.

We do not say that the Republicans will follow this course, for their convention is more than half a year away. But the Republican Party, like the Democratic Party, is largely made up of Americans to whom the honor of their country is dear.—N. Y. Times.

MORE BLACK THAN WHITE

From all parts of the country the newspapers give us glimpses of ideal citizenship as practiced. Here a park beautified, there a club house, and again community gatherings—all the "signs following" a higher relationship, the brotherhood of man.

Often the question is asked why can't we—Fulton—do some of these things? Why not, indeed? Perhaps the surest, plainest answer is because the field has been left undisputed, unchallenged to the mischief makers of the community. Every now and then the trail of the serpent of strife is manifest in snatches of ugly, inane, insane rumors concerning individuals, both in their private and business affairs. This is indeed a time when level headed ,intelligent, honest, decent people of each and every creed represented in this city watch, lest that creature which is more "nigger than white man" succeed in stirring strife for his own personal gain. To the bearer of malicious tales let the listener give heed lest he mistake the motive of the tale borne. Let him watch and wait. "Truth," our old copy books told us, "though crushed to earth shall rise again." The strife bearers cannot long hold the field if their words fall on unwilling ears.

The surest way of reaching a sane and happy community life is to flatly ask the next tale bearer pouring forth his tainted talk, "What's your motive, Mister?"

The life of a community, as the life of individuals, is big, despite petty happenstances. There is nothing petty in life itself. It is a great thing, brilliant in opportunity, and the most absorbing business and the finest art under the sun. Then why allow tale bearers to disrupt, even for a single instance, the harmony of the life of an individual, or, a community?

COAL TAX ROBBERY

The "ultimate consumer" has been robbed so often and by such devious ways that he is apt to take the imposition as a matter of course, as inescapable as death and taxes, as inevitable as fate. But course, as certain as death and taxes, as inevitable as fate. But if ever the spirit of revolution secures a lodgment in his peaceful and submissive soul, it will be through the utter shamlessness of the present cool proposal to withhold from the purchasers of coal the tax which has been collected from them, but which the courts have declared to have been illegally levied. This money, amounting to somewhere in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 was collected in the first instance by the coal-producing corporations from the dealers, and the latter passed the tax on—perhaps with additions—to the consumers.

There was nothing particularly new about this process, for the people have been made acquainted by long and bitter experience with the ease with which the "Coal Barons" have employed the subtleties of high finance to make profits for themselves out of "increased costs of production." It has been for so long a matter of course that if the operators were compelled to pay 10 cents more to the miners, they invariably collected 25 cents or more from the consumers, that users of coal came to feel that protest was useless.

In the matter of this invalidated coal tax, however, the situation is very unfavorable to the state; the coal companies, besides passing on the tax to the consumer, took good care to keep the moneys thus collected in a separate account and most of the dealers had the forethought to insist upon an agreement for a refund should the tax be declared to be illegal. Consumers, however, were able to impose no such conditions when they paid their bills for fuel, and they are now told that it is the purpose of the retailers to keep for themselves as extra profit money to which they have no legal or moral claim. This is just as plainly robbery as if the money was taken by force or by stealth out of the pockets of purchasers, but it is made worse by the cynical disregard of every principle of honor and decency with which the proposal is discussed. It appears to be assumed that consumers have no protection against rapacity of this sort; but it is to be hoped that they will not tamely submit to a form of wholesale theft which has few parallels in the whole history of commercial brigandage.—Ledger, Philadelphia.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington.—That the depleted condition of the treasury is due to reduced tariff rates rather than diminished importations, is clearly shown by statistics which disprove the following statement recently made by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

"Because of the decrease of imports on account of the war, we have had an enormous deficit. This deficit would have been vastly larger, however, if the old tariff bill had been depended upon. At least $130,000,00 would have been added to the deficit had the country depended on the old bill."

That Mr. McAdoo, ignorantly or intentionally, misstated the facts will be apparent when the record of his own Department are considered.

For the nine months of the present year ended September, 1915, there were imported into the United States goods to the value of $1,302,000,000, in spite of the war. On these imports the Government realized revenue in the sum of $148,224,997, or an average rate of duty on all goods imported for this period of but 11.3 per cent — about as close to free trade as could be desired by the most ardent free trader. For the corresponding nine months of the calendar year 1913, January-September, under the Republican tariff law, we imported goods to the value of $1,327,000,000. On these imports the Federal Treasury realized revenue in the sum of $242,624,859, or an average rate of duty of 18.3 per cent., the duties so distributed as to afford a fair measure of protection to all American industries and labor. Had this average rate of duty been collected on the imports for the first nine months of the present yer, the Government would have realized revenue in the sum of $238,266,000, or $90,000,000 more than was actually realized. For this period the low duty rate of the Democratic law represents a monthly loss of $10,000,000 of revenue to the Government. Bear this in mind, the anemic condition of the Treasury is not due to decreased imports but to the fact that so many are coming in without paying a cent of revenue to the Government.

On September 30, 1913, after nearly seven months of Democratic rule, the net balance in the general fund of the Treasury was $123,000,000. On March 4, 1913, when President Wilson was inaugurated, this balance amounted to $149,000,000. The Democrats were presented with a handsome Treasury surplus on March 4th with which to set up housekeeping. The Underwood tariff law went on the statute books October 4th, 1913, business went to smash, and the revenues began to dwindle. However, due to the fact that Republican rates on wool and sugar prevailed for a portion of that fiscal year, the Treasury was able to limp through with ut a small deficit on June 30, 1914. With wool on the free list, the duty on sugar reduced, andm illions of dollars worth of imports coming in free, things went from bad to worse, and the outbreak of the European war was instantly seized upon as a pretext for saddling the country with the war revenue measure. Every device known to a tricky bookkeeper was employed by Secretary McAdoo to make a good showing for June 30, and yet there was a huge deficit on that date. On September 30, 1915, the net balance in the general fund had sunk to less than $41,000,009. By a piece of financial ledger demain characteristic of Mr. McAdoo, the credits to disbursing officers and the national bank-note redemptionf und were switched to the live asset column of the Treasury statement, and on October first, 1915, the net balance was inflated to $128,000,000, an increase of $87,00,00 over night.

About the time Mr. McAdoo was making the statement to the people of Salt Lake, above quoted, a bulletin was issued by Secretary Redfield's department, which stated: "Duty-free imports comprised 71.6 per cent of the total imports for September, 1915, and 61 per cent of those of September, 1914." That is the prime reason, together with the extravagance of the last Democratic Congress, for the Treasury deficit, and no argument of Mr. McAdoo, however ingenious, can alter the fact.

NATURE'S COURSE

Sentimentalists will probably condemn the Chicago surgeon who permitted the defective child to die, but general opinion will sustain him in his decision. A baby boy, whose body was one of nature's blunders. has just been permitted to die because the surgeon in attendance thought that it was better that the child die in infancy rather than be a defective in the years to come.

"I am answerable to my own conscience," says Dr. Haiselden. The baby's physical flaws would undoubtedly make him an invalid during his first year and probably a defective later, if he were allowed to live, he says.

The coroner's jury in Chicago, which investigated the case, sustained the physician in his position, and it is difficult to see how it could do otherwise. It was a sensible course for the surgeon, one not entirely conventional, but one that is more common than is generally believed. This case came to the knowledge of the world and there are many others which remain secret. Of course, it is a practice which cannot be condoned in general, that of letting the matter rest with the physicians or surgeons, for it embraces a granting of too wide latitude But when a physician is convinced, as in this instance, that the child would be a burden not only to itself, but to the rest of the community, the course seems to be justified.

The present-day civilization has no greater problem than that of its defectives. There is unquestionably a drift today toward too great effort in their behalf. They are made too great a burden on the rest of society. Utter disregard of their infirmities and defects cannot be advocated, but the world is fast advancing to a time when the problem will be treated more rationally than it is today

In many, many instances nature tries to remedy her own blunders by the medium of death, but man steps in the blocks her effort. Man and not nature is then to be condemned. — Watertown Times

FARM BUREAU WORK TO ELIMINATE BOUNDARIES

In outlining the ideals for farm bureau activities, Dean Beverly T. Galloway, at the meeting of farm bureau managers, held at Cornell this week, said that the fundamental principles are applicable everywhere. "We should get away," he said, "from the old idea of state lines, county lines, of any other artificial boundaries, which is nothing more than the recrudescence of individualism, born of frontier life and frontier conditions. Men are touching elbows, and there are no divisional lines in the brotherhood of man."

Of the farm bureau of the future, he said:

GROWTH THROUGH SERVICE

"Communities are much like individuals. No individual can grow unless he serves. No community can grow economically, socially, morally, or ethically unless it is aroused to the need of service. Growth, to be permanent, must come from within, and the only way it can come from within is for the people who constitute it to move, to act, to do something for the common good. In the old days when we selected a good farmer, because he was a good farmer, to go out and help other farmers, the most surprised man was the good farmer himself, for he found at once that the mere fact of his helping other farmers helped him as much or more than it did his neighbors. If farm bureau work is to be permanent, if it is to accomplish its aims economically, socially, and, I might almost say, morally and ethically, it must be an outgrowth of local spirit, wisely guided, but not directed or dominated by any agencies from without

GROWTH FROM WITHI N

"The federal government, the state governments, and other agencies, public and private, are uniting and cooperating to place in the hands of the local communities all those things that will be most helpful in helping them to help themselves. This means funds, advice, sympathy, support, and more important than all, a nation-wide united and consistent idealism which is found in the broad and generous meaning of the word "cooperation." Cooperation for what? Not for bureaucratic or centralized control or direction, not for a system that will make our farm people merely receivers, but for a plan and a system that will quicken social consciousness and make our people givers. This is the real meaning of the word cooperation as it wasw ritten into the Lever Bill, and, while we cannot expect to attain the high ideals, as there expressed, all at once, we can work toward them with all the zeal at our command.

THE SUCCESSFUL LEADE R

"We see the farm bureau work of the future wisely guided and directed by local leaders with vision, with sound ideals, and with that most rare and uncommon thing, common sense. These leaders must be in the community and of the community they serve. If the leader is successful in becoming an integral part of the community, if he really deserves it, learns it, and loves it, the rest will not be difficult. He should never lose sight of the fact that he is the crystallizing agent whose job it is to bring the forces together for the purpose of molding them for thec ommon good, and that self-effacement is the most potent force of all in accomplishing the results to be desired.

The greatest pleasure and satisfaction that can come to anyone engaged in constructive, administrative, or organizational work, is the pleasure of standing away on the side lines, completely off the stage and quietly watching results unfold themselves—results which he alone may know are due in some part, large or small to his efforts.

"And finally, we see the farm bureau work of the future a rounded out work reaching not only the things that affect the farmer, such as his crops, his livestock, and his markets, but into the home. Here we men are on delicate ground, so delicate in fact that we must step aside and give place to thew omen, who for all time have been the guardians and keepers of the home. We, therefore, see woman's work in the home and for the home an integral and intimate part of future farm bureau activities. I can see no need for separate machinery, or separate organization for this type of work.

In New York State we are now ready for three or four farm bureau projects for work in the farm home. The communities themselves are ready to do their share and are awake to the need of the work, trained leaders can be secured, the subject matter is sufficiently organized to make it available and useful, and certain quite definite means of approach have been worked out. Food, clothing, and housing will no doubt constitute the essentials in this work for some time. More vital still is the problem of the children. What a fatuous theory that holds because a woman is a woman she should know all about how to care for children, how to protect them against the many ills to which they are subject. The men cannot even depend upon themselves in the matter of looking after the ills of their livestock. No, let us look forward to a future farm bureau work, that, to quote an earnest laborer in the field, 'should give us in every county, or in every rural community, two kinds of workers—the visiting nurse and the county representative—women of broad education, broad sympathies, with a keen knowledge of the subjects to be taught, and how to teach them, women to whom the farm woman should feel she could go for sympathy and counsel, women who are physically strong enough to stand hardships of poor railroads and poor hotels, women who will be glad to be the bearers of the gospel of better homes, better children, and a more contented and happier rural population.' "

VOTING MACHINE GIVES UTICA MAN MAJORITY

Utica.—The voting machine used in the second district of the Second Ward on election day and which has caused the greatest disturbance in a Mayoralty election in the history of the city, was opened in Justice Ross's special term of Supreme Court in the Oneida County Court House yesterday. For the office of Mayor the machine showed 137 votes for John G. Thomas, the Republican candidate for Mayor, and 281 votes for James D. Smith, the Democratic candidate for re-election to office. There were seven other votes cast for the office of Mayor, one in the Socialist column and six in the Prohibition column. The party columns were blank.

TARIFF A FAILURE, SAYS HOME MARKET CLUB

Boston.—A resolution declaring the "Underwood-Simmons tariff has failed as a revenue producer" was adopted by the Home Market Club at its annual meeting today. The resolution urged "an adequate protective tariff" as a safeguard against European competition after the close of the war. Nearly all New England manufacturing centres were represented.

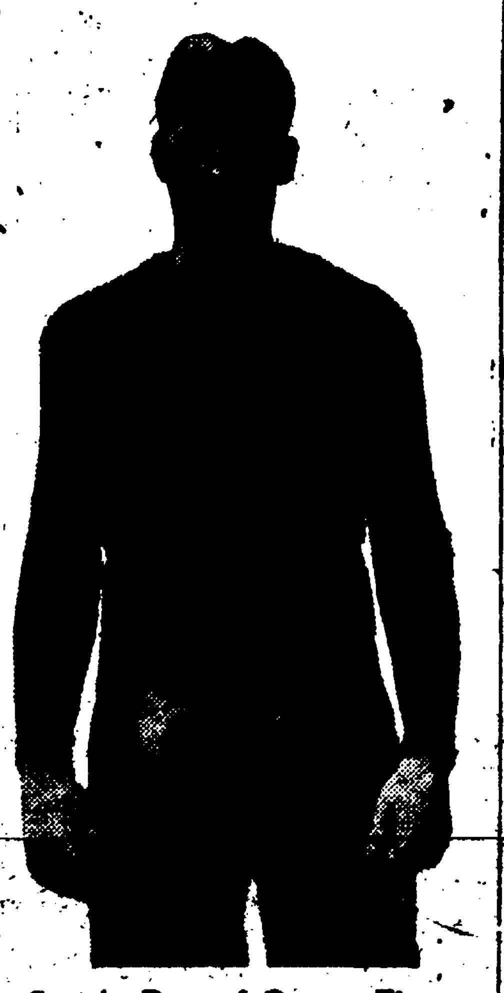
Rear's Good Work the One Redeeming Feature of His Mates—Rathbun Was High Man.



Captain Rose of Orange Eleven

In the second match of the city series bowled on the Onyx alleys last night, the Crescent A. C. won out, taking the first two of the three sets. None of the bowlers seemed to show their usual form. Denniston of the Crescents had the high single game score, rolling 199. Rathbun of the same team had high total for the three games, scoring 526. Van Buren captain of the Crescents was next high, with a total of 534.

Rear, captain of the West Side team, who usually averages in the neighborhood of 200 did not appear in his usual form. However, he was the highest scorer on his team.

The score follows:

West Side—City League

	1	2	3	Total
Chubb	162	148	191	501
Dingle	168	157	178	503

Tonight, the Nondescripts with McCollum, O'Brien, Hill, Paige and Sullivan, will oppose the B. S. S. S. P. team. Painter, Smith, Storms, Taylor and Stausing will probably be the B. S. S. S. P. entries.

A close match between the teams is anticipated, from the fact that the Nondescripts were last year's champions and the B. S. S. S. P. team appears strong. The B. S. S. S. P. team disposed handily of the Onyx A. C. in Monday night's match.

DARTMOUTH COACH MAKES QUICK CHANGES

In anticipation of a strenuous battle with Syrocuse in the John D. Archbold Stadium Saturday, Coach Kavanaugh of the Dartmouth football team has been making some changes. Worthington, a remarkable athlete who has been playing at quarterback has been shifted to end and Dunsosoit, another clever athlete who has been at end is to be seen at quarterback.

Dusossoit is a natural player and runs his team well. He is very fast and sure in handling punts. Had he been tried in the position earlier in the year it is probable he would have played at quarterback in all the games.

The ticket sale for the Dartmouth has been very heavy at Syracuse. Among the attractions will be the battle of the guards, Schlachter and White of Syracuse and Spears of Dartmouth, all candidates for All American honors.

WRESTLING BOUT HAS BEEN POSTPONED UNTIL MONDAY

"Hank" Mott is in receipt of information from the manager of "Bill" Eastman, in effect that the last named gentleman will be unable to appear at Sullivan's hall tonight as sheduled. Mott was to meet the Rochester man in a bout on the matt and the local man is sorely disappointed "Bill" did some wrestling on Wednesday night with "Bull of Montana," and sustained a sprained wrist. The injury remains with the big man, hence the postponement of tonight's match until Monday night of next week.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

AMBLER TRADE BOARD PLANS INDUSTRIAL BOOM.

Small Pennsylvania Town Has Campaign For Community Betterment.

The borough of Ambler, Pa., will witness a distinct boom if the plans of the recently formed Ambler board of trade are carried to completion. Backed by more than fifty of the town's most active business and professional men, residents say there is every reason to believe the new organization will not, like so many similar ones in the smaller boroughs, be active for a time and then quietly die.

Comprehensive plans have been outlined by the board of trade for community betterment and advancement. Movements to be developed immediately include the erection of booster signs for Ambler at the approaches to the borough. Also there will be designating signs on borough highways, as well as the obtaining of additional industries, at least two of which now are being considered.

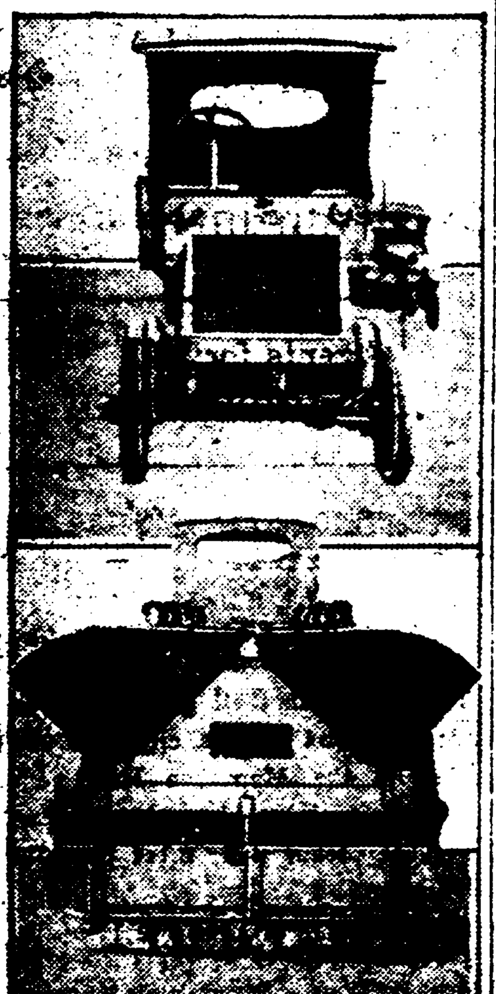
J. Howard Dayer, president of the Ambler board of trade, had this to say concerning the recently inaugurated movement:

"Ambler business men have organized for the purpose of fostering, encouraging and developing the mercantile and manufacturing interests of the borough, for the purpose of studying the workings of all transportation lines operating in and through the borough and for the remedying of defects and abuses of transportation methods, telephone and telegraph facilities, gas and electric lighting and all other public service corporations operating in the town, and to promote integrity, fair dealing and good faith among our business people and their patrons.

"It is our intention, further, to obtain as many local conventions as possible. And, while Ambler has 'been on the map' for a good many years as a leading industrial and manufacturing community in the district immediately north of Philadelphia, we are going to 'make that map dot much larger.' We hope to accomplish this end largely by co-operating and urging the improvement of all county, state and township roads leading into the borough, to the end that motorists will appreciate our efforts. Summarized, the work of the Ambler board of trade will be absolutely constructive, the betterment of moral, social, commercial, civic and industrial conditions in Ambler. We are at this time negotiating with one manufacturing plant desirous of locating a branch here."

Modern Street Cleaning Appliances.

The illustrations show a tractor and trailer such as are used by the department of street cleaning of New York city. These tractors and trailers are of ten ton capacity and are so constructed that a trailer carrying garbage and ash cans may be hooked to the tractor, or the tractor may be used for supplying locomotive power to a sweeper trailer or a flusher trailer or a snowplow. Twelve of these machines are part of the equipment installed in the model district in New York city. This district was established in response to the suggestion of Street Commissioner Fetherston that one of the districts of the city be selected in which modern appliances and apparatus should be used.



A TRACTOR AND TRAILER.

Slow Burning Moving Picture Films.

An important activity of the New York bureau of fire prevention has been the attention given to the subject of moving picture films. Recognizing the danger to the public from the use of the nitrocellulose film, the New York fire department has endeavored to encourage the manufacture and general use of films made of safe substances. A number of experiments have been conducted, and the department has made, for its special use in educational propaganda, a series of films on slow burning material, which so far have proved satisfactory.

GARDEN CITY MOVEMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Idea Should Receive Greater Industrial Encouragement.

The time has never been more opportune than the present for American manufacturers to give serious thought to the advancement of the garden city movement, according to W. J. Hoggson. The congestion in our large cities, he says, contrary to all natural laws, has about reached its limit. We can no longer excuse ourselves for past errors in town planning on the theory that this is a young country. New towns are being laid out today with the same pitiful lack of constructive imagination as heretofore, paralleled streets giving the aspect of a great ugly checkerboard, with no civic center, no playgrounds and insufficient parks.

The garden cities that are destined to bloom in America and that are to be the result of a movement fathered by American industrial institutions should be lacking in no respect and should be equal, if not superior, to any like developments anywhere in the world.

The garden city and town planning movement has reached the highest point of effectiveness in England. The model villages of Letchworth, Port Sunlight and Bourneville, which provide homes, real homes, for working people, are artistic creations of men possessed of splendid imagination and sympathetic understanding.

TREES FOR CITY PLANTING.

Elm Has Been a Failure In New England.

The love and veneration of the New England mind for the elm is so great that it is hard to acknowledge that this tree is almost a total failure in city planting, says the Boston Transcript. As a matter of fact, the liability of the elms and maples to insect attacks, the brittleness of some of the maples and the sensitiveness of both trees to dust and gas conditions unfit them for the test of a strong gale.

On the long path of the common a sturdy English elm, not old nor decrepit, was reft in twain by the wind. Near it stands a red oak which lost not a single twig or leaf. The young oaks planted in recent years in the Arnold arboretum, in the parkway near the Forest Hills section, in the Back Bay Fens, in Brookline and elsewhere, are a joy to the eye and a solid assurance of arboreal beauty in the future. Not only do these young oaks withstand the storms and the insect pests, but they appear quite indifferent to dust, to gases, to excavation and to all the city conditions which prove so disturbing to the elms and American maples. Oaks, planes, Norway maples indicate themselves through every test of storm and insect plague to be the best trees for city planting. It is certainly a sad thing to bid farewell to a single elm or sugar maple, for no trees are more deeply loved by our people or with better reason in long association and the record of noble sheltering service, but it is apparently a farewell which is ordained by the powers of nature.

Epidemics and Schools.

Doubt as to the wisdom of closing schools during epidemics of contagious diseases is expressed by Dr. Francis George Curtis of Newton, Mass., in a bulletin on the "Health of School Children," which has been issued by the United States bureau of education. Dr. Curtis says:

"If the schools are closed when an outbreak occurs the children are turned loose from supervision. They mingle freely with one another in the streets, on playgrounds and in one another's houses. They are having an extra vacation and enjoying themselves thoroughly and are unwilling to admit that they feel ill, lest they be kept at home and prevented from having a good time. For this reason they will not say they feel ill until the disease is well advanced, and there may be active sources of infection for some time before it is discovered that they are ill.

"If the schools are kept open and the children continue in the classrooms as usual, they are under strict observation and examined daily by the school physician, suspicious and infected cases being sent home for observation or treatment."

New Idea For Playgrounds.

Oakland, Cal., has a system of playground government that might well be adopted in many cities of the country. According to an announcement made by the Oakland chamber of commerce and Commercial Club Consolidated, the children of the Bella Vista playgrounds in Oakland are put under the management of a committee of boys. This committee is called "little citizens' committee" and consists of ten youngsters from different neighborhoods near the playgrounds. The committee draws up the rules and regulations governing the playgrounds, and if a member of the committee detects a violation of the laws he promptly hales the offender before his brother committeemen and a trial takes place. The work of the committee has been closely watched by the board of playground directors, and if it is the success it promises to be the system will be recommended for adoption at all thirty-nine playgrounds in Oakland.

A WORRIER

Thanksgiving Day Brought Her a Respite

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

When the great war broke out in Europe my little girl, Fredrica, was in Munich studying art. I at once became uneasy about her, and when I heard of the great number of Americans detained in Europe, I lost my head entirely. I wanted John to go abroad at once and bring our daughter home.

He endeavored to quiet me, reminding me that Fredrica was not the child she had been; that it would be difficult for him to get across, still more difficult to find her and much more difficult still to get back to America. He was worried himself, though he did not admit it to me, well knowing that we had been able only to keep our child supplied with sufficient funds to pay her way from month to month without providing anything ahead, and she had no means to bring her home.

Week after week passed, and we heard nothing from our chick. Worrying told on me bodily, and I was reduced to skin and bone. At last I told John that if he did not do something to end my suspense he would lose me as well as Fredrica. He went out at once to learn if he could get across the ocean, and, finding that a ship would sail next day, he took passage on her and, procuring by him what money he would need, bade me goodby. "I have no doubt," he said, "that Fred will be here with you before I return. Nevertheless there is no help for it; I must go after her."

As soon as he had gone I was half sorry I had let him go. Now I had the two of them to worry about instead of one. Besides, by this time ships began to come in loaded with returning Americans, and the stories of their discomforts were harrowing. John went over in an English ship, and I worried lest he should be captured by one of the German war vessels at that time roving the sea.

When, true enough, I took up a newspaper and saw that this had really happened I was in despair. It was all I could bear to think of my only child detained without means in Germany, and now I had the additional worriment of her father carried about on the ocean with no prospect of being landed anywhere, for he might be captured by a German cruiser, and they were running the gantlet of the enemy's cruisers and often did not put into port for months at a time.

John started abroad about the 1st of September. Of course he could not communicate with me unless put ashore, and even then he might be landed on the other side of the world, in which case, the mails being interrupted, it might take a letter months to reach me. At that time I had only our daughter to worry about, and now the causes of worriment were tripled. I worried about Fredrica, I worried about John, and I worried because I knew that John would worry about me. I believed that if I could have thought of anything else to worry about I would have included it. The only thing else there was to worry about was myself, but that didn't trouble me a bit. And yet there was apparently more cause to worry about myself than either of the others, for I had lost twenty pounds and was gradually sinking into the grave.

November came and not a word from either of my absent ones. I had intimate friends, of course, who tried in every way to bolster me up. My cousin, Ellen Thompson, asked me about a week before Thanksgiving to promise that I would spend the day with her and her large family. She said that with so many of them I would forget my troubles. I told her that I would be more miserable in the midst of a happy family than alone; I would spend Thanksgiving in my own home, enduring my loneliness as best I could.

The day before Thanksgiving I went around to Ellen Thompson's to ask if she had seen in any of the papers a notice of the landing of the persons that the German cruiser had captured.

"Why, Ellen, what in the world are you going to do with two turkeys?" I exclaimed, noticing a pair of gobblers just delivered from the market.

"Oh, we've so many mouths to fill," she said, "that one turkey won't do."

It seemed to me that she had ordered provisions enough to last her a fortnight. But I said no more about it, and since Ellen said that she hadn't seen anything to comfort me in the papers I went home. I carried more worry with me, for before I left Ellen she put her arms about me and smiled at me. I reckoned that she was concealing some bad news from me.

The next morning, Thanksgiving day, I had scarcely finished dressing when, hearing a vehicle stop before the house, I looked out through the window, and who should I see but John alighting from a cab! And the next thing I saw was John handing out Fredrica. I ran downstairs at the risk of my neck, and, meeting them at the front door, together they kept me from falling on the floor in a faint.

Soon after their arrival Ellen brought us an extra Thanksgiving dinner she had provided for us, for John had sent her a message from quarantine to let her know that he and Fredrica were coming. We had a glorious Thanksgiving. John and Fredrica narrating their adventures. John had been put ashore from a cruiser that had captured him in an out of the way place and had gone to Munich, where he found Fredrica quietly pursuing her studies, waiting her next remittance.

I tell John that I will never worry again. He adds, "Till the next time."

For Young Folks

Master Freddy Pratt, Skillful Boy Rider.

© by American Press Association.

Notable among the skillful horseback riders at the recent horse show held at Piping Rock by the New York society folk was Master Freddy Pratt, son of Herbert Pratt. Ever since he was big enough to sit on a pony's back Fred has been used to riding, so that now he is perfectly at home in the saddle. No longer he mounts ponies. He must have a regular sized horse, although the animal must be well broken. Many children in the country learn to ride at an early age and without much instruction either. Hardly a farm boy or girl who hasn't mounted bareback to drive the horses to water and to and from the pasture. It is fine sport, and the country kids get as much fun out of it as their city cousins.

The Spider and the Fly.

This incident comes from Albany, N. Y.: A small garden spider had spun his web in a corner where a perpendicular column and a horizontal rail met and from the ambush of a hidden crack awaited his prey. A handsome yellow wasp passing that way espied the graceful trap and made for it. Setting his feet lightly on two or three of the meshes, he started up a great buzzing, which shook the web from end to end. The watchful spider ran out a little way, stretched forth a delicate foot to make sure of the location of the supposed fly, and then rushed for it, alighting on the wasp with a gleeful jump and no doubt a grin of hideous triumph. But Mr. Spider had reckoned without his host. Like a flash of lightning the wasp's six nimble legs closed upon him, the graceful body bent nearly double, and once, twice, thrice, again and again, the sharp sting pierced the luckless spider. As his struggles grew fainter and finally ceased, the wasp, with a spring, disentangled himself from the silken net and bore away his spidery victim in triumph.

Three Deep.

All of the players but two form in a double ring, with one player directly behind another. The two odd players, one of whom is the runner and the other chaser, start outside the circle. The object of this game is for the chaser to tag the runner. The runner may save himself by stopping in front of any couple standing in the ring, whereupon, since that file is "three deep," the third person in front becomes runner and tries to escape being caught by the chaser.

Should the chaser tag the runner they exchange places immediately and continue the game.

This game is one that is a favorite for children and grownups as well.

Cat Wears Life Belt.

In an English magazine there recently appeared a picture of a cat wearing a life belt, which was specially made for him by the jackies. The belt has a sufficient number of corks attached to it to keep the little animal afloat on the surface of the water. The cat must be saved at all hazards, say the jackies.

The Little Pig's Lesson.

A little piggy-wig once went to court
To see the king and queen,
But they said, "Little pig, you can't come in Because your face isn't clean."

So they wheeled him away in a wheelbarrow
To the middle of the market place,
And pumped and pumped till there wasn't a speck
Of dirt upon his face.
Then they wheeled him back in the wheelbarrow,
Because his face was clean,
And he took off his hat and made a bow
Before the king and queen.

—Exchange.

Winston Churchill's attempt to hearten and arouse the British people by pointing to their invincible navy was natural under the circumstances. The new Balkan situation, coming on the heels of a repulse in France, made the case of England look dark. But with the navy intact, Mr. Churchill argued, the nation might be sure of recovery and final triumph. For the hour which called it forth the argument must have been effective, but the world at large can but take note that England has long banked too heavily on her navy. An enemy bent upon aggression would know wherein lay England's strength and, being unable to match it in kind, would avoid that point and strike elsewhere. What England needed most in 1914 was an army, an establishment, as the world is now told, of millions of men. The government with difficulty secured means to build up the navy, but would have failed to build up an army to equal it. The great armies of Europe are due to conscription, which the Briton hates. In the extreme crisis the navy became useless and the army failed to materialize. The lesson seems to be that national defense must be all round preparation, not alone material, but personnel. The latter should be efficient morally and mentally as well as technically, with a national impulse which shrinks at no hardship and no sacrifice.

The attitude of the British foreign office on the issue of the "freedom of the seas," as announced recently, is that "the whole question of international agreements and how they can be made worth anything in the future may reasonably form the subject of discussion between nations after the war." Much has been said about violations of international law and of national rights as defined by that law by belligerents, but nothing could be more frank than this declaration by a government which our state department has remonstrated with upon this very point. Our meat packers, farmers and cotton planters have found their rights upon the seas interfered with right along. To help them in their dilemma the issue cannot be decided too soon one way or the other.

It has been officially announced that over 3,000 games of football were on the list for the season ending on Thanksgiving day. This is a record and argues, in the opinion of football authorities, that the public finds the game attractive. Under the new rules it is a game which, like baseball, can be followed and understood by the layman. As now played it is a game for skill and muscles combined rather than a tussle of brute strength.

The belligerents berate Uncle Sam's views on neutrality, invade his sea rights and are jealous of his vantage ground of aloofness, but when they want first aid in cash, et cetera, they are on their knees with apologies and promises.

A New York city judge has decided that a baby has a right to cry anywhere, everywhere. The decision is highly significant in New York, but the rest of the country never included babies in the anti-noise embargo.

The way the shells knock things down in the war zone, human muscles developed in digging trenches will be useful to put the piles of brick and stone back where they were before the war.

Somewhere, pro or con, in the preparedness problem must belong the example of the deadlock between the German and British navies, facing and scowling and shirking fight, but where?

After the novelty is worn off from this national defense business it will probably resolve itself into the old dispute as to whose turn it is to go to the front and dig trenches.

Soldiers on the northerly battle fronts are looking less to Christmas presents and goodies and more to snug Christmas quarters before the great freeze-in.

That New York truck driver with an opera voice and style might well exchange jobs with some so called singers now superfluous on the stage.

Apple pie is an institution which never needs an introduction, a revival nor a higher up certificate that it is the kind mother used to make.

A year hence we will not be able to see anything so relatively unimportant as a world war until election is over and the votes counted.

The public spirited citizen who is worrying over national preparedness can set a good example by looking to his own coal bin.

Deer chasing often turns out to be dear sport, even dearer than buying one's venison at the butcher shop.

Watchful waiting for an adequate army and navy should be the kind with a punch in it.

Among the "last" things yet to be invented put down the objectionless tax.

A FRILLY FROCK FOR HIGH OCCASIONS.

A little frock of pink chiffon taffeta trimmed with self-frills. The puff sleeves are short and full, while the neck is finished in round outline, with frills below.

The glory of frills will never be eclipsed as far as they relate to children's dresses. The soft taffetas and satins that are used this season are well adapted to this form of trimming, and the little frock shown here is exceedingly pretty made up in delicate pink taffeta trimmed with self-ruffles arranged in groups of three each around the neck and at the bottom of the gathered skirt.

For a girl of eight years 4½ yards 36-inch taffeta are required for the dress. In making the dress, the home dressmaker takes up the waist first. Close the under-arm and shoulder seams as notched; then turn the hem in the back at notches. Gather the upper and lower edges of the front and lower edge of back between double "TT" perforations. Gather the front on crossline of small "o" perforations, from large "O" perforation to center-front. The ruffles should be about 3 inches wide. They are hemmed first, then divided into four sections. The space which they are to cover is divided in the same way. Pin each section of the ruffle to corresponding section on the waist, then gather the ruffle until it fits the space it is to cover. Sew into place and finish the lower edge with a bit of lace edging if desired. The frills of the skirt are put on in the same way.

For the belt, sew to lower edge of waist, center-fronts and center-backs even (large "O" perforations indicate center-back), notch in belt at under-arm seam.

Next, close back seam of skirt from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finish edges above perforation for a placket. Turn hem at lower edge of double "oo" perforations; gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations, sew to lower edge of belt, center-fronts and center-backs even, and bring small "o" perforations in skirt and in belt together.

The puff sleeve is very dainty and can be made quickly. Close the seam as notched; gather on crossline of small "o" perforations, draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape under gathers. Stitch a straight gathered ruffle of material the desired width underneath sleeve along the gathers. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

An ultra-smart finish for the lower edges of the ruffles would be buttonholed scallops.

A DELIGHTFUL FROCK IN VELVET.

A pleasing model for a frock of brown velvet trimmed with an inserted vest of green silk or metal cloth. The revers may fasten across the vest at the front or be turned back in regulation fashion.

One is not limited to a narrow scale of velvets because of the popularity of these materials this season, for they run through a large scale of colors and prices. Cotton velvet is inexpensive and exceedingly pretty. The dress shown here is fashioned of dark brown cotton velvet, trimmed with silk braid in the same shade. Fancy braid ornaments finish the tabular ends of the front extensions, and the high collar is buttoned over with fancy buttons. The inset vest is of metal cloth. This costume reproduced in serge, gabardine or voile is also charming. In medium size it requires 3⅞ yards 54-inch material and 3½ yards of inch-wide braid.

Loyalists of the V-shape neck persuasion have their preference catered to, despite the round effect shown. For the V outline, cut out neck edge of vest on small "o" perforations. All of the material is folded in half, however, before cutting. Then the back gore of the skirt is laid into position first, followed by the collars, all along the lengthwise fold. Along the selvage edge the front gore and the piecing are laid. This is followed, working to the right, by the cuff, sleeve, back, belt, vest and front (cut in one with the revers), the belt and back resting on the lengthwise fold and the other sections on a lengthwise thread.

If the front is desired straight, eliminating the revers, cut off the front edge ⅜ inch outside of double "oo" perforations. The folding over of the revers across the inset vest is rather a pretty idea, however, especially when a bit of gay color is selected for the vest.

There are shades of green that mingle effectively with brown. If the girdle is made of self-material a pretty idea at the back is to introduce pointed tabs of the vest material to fold over the belt. These tabs are held in place with buttons of the dress material. The cuffs may also be faced with the trimming selected for the vest.

A Chintz Room For Daughter

In the average home the only room which the daughter of the house can claim as her own is her bedroom.

This should be as dainty as possible, signifying girlhood in all its freshness and beauty. Unfortunately many girls believe that daintiness costs money and pass it by on the plea of a small pocketbook. Daintiness, as a matter of fact, can be achieved for a very small amount of money, provided one is willing to spend some time and not a little thought on the decoration of one's bedroom.

Pink and blue have been the colors long honored as the young girl's, but the young person of decided character who feels that these pale tints do not reflect her vivid personality may choose in these very modern times cubist and futurist colorings and, with the aid of some of the new and artistic chintzes, may achieve a very stunning effect.

The furniture par excellence for the girl's room is finished in white enamel, and if you are not fortunate enough to possess this sort you can easily change what you have at hand by a can of white paint and one of white enamel. Painting is by no means easy work, but it is work which many a girl has accomplished successfully at home. It will be necessary first to purchase a can of paint remover so as to take off as much as possible of the original stain. Then give the pieces of furniture two or even three coats of white or cream paint and finally one of white or cream enamel. This should be allowed to dry thoroughly before an attempt to use it is made.

Now, if your bed is a wooden one you can produce a very quaint effect by pasting over the head and base boards chintz in a pretty design. This should be cut to fit the boards exactly and edged with braid to match the chintz, the whole being glued flat on to the head and base boards, or brass headed tacks placed at one inch intervals can be used to hold the chintz. Some girls have created a very pretty effect by cutting out flowers or birds from chintz and pasting these designs at conventional intervals on the base and head boards.

The dressing table can be made very pretty by the aid of chintz, and if you want a dressing table don't despair. Just make one. "How?" perhaps you ask. It is really the easiest thing in the world. If there is a fair sized table somewhere in the house which is not used for any particular purpose claim it as your own and use this as the foundation for your dressing table. First it must be coated with white or cream paint or enamel. Then fit a cover of the chintz over the top and sew a ruffle of the same around this flat cover. The ruffle should be only three or four inches long and should be quite full, so that it will frill prettily. Over the top of the table should be placed a thick piece of glass, which you can purchase and have cut to fit at any glazier's. This will be the most expensive item in the making of the dressing table—it will probably cost $4 or $5—but this money will be well expended, for it saves the top of the table and the chintz from dirt and wear.

Now comes the question of the mirror over the table. In the basement of any of the big department stores a cheap mirror can be purchased for $1.50 or $2. This will have a brown or imitation mahogany frame and will not be a thing of beauty. But the glass will be fairly good, and the frame can be covered. Remove the nails which hold the back of the glass and the front of it together, take off the frame and cover neatly with the chintz, gluing it flat to the surface and allowing an inch or two to overlap to the back on either side. When this is quite dry put back on the glass and fasten the back to the front with the nails which were removed previously. Hang over the mirror and complete the charming effect by purchasing two white enamel candlesticks which should be topped by dainty shades made from the chintz.

To carry out the color scheme drape the windows with thin silk mull in a white or cream shade, at 25 cents a yard, and sew a band of chintz to the edge of the curtains, or use the mull curtains plain, edging with a bit of lace, and introduce the chintz effect in a short valance at the top of the window. Do not, however, have over curtains of the chintz. They shut out too much light and air, and a bedroom needs as much of these as possible.

Shall Women Propose?

Of course women should propose. It is women who change their entire lives by matrimony; it is women who take on colossal responsibility by matrimony. The woman should surely be allowed to choose the man for whom she feels herself able to work and give.

Men propose; men have had it all in their own hands up to now, and if they have married the wrong woman they have only themselves to blame for it.—Woman of the World.

The Woman of It.

"What are you going to do when you grow up, Annette?" asked one little girl of another.

"Marry some silly man, I suppose," was the reply, "like most other women."—Kansas City Star.

15,000,000 XMAS SEALS ARE DISTRIBUTED IN STATE

New York.—With shipments to 500 agents in various parts of the state today, from the office of the State Red Cross Seal Sale; the number of seals distributed has been brought up to 15,000,000.

Rochester, which last year won the national pennant, awarded to the city selling the largest number of seals per capita in any city of its size in the country has placed a first order of 3,000,000; Buffalo heads the list this year with an order of 5,500,000; Syracuse and Yonkers 750,000 each; Troy, Albany, Poughkeepsie and Binghamton plan to sell 400,000 each.

The exceptionally large orders this year are due to the very wide use which is to be made of the sale-by-mail plan which has been demonstrated to be the most satisfactory method of putting out the seals. In the rural districts this method has met with large success and the county agents in Herkimer, Oneida, Ulster, Chautauqua, Delaware, Ostego, Wayne and Cayuga are sending out thousands of letters containing seals into the country districts.

The standard of five seals for each inhabitant has been set by the State Charities Aid Association, agent for the state outside of New York city. Over 40 cities and villages reached this standard last year and it is expected that this number will be greatly increased in 1915.

British Capture One Turkish Trench Line

London.—After a period of comparative inactivity lasting since August, the British force at Gallipoli resumed the offensive on Monday and after a spirited action took 280 yards of Turkish trenches along the Krithia Nullah or "the Valley of Death." Two war ships with their big guns aided in the operations.

The Krithia Nullah is near the tip of the peninsula. Geographically it is the Saghir dere. Soon after the landing of the contingent in April it became the scene of particularly vicious fighting and soon was named by the men "the Valley of Death." It opens to the sea at what is called Gully Beach. Boomerang Fort, about a mile up the valley from the beach, has taken a place in British history for the desperate struggles waged around it, and it was just beyond this extemporized fort that Monday's advance was made. Of this action a report issued by the War Office last night said:

"In the Dardnelles the Fifty-second division carried out a very successful attack on the Turkish trenches on the 15th instant, for which careful preparations had ben in progress for a considerable time.

"Three mines were exploded successfully under the enemy's trenches in the neighborhood of the Krithia Nullah at three p. m., and the infantry, pushing forward immediately after, captured about 160 yards of trenches on the east of the nullah and 120 yards on its west. The captured trenches were at once consolidated, and bombing parties pushed on up to the communication trenches and erected barricades.

"Simultaneously with the assault our artillery opened on the enemy's reserve support trenches, two 14-inch monitors and H. M. S. Edgar (cruiser) cooperating, and maintained their fire until the position was reported consolidated at about 6 p. m.

"The enemy's batteries replied heavily, but very erratically, and did little damage. The Turks in the neighboring trenches, who fired heavily, were caught by machine gun and rifle fire and bombs and suffered considerably, their fire becoming very wild.

"No attempt at a counter attack was made until the night of November 16-17, when it was easily repulsed. Our casualties were under fifty killed and wounded. More than seventy dead were seen in the captured position, and a wounded prisoner reports that more than thirty were buried by the explosion of one mine.

"The units employed were portions of the Fourth and Seventh Royal Scots, the Seventh and Eighth Scottish Rifles and the Ayrshire Yeomanry, all of the 156th Brigade."

The committee today sent out invitations to several hundred people and a large attendance is expected.

TURKEY TRAIN TO RUN AS USUAL TOMORROW

Watertown.—The "turkey train" will run this year as usual despite the reports that of late it has not been a success. The train will be composed of six and possibly seven cars, all for them used for poultry by the American Express company.

There is no fear of a scarcity of the birds this year, although the price remains highly uncertain. None of the local dealers would give an estimate this morning on the price to be paid this year, saying that it is too early to judge.

Washing Knitted Articles

When washing crocheted or knitted articles first sew them in a pillowslip and then proceed to wash them. Squeeze the bag in the soapy water, but do not rub or wring it. Simply press out as much water as you can and then hang the bag in the air to drain and dry. When it is thoroughly dry rip open the pillowcase, and the articles will be found in good shape.

POULTRY SUPPLY WAS HEAVY IN MARKETS

Syracuse.—An unusually large supply of poultry for Thursday was offered yesterday at the North side public market. Many purchasers are obtaining live poultry to fatten for the holidays and with Thanksgiving only a week away the poultry market will be the most active every day from now until next Thursday.

Prices in all lines were slightly lower yesterday, but the changes, according to the farmers, will not be permanent. Live chickens sold at 14@16c a pound and live fowls at 13c a pound in crates and 14c a pound sepaately. Dressed chickens brought 22@24c a pound, while dressed fowls sold at 21@23c a pound. Live ducks were unchanged at 14@16c a pound, but no dresse lstock was offered.

Egg prices continued firm at 50@55c a dozen, and sales were active despite the high prices. Small lots of duck eggs sold at 55c a dozen. Batter was scarce and the few pounds that were offered were quoted at 32@34c a pound.

Apples and pears continued firm, apples at 50c@$1.00 a bushel and pears at $1.00@1.25.

One gardner with tomatoes had no trouble selling them at $2 a bushel. Potato prices were a trifle easier when many bushels were sold at 80c. Best grades commanded 90c@$1 a bushel. Cabbage was plentiful and sales were brisk at 25@35c a dozen heads.

Onions continued to sell at 75c@$1 a bushel and silver skins at 90c@$1 a bushel. Peppers had large sales at $1@1.25 a bushel and celery sold at 25@50c a dozen bunches. Other vegetables moved at unchanged prices.

The hay market was more active than it has been any day this week. Best quality could be purchased at $18@$19 a ton, a drop of 50c from the former prices. No. 2 quality ranged at $13@$16 a ton and other lines moved at unchanged quotations.

QUOTATIONS OF PRODUCE AT SOUTH SIDE MARKET

Syracuse.—Potatoes again featured the trading at the South side public market yesterday. About 150 bushels were sold by thel oad at 80c a bushel and the remainder at 90@95c.

With Thanksgiving only a week off trading in poultry has started to show improvement. Yesterday more than 200 ducks and about the same number of chickens were sold. The ducks brought 16@17c and the chickens 15@16c. No live turkeys have been offered yet.

Several loads of hay changed hands at $20@21 a ton.

WEATHER FORECAST

Rain, possibly turning to snow, tonight to Saturday. Somewhat colder.

AUBURN TO HAVE MOVIES IN SCHOOLS

Auburn.—The first step yet taken in Auburn toward providing moving pictures in the schools as a means of educating the pupils was the action of the Genesee Street Parent-Teachers' Association Wednesday afternoon when at a regular monthly meeting Miss Marion H. Sandwick, principal of the school, was delegated to look into the matter.

The sentiment evidenced yesterday was strongly in favor of the project and there is every indication that the scheme will at last be given a trial at Genesee Street school. Visualizing the lessons before the students is conceded by educators to be one of the most effective methods of instruction to grade pupils. History and geography are especially adapted for moving picture instruction and so popular has the plan become in some cities of the state that the State Educational Department furnishes free of cost films for the use of schools where the movies have been installed.

Boys' Club Project Enlists Interest Interest of Mayor Fox, Who Sees Successful Outcome of Movement, Provided Moderation Governs All Movements

As stated in yesterday's issue of The Times, the establishment and maintenance of a boys' club in Fulton now seems a certainty. The meeting which will take place at the City Hall Monday afternoon is assured of a large attendance of interested citizens. The meeting is called principally for the purpose of discussing the plans which have been outlined by several of the men responsible for the meeting and the first after procedure will be to obtain the club rooms.

Mayor Fox engaged in an interesting interview with an Evening Times reporter yesterday in which he discussed the advantages of the club to the boys as well as to the community. Dr. Fox called attention to the fact that a similar movement launched several years ago did not materialize, but he expressed the opinion that if the club was started on a small scale at first there would no difficulties met with. He ascribed the failure of the previous efforts to the fact that business men were asked to make subscription of too large a proportion, and of course, the committees met with refusal.

One movement, in particular stipulated the establishment of club rooms, the expense of which could not possibly be met. If, however, the owners of vacant property in the downtown district are inclined to be generous in regard to the temporary use of a place, then the club once started could take care of itself.

At the meeting Monday, several of the points to be discussed will be the manner of financing the club once it is under operation. The popular expression existing that the operating expenses will be solicited from citizens by subscription is erratic. The boy's who enjoy the privilege of the club rooms will soon find a way to help themselves as is done in many another city.

There are clubs, lodges, and various city organizations which can hold benefits and donate the proceeds to the club besides other methods of obtaining funds.

As stated yesterday, several men have volunteered a subscription to start the movement and over $200 has been already subscribed. One donation of $100 was promised by a manufacturer of this city. The first subscription volunteered was of $25. Any citizen desiring to be present at Monday's meeting will be welcomed and his suggestions will be cordially received is the sentiment expressed by the self-appointed committee.

MONASTIR FALLS INTO BULGAR HANDS; SERBS ESCAPE, RETREATING

London.—More than six days have passed since official news has reached the world of the Serbian army. The War Office in London and Paris have failed to break the seal of secrecy that surrounds the desperate struggle in progress just north of the Greek frontier, in which the Serbs gradually are being forced out of the last little corner of their kingdom.

Monastir, following Prilep, has been occupied by the Bulgars. This is not officially anounced, but the news of the fate of the city has come to London from so many different sources it is regarded as authentic. The consular and diplomatic corps which had sought a haven there fled nearly a week ago to Salonica, and many of the inhabitants hurried across the frontier into Greek territory.

The defeat of the Serbs at Babuna Pass and Tetovo made the situation of the southern army precarious in the extreme. Bulgar forces swinging west and south sought to envelop it in the district between Monastir and the reek frontier and cause it either to retreat into Greece or face destruction. This, it is said here, was certain to be the end of the army if it elected to defend Monastir. Instead, however, it seems to have abandoned the city and to have begun its retirement toward Albania.

A despatch from Rome last night said it was in "full retreat." Apparently Orchrida, on Lake Ovhrida, which is on the boundary between Serbia and Albania, in the extreme southwest corner of the former, is the objective point.

It is possible the Serbians, who are facing the combined Austrian, German and Bulgarian armies further north, will make a stand on the historic plain of ossovo, east of the Montenegrin frontier, where more than five hundred years ago they lost their independence to Turkey. They must either do this or retire into the mountains of Montenegro or northern Albania, where, although they would be nearer to help from the Adriatic, it would be difficult to keep them supplied, owing to the absence of roads.

RUSSIA AND ITALY MAY JOIN ALLIES' COUNCIL

Paris.—Greater and more efficient co-operation will be the first result of the establishment of the Allies' war council which met here this week. Each British member consulted his French colleague on the subjects immediately under his supervision.

Thus Mr. Asquith, who is temporarily acting as War Secretary, conferred with the French War Minister, General Gallieni; Mr. A. J. Balfour, First Lord of the British Admiralty, with Admiral Lacaze, French Minister of Marine; the Premier, Mr. Briand, who is in charge of the French Foreign portfolio, with Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary ,and Mr. Albert Thomas, French Under Secretary of War for Munitions, with Mr. David Lloyd George the British Munitions Secretary.

It is understood that an understanding has been arrived at in regard to various subjects and energetic action is expected to result.

The next meeting of thec ouncil will be held in London. It is believed that the Russian and Italian governments will designate representatives to attend this council.

One session of the council here was held at the Foreign Office and another was presided over by President Poincare at the Elysee Palace.

Jurors Uphold Doctor Who Let Baby Die

Chicago. Ill.—The verdict handed down by the jury of eminent Chicago physicians in the Baby Bollinger case after a long investigation of the course pursued by Dr. Harry J. Haiselden at the request, ethically upholds that physician, except that it does not accept his conslusion that the baby would have been of no value to the race.

Them ost of the verdict is technical and would not be clear to the layman, but in part it says:—

"We believe a prompt operation could have prolonged and perhaps saved the life of the child.

"We find no evidence from the physical defects that the child would have become mentally or morally defective.

"Several of the physical defects might have been improved by plastic operation.

"We believe that morally and ethically a surgeon is fully within his rights in refusing to perform an operation which his conscience will not sanction. We find no reason to believe that the parents of Allen J. Bollinger were deprived of the privilege of consultation.

"We recommend strongly that in all doubtful cases of this character a consultation of two or more surgeons of known reputation for skill, ethical standing and broad experience should decide upon the advisability of inadvisability of operative measures:

"We believe that the physician's highest duty is to relieve suffering and to prolong life."

At the Coroner's inquest Dr. Haiselden was the first witness.

"I was unable to tell shortly after the birth," he said, "that the baby would never live without an operation. Then I learned from examination that the child would be a mental and moral defective, and I decided not to operate.

"To further satisfy the parents, I called in fifteen reputable physicians for consultation. We examined the child carefully. I told them that if any one wanted to operate he could. They all refused. Saying I was right.

"Then about two hours before the child died one of these physicvians asked me to permit him to operate. The child was dying then, and I refused, it being against ethics to operate on a dying person."

FLORIST PERKINS SEEKS SPECIAL WEATHER REPORT

The joke of the season was sprung this morning at Perkins' Flower shop.

The proprietor because of makin plans for the day's work desired to know the wearther man's report fo the day. As he turned over various newspapers in his search, many of them of early week editions, a customer in the store suggested finding, the report in the morning's paper which was repoeing undisturbed on the counter. The reply given wast "Yes, I've seen that,it says 'rain,' and I don't like it and am looking for another."

Small wonder some o fthe biggest plants in the shop were jarred. Extry, Extry.

GOVERNMENTS CUTS LONDON'S DRINK HOURS

London.—The official Gazette tonight contains the long expected order curtailing the sale of stimulants in London. It provided that after November 29 the trade shall be confined to five and one-half hours of a week days.

The hours on week days will be from noon to 2:30 p. m., and from 6 to 9 p. m.

On Sunday they will be from 1 to 3 p. m., and from 6 to 9 p. m.

BOVARD TRACT SHOWS RAPID DEVELOPMENT; HOMES ARE MULTIPLYING

In spite of fall weather and a natural tendency to retrench and refrain from making real estate ventures, the last week marks a number of transactions of interest. Here and there, throughout the city new homes dot the scenery, some in course of construction and others just occupied by tenants or owners..

One of the most important of the operations is the construction of new houses on the tract known as the Boward estate, which is bounded by Walradt st., Fulton ave., North 2nd and 3rd streets. This property is at present being developed by V. D. Calkins, of this city. Mr. Calkins had streets laid out through the tract in accordance with plans made by City Engineer Hill. A sewer connection has been made to the main city sewer and other mains have been installed on the land. The work was done at Mr. Calkin's expense, although in time the city will get title to the streets.

Work has been started on several houses in the plot and the construction is progressing rapidly. Mr. Calkins intends to construct several more houses on the land during the winter.

Among the new buildings erected by Mr. Calkins is a two-family house for Mr. Charles Rudd, which is yet in course of construction. One part of the house will be occupied by Mr. Rudd while the other part will be rented. The house will be heated by steam.

A house has just been completed for William Merton of the Commercial Press, which Mr. and Mrs. Merton are now occupying. Work has been started on a house in South 6th st, for Fred Wolcott, of the Morrill Press. Mr. Wolcott will occupy.

George Hill, superintendent of the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper company recently moved into a new home in Prak st.

The Whitaker & Bogardus, Inc., were the means of making the following realty transfers:

Alfred Sears of Belleville, N. J., to Charles Sebra, a farm of forty-one and a half acres in Oswego town, Mr. Sebra taking immediate possession.

Ray Allen of this city has exchanged two houses in North 5th st. with George emp for a twenty-five acre berry and poultry farm near Granby Center. Fred McMillen of Fair Haven has acquired a 60-acre farm just outside of Minetto from John M. Wallace.

For C. Frank Hall the agency has sold to R. W. Sponenberg of Ingalls thirty-five acres near Bowens Corners. This farm is fully equipped for poultry raising and the new owner will operate it for this purpose on a large scale.

Opinions

THE RIGHT AND WRONG OF IT

There may be some doubt, as a scientific problem, whether a defective child is a menace to society, that is, an inconvenience and annoyance, and perhaps a burden to the rest of the race. What more can it be? Yes, a source of sorrow and regret to its parents. But in what crucible of God or man is the physician or the parent made the judge of whether that infant shall live or die?

The baby of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Bollinger died in a convulsion because the attending doctor with the consent of the parents, declined to perform a simple operation which would have saved the life. We do not know how strong a scientific argument could be made in support of the action of the physician, but the doctor goes far afield when he says:

"It would be a moral wrong, in my opinion, to allow the child to live." The moral right and wrong of this thing was written in stone on Mount Sinai by the Creator of mankind, and reads "Thou shalt not kill." Inscrutable are the ways and the purpose of the Creator. Had the doctor confined himself to scientific discussion of the question he might be able to defend his course among men, but he cannot call upon the moral creed for a justification of his action.—Buffalo Times.

SAFETY FIRST IN HOMES

Safety first and fire prevention campaigns have done a surprising amount of good in this country within a very short time. Most which has been said on these subjects, however, has applied to factories, shops and business establishments.

Attention has been called to the need of education along these lines as applied to the home by the New Haven, Conn, Register which has compiled the following set of rules for the guidance of housewives:

"Don't pour water on burning fat.

"Don't throw sugar on fire.

"Don't fill lamps after dark and when lighted.

"Don't use gasoline in the house.

"Don't start a fire with kerosene.

"Don't keep matches within reach of children.

"If fat takes fire, throw on flour, salt, baking powder, or sand.

"If a lamp takes fire toss it out of doors, cover with a rug or throw on salt, baking powder, or flour.

"If thec hinmey gets on fire burn salt or sulphur in the fireplace; pour sand down the chimney.

"If a fire starts in a closet beat it out with a broom and water.

"If the bed gets on fire, push the mattress on the floor and beat with wet brooms.

"If the curtains get on fire do not try to pull them down;remove nearby objects and use wet broom to smother the burning pieces as they fall.;;—Batavia News.

SAVE OUR GRAND TREES

Now that the leaves have fallen from the trees, a close investigation shows some of the most beautiful of our city's shade givers as having suffered from the work of insects. In some cases great patches of bark have fallen away, and the interior is rapidly being despoiled by the destructive borers. Last spring several of the finest specimens of elm trees in the city were treated by tree doctors, but as yet the results cannot be determined.

The trees of our city are possessions that even the least of thinking people must appreciate in a measure. These trees need care if we would perserve them. Trees are not grown in a year, and if responsibility for the care of our city's trees were placed upon individuals, or groups of individuals, the task could be made one of pleasure as well as one of real worth. In Massachusetts the state cares for its trees, and individuals pay a small tax yearly for the proper care of their trees. In this way uniform, scientific treatment under trusty agencies assure longevity to all treekind.

There are two friends of trees whose services in their protection should not be overlooked. They are the children and the birds. The children learn to coax the birds to stay with us the year round, and the birds in turn destroy both the moth and the wicked borer.

Our city park would be an ideal spot for joining the talents of the pupils who receive lessons in manual training and nature study. A study of the construction of bird houses, kinds of trees, and the birds themselves could under proper guidance become without effort a Free Protection club. Children quickly catch an inspiration and they would gain, even though in a small measure, a sense of their responsibility towards the city's possessions, and a lesson in citizenship would be added.

The following newspaper clipping is of interest:

Mr. Pope of the Public Museum says that a very good thing for boys to do in some of their spare time is to put up in their yards and gardens homes for birds. And he adds that we might well provide lunch counters for birds, since there are many transients passing through these days. Lunch counters for birds. Why not? There aren't many things pleasanter and more interesting than watching, yes, and caring for something that is alive. It gives us one more interest, one more resource for spare time and perhaps some day for lonely hours. It gives lessons in manliness and tenderness to the weak. And let no one say that this would be a "free lunch" proposition. It wouldnt be easy to find anything its size that does more for man than the average bird.—Milwaukee Journal.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

The person who denies himself to save is usually saving for some high purpose. He sacrifices inferior things in order that he many retain the better ones. It may be for an education for himself, provision against want in old age or the welfare of his children.

The thrifty man is usually the generous man. He who spends all he earns can help no one.

It is related of the founder of Guy's hospital, England, that a visitor called one day for a donation for charity and found him engaged in an altercation with his servant about a few lucifer matches. The visitor had little hope of a response to his appeal. To his astonishment, however, Thomas Guy headed his list with a large benefaction, and, observing his visitor's astonishment, expained that it was only his carefulness in small things that enabled him to help others without stint.

This man who protested against such a trifling waste was the same who built and endowed the hospital at Southwark, England, which bears his name, erected almshouses at Tamworth, furnished wards in St. Thomas' hospital, Christ's hospital and assisted many other charities.

It is by looking after the little things, so that nothing is lost, that men learn to be careful. The habit of wise frugality, of making the best of apparent trifles, of knowing how to turn everything one touches into some economic use, of being willing to do so by frugality and care—all these things are elements of education that carry thrift with them.

The real way to become an economical nation is to teach the children thrift. As I have said before children are receptive and their memories retentative. The virtue of thrift is so related to their future happiness as individuals and their usefulness as citizens, that they have a right to be thoroughly trained in it and it is the duty of men and women to see that children are taught it.

Children have as a rule the vaguest possible ideas of the source and use of money. Occasionally money is given to them to spend for candy or moving picture theatres, but they have no idea how the money was earned or its value. They seldom see money spent for anything useful. Charge accounts are run at the stores, marketing is done by telephone, and bills often are paid by check so that children hardly know that money is necessary in these transactions. Nor have they much idea that the money, so carelessly given to them to spend, has been earned by some one's work.

The habit of some parents to hand out money to a child whenever it is requested, thus conveying the impression that the source is limitless, and to allow it to grow up in such ignorance is little short of criminal.

Theb est way to train children in the use of money is to let them earn money. Let them learn by experience. Lectures on the earning and spending of money are valuable but their value is limited. The actual experience of earning it and of finding out that when it is spent more must be earned to take its place, is what counts. When thec hild finds that money is more or less difficult to get, he will not so readily spend it.

GO ALONE

Keep out in the open. When you lighten, you enlighten. One cannot see the sun without feeling a sense of kindliness and appreciation of it all. The end of everything is eclipse. The home of bats and owls is the cave. Darkness is solitary confinement. Shadows, gloom, gathering clouds, influence the mind.

Sunshine is the brush of God. It paints on nature's palette, in summer, the tapestries of the trees and flowers. In winter, the frescoed, frosty pane, with its vines, leaves and sprays, soon loses its beauty in the sunshine; but this is only another way of opening to your vision even greater glories farther out.

The bed of roses, the land of milk and honey, are on the road to sunshine. Sunshine lifts the lake into the moving mist of heaven, and then sprays it back again, and makes the life of man possible.

In the frozen world of business, in the drifting shows of success, stop, and let the tendrils of your better self reach out and touch some less fortunate fellow. Loan him sunshine.

When the night storm leaves on the thorn the hanging dewdrop, one is inclined to look upon this little moving miracle as a mourner's tear; but when the sunshine of morning hits it this same little liquid drop will glisten like a gem.

Throw down that yellow story and take a trip out in the open. Get the sunshine of life in your soul. No magazine, no medicine, nothing can do you more good than a long walk in the woods this spring. It will get you on fire with a desire to do. Go alone. Get real well acquainted with yourself and with God.—Silent Partner.

Whose Little Darling?

"Well, well, well," said the kindly stranger, patting little Molly on the head. "I suppose you are your papa's little darling?"

"I don't know yet, thir," lisped Molly. "The court hathn't dethided yet. Jutht now I'm the pet of the Matrimonial Fidelity and Casualty Truthst company, thir."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Styles of Architecture.

In their architecture the Moresque strove for the negation of the weight altogether. The Egyptian placed the weight firmly on the ground; the Greek lifted it up in the air with an assertion of graceful power. The Roman confused weight and support; the Byzantine represented weight without support; the Moor suggested that there was no weight at all.

HOME TOWN HELPS

IMPORTANT PART OF HOUSE

Wise Builder Will Always Provide for Porch That is Comfortable in All Weather.

A case before the city building commissioner for decision hinges on the question whether a porch is part of a house. It is a technical point the official is to decide, involving an interpretation of the municipal building code. Technicalities aside, however, the question almost answers itself, of course, a porch is part of a house, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. In the modern house it is likely to be about the most important part for six or seven months of the year.

Some day a monument may be erected to the memory of the person who first suggested the porch, if anyone is able to fix his identity. More probably, an investigator would find that the porch is a result of evolution like a modern locomotive or an automobile, for which no individual could claim credit. The "stoop" of our grandfathers, like the wheezy "injine" of pioneer days, has been exalted to a position of high service and respect.

Part of a house? Ask an architect or a contractor. The modern man who plans a comfortable residence himself designs the kind of porch he deems suitable to his comfort and dignity and when that is done gives secondary thought to the rest of the house. The porch must be big enough to entertain on, big enough to eat on in seasonable weather; it must be screened for protection against insect pests. If one wishes for comfort de luxe he may give his porch a fireplace and defy cool evenings to drive him inside.

The sleeping porch, too, has edged its way into our social consciousness in these latter days. It also is a big part of the house. Doctors prescribe and children cry for it.

Statistics indicate a general lowering death rate among Americans, rural and urban. One wonders whether the advent of the ubiquitous porch has had an appreciable influence in bringing about this result. The gospel of fresh air owes some acknowledgment to this part of the house which lures men, women and children out of stuffy rooms and fills their lungs with fresh air. The porch knows no social caste; it is not a rich man's privilege alone. The humblest home may possess it and, in fact, usually does. More power to it.

SPRING OR FALL PLANTING

Matter of Moment Over Which Experts Have Disagreed for a Great Many Years.

Among horticulturists in Illinois there is a keen dispute as to whether spring or fall planting of fruit trees is better. The preponderance of testimony is in favor of spring planting. But, for all of that, some of the fall planted trees succeed well; and often it is much more convenient to plant in the fall than in the spring. It is the belief of the writer that a person sending to a nursery in the early fall for a certain tree is more likely to get that tree than in the spring, because the variety desired is more likely not to have been all sold out. The disadvantage of fall planting is that the roots are covered by loose dirt and the roots freeze harder than they would in the ground from which they are dug. Fall planted fruit trees should have the dirt heaped quite high above the roots, and, after the ground is partly frozen, some litter should be scattered about the roots of the tree and tramped down hard to keep mice from working in it and gnawing bark of the young tree. Horse manure is good for this purpose and will often cause the frost to penetrate the ground only lightly.—Chicago Daily News.

MUST NOT BE USED ALONE

But Cement Plaster May Be Made Quite Artistic When Employed With Wood Trimmings.

A homebuilder purposing to use cement plaster for the exterior covering of his new house, will obtain better results in the completed building if, before beginning operations, he acquaints himself with the peculiarities and possibilities of cement plaster.

Used understandingly and properly, it is an ideal covering; otherwise it may prove most uninteresting and unsatisfactroy.

Cement accentuates poor design more than do most other materials; consequently care in design is essential. Unusual structural features should be avoided; beauty of line and proportion will furnish the principal medium for decorative qualities.

Cement is apt to be colorless and monotonous if used alone; it is at its best when combined with other materials.

Used with wood trimmings, it is extremely pleasing, and makes possible attractive window arrangements. Cement has a peculiar quality of reflecting the color of materials used with it. With trimmings of brown, the plaster takes on a brownish tint, while green trimmings give to it a tone of green.

White trimmings for cement houses are rarely effective, unless set off by green blinds.

Mary Anderson.

Madame de Navarro, the Mary Anderson of other days, who made her debut as a sixteen-year-old Juliet at Macaulay's theater, Louisville, and who withdrew from the stage upon her marriage many years ago, has long made her home in England, at a quaint little village in Worcestershire. The other day she appeared as Juliet for a charitable purpose, the occasion being just forty years after her debut. Her home is within easy driving distance of Strafford-on-Avon, which she first visited when eighteen years old. Even then she resolved, it is said, to make her home in the land of Shakespeare. It was in the middle eighties, when her photograph was in great demand and sold everywhere in England as well as in the United States by the thousand.

Plant More Acacias.

While the aspiring eucalypt largely dominates the landscape views of the valleys and foothills there is no family of trees better fitted to the demands of the public or private parks or cottage dooryard than the varied and variable acacias. Whether in flower or wearing their quiet summer dress of grayish or bluish green all bear a sufficiently shade-yielding head that marks them as desirable subjects for building attractive and comfortable places of rest in all classes of gardens. During the summer days, when "all round the languid air doth swoon," the value of these plant emigrants from the antipodes can be appreciated, for during the long, hot days, though they both hunger and thirst, they fail not.—Exchange.

Ideal City Has 32,000.

Cities that are using all legitimate efforts, and even some efforts that cannot be so described, to climb to a slightly higher rank in the census list, may be interested to know that Ebeneser Howard, an English authority on city planning, places the maximum population of the ideal city at about 32,000, depending somewhat on the size of the component families.

Increase in population should be provided for, he thinks, by building another city near by. Mr. Howard's ideal city covers 6,000 acres, of which about half is cultivated, the other half being occupied by streets and buildings.—Literary Digest.

The Difference.

Grubbs—Do you regard Binks as stubborn? Stubbs—That depends on whether you approve of the position he has taken. He is stubborn when he declares for something I oppose, but when he agrees with me I consider that he betrays, even under attack, a manly firmness and integrity of conviction.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON'S LIFE REFUTES PESSIMISM

The life of Booker T. Washington is the best possible reply to those chronic pessimists who affirm that there are no longer any opportunities for the poor boy.

Here was a man born a slave and who all his life long had to bear the stigma of his color. Yet when he was buried his coffin was heaped high with floral tributes from his white townsmen, and his name is mentioned by thousands who never even saw him, with almost personal affection.

There IS a chance for any boy or any girl, no matter how hard the circumstances of their birth and surroundings.

The homely virtues of industry, honesty and faithfulness have never failed to find their reward in friends and in respect, and they never will fail.—N. Y. American.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

(Compiled by Local Union)

John Sullivan has signed a contract for a five-year lecture tour, his theme to be total abstinence from the viewpoint of a puglist. As quoted in a recent number of The Outlook, he says, "I am leaving the farm to say to the young men of the United States: 'Leave liquor alone. Liquor leads to bad companions. Bad companions lead to evil places. Evil places lead to disease and disease destroys the home and the nation.' "

At the National Safety Council, meeting in Philadelphia recently, J. C. Rose, chief claim agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad company, insisted that no man who takes one drink of liquor should be licensed to drive a motor car.

The legal advisers of Yale University have advised the corporation that the liquor law, which goes into effect November 1, will prevent the clubs and societies at Yale from serving alcoholic liquors to their members: in other words, Yale will be put in the "dry" column.

The result of the election October 19 in New Jersey and November 2 in Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania, was not altogether unexpected. Three of these states, because of their large foreign population, were particularly difficult to educate on the "votes for women" question. These voters not being broadly manipulated by the corrupt politicians who are ,it is admitted, responsible for the delayed victory for suffrage. The New York Tribune's explanation of the result of the New Jersey election undoubtedly explains conditions in the other three states as well. "The story of the amendment's defeat is the story of scattered efforts against well-oiled political machines. Most of the hostile politicians frankly admitted the reason why they opposed th egranting of the franchise was not because women were incompetent to vote, but because they believed they could not control them as easily as the men.

The Chicago Tribune, in listing certain reasons for "what happened to the suffrage cause in the east," says. "It is a certainty that liquor had something to do with it. The demon rum always pays the woman the compliment of being afraid of her."

As a matter of fact, the losers in this election were not thes uffragists, but their opponents. "We have lost nothing and our opponents have won nothing," remarked Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the National Suffrage Association, on the morning after the election, "for they lost all the votes we have won. We are the only victors. We shall recommencet our batfle for equal rights the first thing tomorrow." This is the spirit of every advocate of the woman movement,. and the question will never be settled in the east, the west, the north or the south until it is settled right.

VAUDEVILLE RECRUITS

Every performer who takes part in the new and revised edition of "Peck's Bad Boy," as it will be presented at the Quirk tonight, is a particularly versatile player. Each member of the cast is absolutely necessary to the working out of the general story scheme of the comedy, and in addition each one is called upon to contribute some kind of an interpolated specialty. These performers are, for the most part, recruits from vaudeville, where many of them have been prominent for years. The numbers contributed during the action of the comedy are funny and musical. A special scenic mounting is carried with the attraction. Seats are now selling at the box office and it would be advisable to secure your tickets well in advance for the reason that at popular prices standing room will be at a premium.

GUARDING MEAT SUPPLY; LOSSES

Percentage of Animals Are Now Slaughtered Under Federal Inspection.

The latest Weekly News Letter says of thew ork of guarding our meat supply, as follows:

More than 58,000,000 meat animals were slaughtered in establishments under Federal inspection during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. Since approximately from 58 to 60 per cent of the animalsk illed in the country are slaughtered in establishments where Federal inspection is maintained, it appears that about 100,000,000 meat animals are now being killed each year in the United States.

Of the animals subjected to Federal inspection, 299,958 were condemned as unfit for human use and 644,688 were condemned in part. Thus a little more than 1½ per cent of all the animals inspected were condemned either in whole or in part. These figures include only attle, calves, sheep, goats, and swine.

Tuberculosis was the chief cause of the condemnations. More than 32,644 carcasses of cattle and 66,000 carcasses of swine were entirely rejected on account of this disease, and in addition parts of 48,000 cattle and 444,000 swine. Hog cholera was responsible for the next largest loss, nearly 102,000 swine being condemned entirely on this account.

The annual appropriation for the Federal meat-inspection service is about $3,375,000, so that the cost to the people would be between 5 and 6 cents per animal if the service was confined entirely to the inspection of the animals and carcasses. In addition, however, great quantities of the meat and products are reinspected. In this item there was a very considerable increase during the last fiscal year, the reinspection resulting in the condemnation of a total of nearly 19,000,000 pounds of products of one kind or another. Furthermore, 245,000,000 pounds of imported meat or meat products were inspected and more than 2,000,000 pounds condemned or refused entry.

In the course of its work, the Bureau of Animal Industry, which is in charge of the meat-inspection service, has discovered a new method of destroying trichinae in pork, which is an additional safeguard to human health. Refrigeration at a temperature of 5 degrees F., or lower, for a period of 20 days will destroy these parasites, which occasionally give rise in human beings to the serious disease known as trichinosis. Hithrto the only known safeguard against this disease has been thorough cooking of all pork and pork products, and those persons who neglect this precaution have always been more or les exposed to the danger. Unless pork is known to have been subjected to refrigeration as above indicated, it should be thoroughly cooked. The microscopic examination of pork for the detection of trichinae has been abandoned, as the usual methods have proved inefficient.

In this connection it is interesting to note that more swine were slaughtered in the past year in establishments under Federal inspection than ever before. A total of 36,247,958 were inspected at the time of slaughter, and approximately 35,900,000 passed for food.

"JOGALONGS" ENTER LEAGUE

Latest Acquisition Managed, However, to Hold to Third Place---Newness Did Not Count.

A sixth team entered the City Bowling League this week and bowled the first match last night at the Onyx alleys against the Nondescripts. Ross Eaton is captain of the new team, which has been named the Jogalongs. In last night's event, the Nondescripts won the first two matches and the Jogalongs took the third.

Martin of the Nondescripts made the highest run, 239, and he also took second on totals. Stauring, of the Jogalongs totaled the most points, rolling up 577. Stauring's high score in the thir match can be ascribed as the cause of the Nondestripts' defeat as only ten points separated the two teams.

The results of the matches were as follows:

Jogalongs—City League

	1	2	3	Total
Durst	166	130	142	438
Barris	147	158	135	450
Eaton	102	154	114	370
Hollingsworth	174	167	236	577
Totals	728	780	798	2306

Nondescripts—City League

	1	2	3	Total
McCollum	191	173	147	511
Martin	239	154	144	548
Van Buren	142	165	154	461
O'Brien	150	203	181	534
Paige	195	191	151	537
Totals	917	886	788	2591

On acount of the entrance of the Jogalongs into the league Manager Powell finds it necessary to make a new schedule. With six team entered and three bowling matches scheduled weekly this will give each team an opportunity to bowl one match a week.

SIX TEAMS MAKE UP THE CITY LEAGUE

Manager Powell of the Onyx bowling alleys now announces that the City Bowling league will comprise six teams.

Ross Eaton will captain the new team. Hollingsworth, Stauring, Durst and Cole will comprise the rest of the members of the team.

CANOSTOTA COMES FOR TOMORROW'S ATTRACTION

The Nondescripts have secured the Y. M. L. team of Canastota as their opponents for thef ootball game at the Fair Grounds tomorrow.

Manager LeRoy has had some difficulty in matching teams to compare with the Nondescripts in playing ability and weight and it is a question whether the Y. M. L. men will not repeat the Syracuse Westcott's performance, ae the Canastota team will come here with a clean record ehtrof season.

The Y. M. L. team has defeated the All-Rome, All-Oneida and the All-Utica team by a score of 32 to 0. As the defeated teams have been considered by LeRoy as being even matches for his eleven, the large score rolled up by the Canastota men would indicate that the Nondescripts will have their hands full Manager LeRoy expects to have the All-Auburn team here for a game before the season isb rought to a close.

MACCABEE TEAM TO PLAY MONDAY NIGHT

The Maccabee basketball team will practice Monday night for the first game of the season with the First Ward team. Manager Snow of the Maccabees wants his men to play a preliminary game and teams in the city desirious of a booking for that evening are requested to communicate with the manager.

The lineup of the two teams which are to stage the main game has not been decided upon as there are several likely candidates who have not yet come out for practice.

Manager Snow is preparing a schedule of games with a number of Central New York teams.

BRIDES' GOWNS AND BRIDESMAID'S FROCKS

New York.—Town weddings this month are picturesquely and impressively staged in the sombre cathedral like interiors of the big churches with their vaulted naves, and many colored widows. Color schemes are usually varied—Mauve, orchid and yellow are favorites. Pink and blue and silver lace, the selection at a recent ceremony made a delightfully effective scheme.

Bridal Gowns

The old time satin dress severely simple ,has quite disappeared, in fact, except for the court train attached at the shoulders, very little satin is visible in the latest bride's gowns. Dainty, elegant elaboration is the "key note" of such attire now, and jewelry that is the groom's gift or that has family association, is worn quite as much as old family lace.

At St. Bartholomew's

At a fashionable wedding in St. Bartholomew's church, which was decorated with pink and white chrysanthemums and autumn leaves, the bride wore a novel frock of white chiffon, brocaded in silver. The very short skirt finished with a puff of silver lace. The court train of white satin gathered at the top was headed by a Medici collar of silver lace, a knot of silver ribbon showing at the side of the train. The low cut corsage was trimmed with old point lace and long tulle sleeves covered the arms. The veil of tulle completely covering the train, was gathered full at the top and confined cap-fashion with orange blossoms. A diamond corsage ornament, the gift of the groom, was worn Gardenias and lilies of the valley made the bouquet.

Two Maids of Honor

Two maids of honor, the bride's sisters, wore pink satin frocks with short full skirts that were plain in front, but finished at the back and sides with flounces of silver lace stiffened to stand out like crinoline, which swayed as they walked. Corsages, short-waisted, with silver girdles and short puffed sleeves of the lace, ornamented with pink roses. Large black velvet hats faced with pink, with a long scarf streamer of black velvet faced with blue that encircled the neck and extended down the back. A single pink rose was caught in the brim, and large bouquets of pink roses with trails of long stemmed roses was carried.

Bridesmaids in Blue and Silver

Theb ridesmaids, six in all, were gowned like the maids of honor only in blue and silver and all wore flat-heeled silver sandles, laced with ribbon to match.

The little flower girl who preceded the bride, wore a white dress with touches of blue, a hat embroidered in blue and pink flowers and carried a basket of pink rosebuds and blue forget-me-nots.

Travelling Attire

The going away gown was of velvet in king's blue, trimmed with Kolinsky fur, and a coat of black caracul lined with blue and gold brocade, having a collar of silxer fox, and muff to match, completed the costums. The travelling dress—an inconspicuous costume of blue serge and silk, with the fashionable touch of Russian embroidery on the girdle, and with this a motor coat of unplucked seal, with patch pockets and gay plaid lining wasb oth smart and practical, as most of the wedding journey was made by automobile.

Smart Automobile Furs

n thec lass of fur coats, and fur trimmed cloth coats made for the hard use of travelling and auto-wear there is great opportunity for obtaining smart, reliable furs at comparatively little prices. At C. C. Shayne & Co., they show a remarkable variety in these garments this year, all made after loose fitting but exceptionally stylish models, in pelts that are known to give satisfactory wear. n mannish styles with ample pockets and collars that can be strapped up to resist the keenest winds, these furs are indispensable for anyone who goes about in a motor car or needs a warm, practical and stylish wrap.

Faddish Color Combinations

Color combinations are decidedly faddish and one notices a return to old time mixtures of color that have been so long disused that they have an air of novelty. The Continental yellow and blue is liked not only by suffrage sympathizers, but for general evening wear. Gray and green, gray and plum, brown and blue, or the some tone combined with the vivid Italian green, royal purple and blue or yellow are some of the two color sets that suggest themselves. Beside there is a decided fad for rainbow effects where different motifs govern the shadings. Sometimes it is the orchid tints that are employed, sometimes the hues one sees in a delicate sunset pearl grey, pink, rose and light green. Opal tints or those familiar in the pearl lining of a shell that are used for the fascinating frocks of satin overlaid with scarfs of tulle that have taken fashion by storm as it were.

HIGHER HONESTY!

Pass It Along! Says You

DAVID GIBSON Speaks of it in this Way

ADVERTISING is a force for higher honesty; for when men found that goods would sell by advertising their merit, they began to put more merit into the goods in order to advertise their merit.

When You Want It and How You Want It—

WHAT?

The little daily newspaper that has made as rapid strides in the subscription and advertising departments as any one of its age in the country. The growth has been accomplished without the use of catch penny schemes, contests or any other special effort. The success of The Evening Times is due to the loyal support of the good people of Fulton who want to have a newspaper when they want it and how they want it,

WITH THAT HOMEY TOUCH

Which cannot be secured in the out of town publications. The Evening Times stands for that degree of higher honesty in civic affairs which centers around dollar value for every dollar spent.

"A Herald of Progress"

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Handle For Dishcloth Protects the Hands.

The fact that dishwashing is an effective way of thoroughly cleansing the hands is not sufficient inducement to make this homely task attractive to the fair sex, and women who, by stress of circumstances, are compelled to take care of that end of the household routine sometimes tackle the job with a little less reluctance if they may keep their hands out of the water, preferring to get their hands clean in some solution more attractive than dishwater.

A handle for the dishcloth has been invented by a woman from Gibbon, Neb. A handle with a projecting wire construction has the means of securing the cloth on the end so that the cloth may be passed over the dishes readily and thoroughly clean their surfaces.

Soda Biscuit.

Mix together three pints of flour and one-half tablespoonful of salt, rub in one tablespoonful butter. Into one pint of thick sour milk stir one teaspoonful baking soda which has been dissolved in two teaspoonfuls boiling water. Add gradually but quickly to the dry mixture, stirring and cutting to a soft dough. Turn out on a floured board, knead just enough to form into a smooth mass, roll out an inch thick, cut into small biscuit and bake in a quick oven.

Uses For Old Velvet.

A piece of velvet is a fine cleaner for brass, and for polishing silverware it is better than chamois. It quickly removes dust from the woodwork, and if used to rub the stove after it has been blacked it will produce a high polish. There is nothing better to dust a felt hat, and silk dresses and other silk articles should always be dusted with it, for it cleans perfectly without cutting or otherwise injuring the silk.

Grated Pumpkin Pie.

Half a pint of grated raw pumpkin, two and a half tablespoonfuls of good molasses. Put the molasses and the pumpkin on the stove and heat till hot. Add a cupful of sugar and mix a rounded tablespoonful of flour in two-thirds of a cupful of sweet cream and stir into the pumpkin, which has been cooling. Beat an egg and stir in last, season with nutmeg. Bake in one crust till done.

Fruit Roll.

Nothing is nicer in the way of pastry desserts than the various fruit rolls. Make a good baking powder biscuit pastry. Roll in a long sheet and spread with thinly sliced peaches, apples or any kind of berries. Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Roll up like a jelly roll, then bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes. Serve either hot or cold and with or without cream or pudding sauce.

Sago and Apple Pudding.

Pare six apples and punch out the cores. Fill the holes with cinnamon and sugar, using two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon to a cup of sugar. Take one tablespoonful of sago to each apple, wash it thoroughly and let soak an hour in water enough to cover the apples. Pour water and sago over the apples and bake an hour and a half. Serve with cream and sugar.

Hot Milk Cake.

Two eggs (yolks and whites beaten separately, then together), add one cupful sugar and beat with a spoon five minutes, one cupful flour, with one teaspoonful baking powder sifted in it, salt and a few drops lemon extract, one-half cupful quite hot milk with a piece of butter the size of a walnut melted in it added last. Mix well and bake in a slow oven.

Red Cabbage, Flemish Style.

Trim and quarter a red cabbage. Scald, drain and chop fine. Simmer for an hour in a covered saucepan with a tablespoonful of butter, a chopped onion, a bay leaf, two cloves, salt and a small piece of red pepper. Stir occasionally, take out the bay leaf, add a tablespoonful of butter and serve very hot.

Marshmallow Creams.

To a pint of whipped cream add a pinch of salt, half a cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of vanilla, two-thirds of a cupful of chopped English walnuts, a cupful of marshmallows cut in pieces and half a cupful of preserved cherries. Serve very cold.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Still Pond.

To play the game of still pond one player is blindfolded; all others are standing around him with one hand touching him. The blindfolded leader then counts very, very rapidly to ten and as he does so all the players run as far as possible from him, but the instant he says "Ten" he calls "Still pond," which means no more moving. He then says, "You may have three steps of grace," and he begins to grope his way to find one of the players, all trying to stand perfectly still, as the rustle of a garment would be a welcome guide to the leader. If he comes very near, the one approached may take advantage of the "three steps of grace" by moving that much farther away, but after that must remain still, except to sway the body away, without stepping. One foot may be moved, but the other must remain unmoved, or it is counted a step, and that player must count himself caught. When the leader finds and names another player the one caught must then take his turn as the blindfolded leader.

The Bird Roost.

"There is such a thing as having too many birds," said a bird lover, "and that happens when blackbirds come in flocks of thousands to roost in your shade trees. I once lived in a village near a big city, and you could almost set your clock by the arrival of the flocks at night. At 5 o'clock the sky was black with birds, many of them robins, most of them blackbirds. They came from all directions, and, though they didn't sing, they giggled and gurgled and told bedtime stories all the time they were getting settled for sleep—a matter of an hour or two when days were long. At 6 o'clock next morning there wasn't a bird in sight, but the boy whose bedroom was a sleeping porch said they started at daybreak with plenty of noise, chattering cheerfully and seeming to organize under flying orders."

Scouting Bee.

This game, which is practically the same as the old game of spelling bee, is played with the scouts choosing up sides and the scoutmaster asking the boys questions on scouting, nature or anything that the "prepared" scout should know.

In asking the questions the boy should be given a certain time to answer them (say one-half of a minute), and upon his failure to do so the boy next in line on the other side is given a chance to answer the same question. A boy so failing to answer a question receives a mark or point against himself, and three marks put him out of the game.

The object is to retire the other side.

Scouting to Build Character.

Every step in the boy scout program is but a means to the end of building character. The variety and interest as well as the practical knowledge insured by the tenderfoot, second class and first class tests, are after all but a means for holding the interest of the boy pledged to the scout oath and law under such leadership as will bring about character development. Likewise the whole scheme of merit badges is primarily for this same purpose. The form of troop organization, the scoutmaster and his assistants, the local council and indeed the national council and all of its officers are also but a means to this end.

The Great Missouri River.

The Missouri is one of the great rivers of the United States. Its total length is about 2,400 miles, and that part above the crossing of the Northern Pacific has a length of about 1,100 miles. The total area drained by this river is 527,155 square miles, a territory as great as that embraced in the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.—Northern Pacific Guidebook, Bulletin 611, United States Geological Survey.

Big Plant Seeds.

Seeds more than 7 inches long by 4.7 inches broad, growing in pods nearly 10 inches in length, have been collected by Henry Pittier from a tree he discovered during his recent botanical exploration of Panama. This tree is known to the natives as alcornoque. The wood from the tree is said to be better than any other for structures kept permanently under sea water.

Many Kinds of Ants.

There are more than 1,000 species of ants in the warm and temperate countries of the world. We in this country possess more than thirty kinds.

When Company Comes to Tea.

Now, Dolly, sit still in your little red chair,
So you'll keep your dress clean and not muss your hair,
For, of course, you must look just as sweet as can be
When company comes to tea.

And, Dolly, be good, be sure you don't tease
Or ever forget to say "Thank you" and "Please,"
For, of course, you must act just as nice as can be
When company comes to tea.

Now, there's sweeping and scrubbing and dusting to do,
All the dishes to wash—the tablecloth, too,
For, of course, everything must be clean as can be
When company comes to tea.

And then, Dolly, dear, don't you see, I must make
Pie, pudding and jelly and chocolate cake,
For our supper, of course, must be fine as can be
When company comes to tea.

LOVERS BEFORE THEY HAD MET

Romance That Began In a Siberian Prison.

It was my first night in a Siberian prison. But twenty-two years old, on the very threshold of life, and condemned to spend twenty years—from youth to the beginning of old age—in confinement.

Tick, tickety, tick.

Some one is rapping on the heating pipe which runs up to the floor above. All political prisoners know the code, and I was not long in spelling out the remainder of a sentence. The beginning I had lost.

I must condense two years into a few sentences. The rapper, occupying a cell directly above mine, was a girl, Anna Vronsky, the daughter of a university professor. She had been sent to Siberia for teaching the peasants. She had been placed in solitary confinement and at the time she made my acquaintance was on the verge of insanity. To save her I exerted myself to the utmost, encouraging her, telling her of escapes of which I had heard and of escapes I invented. For this sympathy she was grateful, and I was not long in turning her gratitude to love.

There is nothing like love to stimulate both hope and endeavor. I spent all my time in planning an escape both for her and me. Escape was not impossible, for the prison system was bad and the prison officials corrupt. It was recapture that I feared. To gain time after leaving the prison and by time distance I hit upon the plan of having dummies in our cells.

This plan I communicated to Anna, suggesting that when the guard brought her meals she should always sit in the same position and answer no questions. This was to get the guard used to what a dummy would be. Anna began the process at once, as I did. By our rapping code other prisoners told us that there was an hour, supper time, when one might walk out of the prison unseen; but, as Anna and I could not rely upon escaping at the same time, we were to meet, if possible, at a distant town where exiles having served their terms were permitted to live.

I made a dummy out of my mattress and my bedclothing. Every time my guard appeared I sat with my head bent on my bed as though in melancholy. I arranged by the code with a prisoner at the end of the corridor that at three coughs from me he was to shriek. One evening I gave the signal. The guard, without relocking my cell, hurried to the prisoner. I set up my dummy and walked out. I succeeded in getting out of the prison without being seen except by one man, who supposed I was a privileged convict. It was very dark, and I hid in a corner of the wall. I had noticed from my cell window a place where one could get on a low building with a chance of escape. Finding a piece of scantling in the prison yard, I used it first to climb on the building and next to reach the top of the wall, from which I jumped down and escaped.

My dummy must have worked successfully, for I was not pursued, and if pursued I should surely have been captured. I went to the rendezvous and waited there as long as I dared for Anna Vronsky, but she did not appear. Then I reluctantly made my way to Russia, stopping just beyond the border, where I remained under an assumed name. Indeed, my identity with my former self was unrecognizable. I made a living trading in furs and kept a lookout for escaped prisoners, from some of whom I hoped to hear something of Anna Vronsky.

It seems strange that a man should love and continue to love a girl he has never seen, but there was more between me and my fellow sufferer than between most lovers who had been brought up together. And this is the reason why I remained in what to me was the most dangerous position in Russia, near the Siberian border.

Six years passed. One day I went up to Kara bay to make purchases and on my way back stopped for supper and the night at a little farmhouse, the only occupants being an old woman and her niece. From the moment I saw the niece I felt that she alone could take the place of my imprisoned love. I chatted with the two women till the aunt went to bed. The girl was about to follow her when I, fancying from a sadness stamped on her face that she might have suffered as a political prisoner, tapped with a lead pencil on the table from force of habit, spelling words that I had often spelled in prison:

"Anna, I love you."

The change in the girl before me was astonishing. She turned first white, then a rosy red.

"Are you"—

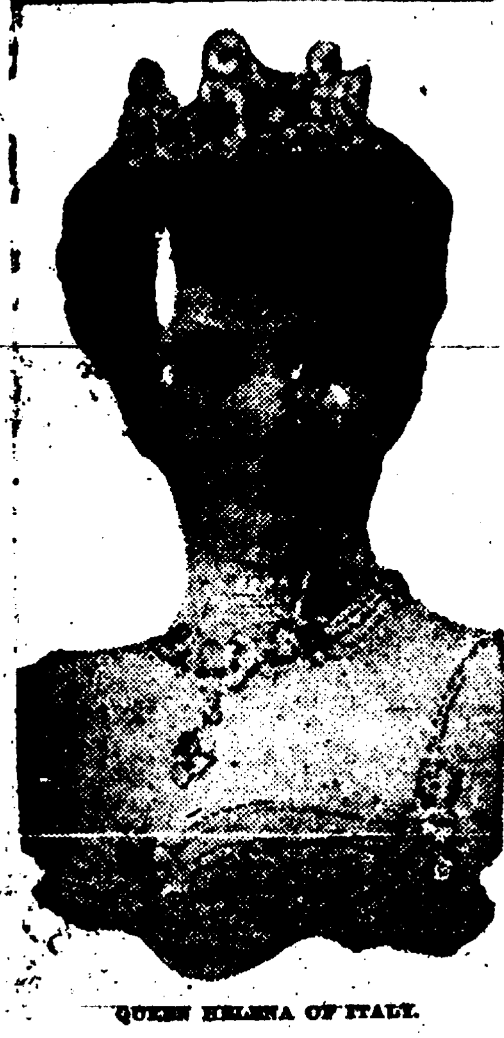
"Yes, and you?"

I started forward and clasped her in my arms. Oh, the happiness of that embrace! Except for our hearts beating against each other there was silence. Then I asked her if she would love the real as she had loved the ideal. She said she would.

The woman with whom she lived was no relation to her, and she had been with her only a few months. I took Anna away with me, and we have lived in a comparative wilderness for each other alone ever since. For a time not even our parents knew where we were, but at last we found means to inform them without risk to ourselves or to them. And now since the work we suffered for may be accomplished we are looking forward to the day when we may resume our identities.

Woman's World

The Queen of Italy as Mother and Relief Worker.



QUEEN HELENA OF ITALY.

When Helena, princess of Montenegro, became queen of Italy her first work of mercy was tending the wounded in a serious railroad accident at Castel Giubileo, near Rome. It was due to the queen's efforts that relief and rescue work were started promptly after the Messina earthquake and again during the recent Avezzano earthquake, when the work was harder, as medical supplies, blankets and provisions had all been sent to the front for the war then expected at any moment, and the relief of the earthquake survivors was almost hopeless.

The queen is an excellent executive, far surpassing the ladies of her court in her talent of organization. During the present war she has sent carloads of shoes and clothing to the children of the soldiers at the front. She personally selects all the materials, and they are of excellent quality, suited to the needs of the occasion.

She is the queen of another realm, too—her own household. There she shines supreme, for she has personally supervised the education of her children, all beautiful, every one of them. Naturally, the one son has had her special care and solicitude, for he one day will be the king of Italy. Indeed, she has so often said that if she can be as successful in the bringing up of the little Umberto as the Queen Mother Marguerita was in the education of his father it is all the reward she asks. The queen has four daughters.

Queen Helena never forgets how kind her charming mother-in-law has always been to her. The only regret of her life was when she was compelled to take the place of beautiful Marguerita of Savoy, who had been the idol of the Italian people for a quarter of a century.

"Still remain queen of Italy," she pleaded, "and let me be known as consort of the king." But Marguerita shook her head and, smiling through her tears, answered:

"Dear child, the dreadful fatality which bereft my husband of his earthly crown compels me also to resign mine. I am now nothing but a queen by courtesy, and I gladly surrender to you both the honors and duties of a station which no longer has any attractions for me." And Helena bowed to the inevitable with as fine a grace as any queen in all Europe.

MRS. NORMAN GALT.

Mrs. Galt will be the future hostess of Shadow Lawn, the beautiful estate at Elberon, N. J., which has been offered to the president as a summer home.

It is understood that the president consulted his fiancee before deciding to accept the offer of his New Jersey friends. He is going to pay for the house the same rental he paid for his former summer home in New Hampshire.

Shadow Lawn was built by James Carly of Long Branch in 1902 for John A. McCall, the insurance company president, at a cost of more than $800,000. The house stands on a knoll about fifty feet above the level of the ocean, which is less than a mile away. About it are fifty-two acres of wooded land of rare beauty.

Mrs. Galt has returned the calls of the Cabinet ladies who called upon her. Mrs. Lansing made a call immediately after the announcement of the engagement, as did Mrs. Lane, who has enjoyed a personal acquaintance with Mrs. Galt for several years. All the Cabinet matrons in Washington have now paid their respects to the future mistress of the White House, as have most of the women of the congressional set already in town.

One of the first of the congressional matrons to pay this compliment to the president's bride-elect was Mrs. Nicholas Longworth on her recent short visit to Washington.

The suit which it is understood that Mrs. Galt intends to wear on the wedding journey is a striking model in dull green duvetyn with a chin-chin collar and cuffs of beaver. The top of the coat is cut to fit the figure rather closely. There is a flare measuring four yards and a half about the bottom of the coat, edged with a wide band of the beaver. The coat buttons straight down the front and is worn with a very simple slightly flared skirt.

The prettier of the two afternoon frocks which Baltimore is contributing to the trousseau is a model in crepe georgette and taffeta of the same rich dull green as the suit. The model shows a strong Chinese influence. The skirt has five narrow flounces of crepe georgette, banded in taffeta, finely plaited and mounted on a crape underskirt. There is an underbodice of taffeta, flowered in dull rose, over which falls a Chinese sleeveless jacket of crape georgette exquisitely embroidered in self colored beads. The lower edge of the jacket is cut with several points which are weighted with tassels of the green beads. There are sheer sleeves of crape to the model.

SURE WRINKLE CURE.

How to Change Your Face From Ugliness to Beauty.

How can one get rid of disfiguring wrinkles satisfactorily? The remedy is so simple that few will believe in its efficacy, and yet in many instances it is so difficult to apply that many women after a few trials will give up in despair. But it is the only real remedy, and, what is more, any one can apply it right in her own home. The secret is this: Think pleasant thoughts, drive out of your head all ideas of evil, jealousy or rage.

The face reflects every emotion more faithfully even than a mirror. What you are, what kind of thoughts you entertain can be no secret to the world. All your ideas, whether for good or evil, are written upon your face for all to read who gaze upon you. Don't deceive yourself by supposing that you can dissemble, for you can't. As you think, so is your face molded.

Have you ever noticed how, even an ugly face, one that has few redeeming features, is made lovely to look upon by a pleasant expression, by a mouth that tells a tale of kindness, by eyes that look gladly upon the world?

If you are afflicted with deep lines which spread from nose to mouth you may know they come from discouraged thoughts, from a tendency to look on the black side of life. Pessimism draws down the corners of the mouth, makes the cheek sag dismally and gives the whole face a disagreeable expression. Change your viewpoint and note the difference in your face. In fact, cultivate optimism for six months or so, and then you may laugh at wrinkles, for you will find they have disappeared.

TWO FAMOUS RECIPES.

A delicious recipe for pumpkin pie consists of a pumpkin cut into small pieces in which the soft part and seeds have been removed. Cover and cook slowly in its own skin until tender; then remove the cover and reduce it to almost dryness, being careful that it does not burn. Press it through a colander. To two and a half cupfuls of pulp add two cupfuls of milk, one teaspoonful each of salt, butter, cinnamon, ginger and one tablespoonful of molasses, two eggs and sugar to taste. Add the beaten eggs last and after the mixture is cold. Pour it into an open crust, bake slowly forty to fifty minutes.

Even if a mince pie is not served for Thanksgiving dinner, the provident housewife will now prepare her mincemeat, that it may be well seasoned for the Christmas dinner. An ancient recipe for mincemeat calls for two pounds of lean boiled beef chopped fine, one and a half pounds of suet chopped fine, three quarts of apples chopped fine, one quart of stoned raisins, two cupfuls of cleaned currants, a cupful of candied orange and lemon peel shredded, a teaspoonful each of cloves, allspice and cinnamon, the grated rind and juice of two oranges and two lemons, two nutmegs grated, a tablespoonful of salt, a cupful of molasses, three cupfuls of sugar, three of brandy, one of sherry and one of cider. Mix the meat and suet together, then add all the dry ingredients and then the liquid. Pack in an earthen jar. The meat should stand several days before using and will keep an indefinite time. The pie should be made of good puff paste and bake for one hour and a quarter after being filled with the mincemeat.

A REAL "SLIP ON" APRON.

Easy to make and attractive to wear is this apron with front, back and sleeves cut in one. In gingham or unbleached muslin it is equally pretty.

Many of the "slip on" fashions are misnomers, but not with this apron of plain blue gingham. Cutting, sewing and every detail of its development have been reduced to a minimum. The front, back and sleeves are cut in one and the front is slashed and laced for a closing. In medium size the apron requires 3½ yards of 36-inch material, and if trimming is desired there is nothing more effective than a simple design of finishing braid.

The material is folded, full length, before cutting. Then the front and back section is placed on the lengthwise fold. The belt, pocket and underfacing are laid along the selvage edge of the gingham in the space where the short sleeve leaves a bit of surplus material. To the right of the front and back section the collar is placed, right along the lengthwise fold, and opposite this the large pocket.

Eyelets are used on the front through which the linen cord may be laced, but even easier are the little thread-covered rings which may be obtained at the notion counters. These are sewn on either side of the opening and the cord laced through them instead of eyelets. To make the apron, first slash down the fold at center-front from neck edge to large "O" perforation. Next, adjust underfacing to position underneath the slash edges, corresponding notches and edges even. Work eyelets at small "o" perforations, if eyelets are used. Close under-arm and sleeve seams as notched. Stitch a straight or bias band of material about 1½ inches wide when finished on lower edge of sleeve. Face collar and sew to neck edge, notches, small "o" perforations and center-backs even.

For the pockets, turn hems at edges of pockets at notches. Large "O" perforations indicate front of pockets; adjust to position on front, upper edges along crosslines of single small "o" perforations, stitching the small pocket on left front only.

Adjust the belt to position, center-backs even, and bring small "o" perforation at upper edge of belt to corresponding perforation in back. Close belt in front.

Made of unbleached muslin and stitched with wedgewood blue finishing braid the apron makes an effective design for house use.

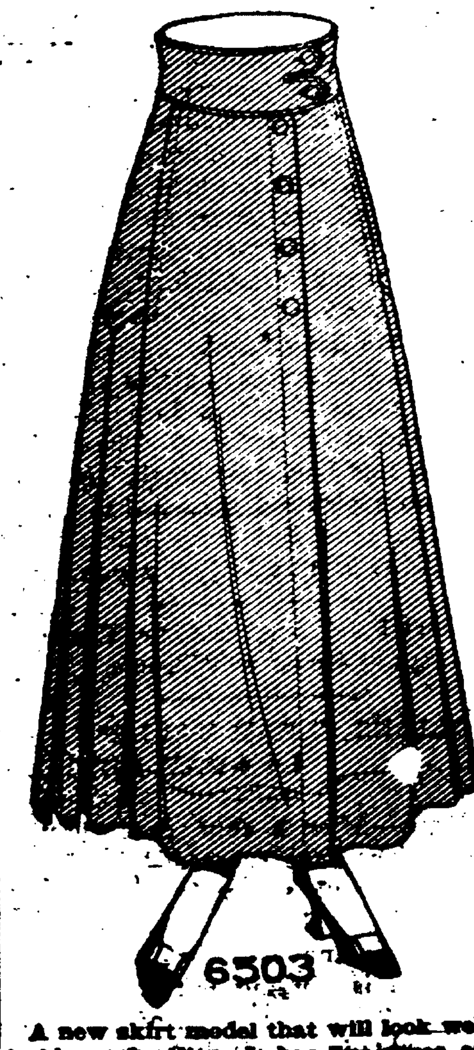
SERVICEABLE SKIRT OF STYLISH DESIGN.



A new skirt model that will look well in blue gabardine. It has five gores, an inverted pleat at the sides and pointed hip sections.

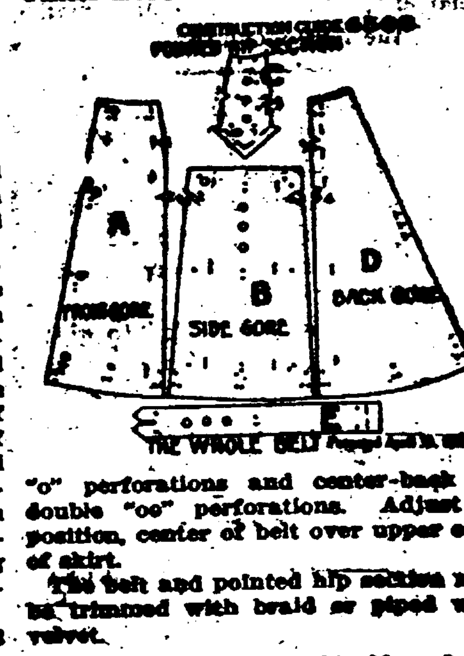
No one will deny that the separate skirt is always an important item in the wardrobe, but this year it has added significance because of the unusual number of original models that have been introduced into the world of dress. Here is a very likeable skirt of blue gabardine, although it looks well in any soft finished fabric. It is a five-gore design, the side gores having an inverted pleat at the center and a separate pointed hip section. Finishing the waist is a wide belt of self or contrasting material.

In medium size the skirt requires 3 yards of 54-inch material. If made without the high belt a quarter yard of material may be saved.

The home dressmaker will find this a simple model to put together. First turn under the front edge of front right gore on double "oo" perforations, lap on left front gore, with center-fronts evenly matched. The large "O" perforations indicate the center-front. Now, stitch to position, leaving edges free above single large "O" perforation for a placket. Form inverted pleat in side gore, creasing on lines of slot perforations, bring folded edges together on line of double "oo" perforations and press. Turn under edges of hip section on slot perforations; arrange on side gore, matching single large "O" and double small "oo" perforations and stitch ½ inch from folded edges; also stitch the side edges to position. Turn under edges of front and back gores on slot perforations, lap on the hip section and on the side gore to line of small "o" perforations, notches even; stitch ½ inch from folded edges as illustrated on reverse side of envelope and press.

Adjust 2 inch belting to position underneath upper edge of skirt for a stay; stitch upper edges together.

Now, coming to the belt, turn under left front edge on slot perforations. Center-front indicated by single small



"o" perforations and center-back by double "oo" perforations. Adjust to position, center of belt over upper edge of skirt.

The belt and pointed hip sections may be trimmed with braid or piped with velvet.

THANKSGIVING POINTS.

Oyster Stuffing.—An excellent oyster stuffing for turkey is made as follows: Take one pint of oysters, melt one-fourth cupful of butter and mix with one and one-half cupfuls of cracker crumbs, two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley and season with salt and pepper. Roll each oyster in the buttered breadcrumb mixture and then fill the turkey. The oysters may be chopped up coarsely and mixed with the crumbs if desired. It will be necessary to increase the proportions of this recipe for a large fowl to obtain a sufficient amount of stuffing.

Turkey Stuffing.—Allow three-quarters of a Vienna loaf, crumbed fine, to half a pound of the best sausage meat, one-quarter of a pound of butter, three well beaten eggs, a small piece of grated ham, a few filberts and walnut kernels and a quarter of a pound of fresh mushrooms, chopped. For flavoring mix in the rind of one lemon, salt and pepper to taste and some grated nutmeg, sweet marjoram and thyme. This recipe will be further improved by the addition of some truffles.

Thanksgiving Pudding.—Mix together a cupful and a half of molasses, one-half cupful of butter or two-thirds of a cupful of suet chopped fine and all strings removed, one-half cupful sour milk into which has been stirred one teaspoonful soda, a teaspoonful each of cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves, a pinch of salt, three beaten eggs and three cupfuls of flour sifted with a teaspoonful of baking powder. Mix well, add a pound of chopped raw prunes, removing the pits, and steam three hours. Serve with liquid or lemon sauce.

Pumpkin Pie.—For one pie allow two cupfuls of cooked pumpkin rubbed through a sieve. For this amount allow a small cupful of sugar a half teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and ginger, a nutmeg, half a teaspoonful of allspice and mix well together, blending in a pint of hot milk or preferably cream.

When smooth, cool and stir in two eggs previously well beaten and use the whole to fill a good rich paste. Bake for forty-five minutes.

Oyster Cocktails. — Mix together three tablespoonfuls each of vinegar, grated horseradish and tomato ketchup, four teaspoonfuls of lemon juice and a few drops of tabasco. Add the oysters, chill and serve in glasses.

THANKSGIVING VEGETABLES.

All the vegetables should be prepared, ready to cook, on Wednesday.

Squash.—Choose a hard shelled one. Cut in pieces and scrape the inside. Steam, then scrape from the shell and mash fine with butter, salt and pepper.

Boiled Onions.—Onions are often spoiled in cooking. Choose small white ones. Peel and cover with boiling water, in which one teaspoonful of soda has been dissolved for each quart. This removes a strong yellow juice, which otherwise discolors the onion while cooking. Drain, cook in plenty of salted boiling water until soft, but change the water as it grows dark. Dress wholly with hot cream or butter and salt and pepper.

Baked Sweet Potatoes.—Wash well and boil with skins on. When cooked let cool and remove skins; cut in thin round segments. In your baking dish put a layer of sweet potatoes, sprinkle with sugar, cinnamon and small bits of butter, then another layer of potato and so on until you have what you wish to use; then pour milk over all and bake in a slow oven.

Spanish Macaroni.—Fry onions in a bit of butter and olive oil until brown, add a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce and a teaspoonful of chili powder. Put a half cupful of macaroni into boiling water salted and cook until tender, about twenty-five minutes. Place the drained macaroni in a buttered baking dish and pour the onions and half a can of tomatoes over it. Mix well and sprinkle with grated cheese. Bake a half hour in a moderate oven.

Baked Sweet Peppers.—Make a stuffing of finely chopped cold meat, bread crumbs and enough milk to form a paste; season with salt and pepper to taste. Cut off tops of sweet peppers, scoop out seeds, wash and fill with stuffing. Put a small piece of butter on top of each pepper, place in a baking pan and bake in a moderate oven for three-quarters of an hour.

Would You Woo Sleep? Then Race Around Bed

St. Louis.—Two hundred or more members of the Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Hotel Members' Association this afternoon heard J. Leo Ryan, a Kansas City Councilman and a manufacturer of beds, explain how they might relieve persons stopping at their hotels who complained of insomnia.

The best thing to do when nature refuses to seal eyelids, Mr. Ryan said ,is to move the bed to the middle of the room and have the sufferer discard his clothing and canter around it at full speed fifteen time. This will bring about a slight exhaustion.

Should this formula refuse to work the wakeful one should be advised to take a long hot bath, drink a glass of hot water, relax muscularly, breathe deeply, fill a hot water bottle and place it on a convenient portion of the anatomy and let the mind become ab lank.

If some irrascible person should call the clerk and tell him both these remedies have failed, there still is another one.

The clerk should send up a thin head of lettuce. When this has been eaten and followed up with a hot sponge bath and cold clothes for the head sleep cannot fail to come. Or, if it doesn't—it will be almost morning anyway.

ALL IRISH DIVISION READY TO GO TO FRONT

London.—The Daily Chronicle this morning announces that the Sixteenth All-Irish Division, commanded by General Sir Lawrence Parsons, made up of Catholic nationalists and Ulster Protestants, has completed training and is ready to go to the front in the three brigades which form the division.

The officers include the brother of Mr. John Redmond, the Irish nationalist leader, Captain William H. K. Redmond, M. P., his son, Lieutenant William Archer Redmond, M. P., and his nephew, Lieutenant William Raymond Redmond; Captain D. D. Sheehan, M. P., [illegible] Stephen Gwynne, P. M.; Captain J. D. Esmonde, M. P., [illegible]utenant T. M. ettle, M. P. The division was eager to enroll the services of Lieutenant Robert Emmet, but his untimely death prevented.

Captain William Redmond, who is a nephew of the ate General Patrick William Redmond, is in the Royal Irish regiment, in which he served thirty-three years ago before entering the House of Commons. Two of his nephews— James and Thomas Dalton— are lientenants in the New South Wales contingent fighting in Gallipoli.

Captain Redmond, who is eager to fight for the empire which in this struggle represents world freedom, says:—"When the war broke out twenty thousand reservists from Ireland joined the colors. Now, counting the Irish from Canada, Australir and other colonies, four hundred thousand Irishmen are enrolled in Britain's armies.

Recently in the Tenth division, also all Irish, there was a call for 1,200 men to increase it to full strength. Every man in the three Irish brigades of the Sixteenth division volunteered.

BETTS SAYS ANDERSON SHOULD BE FIRED

Editor Charles H. Betts in last week's issue of the Lyons Republican says:

William H. Anderson, the saloon's ally, the wet hope, and the dry curse, announces that J. F. Burke has severed his relations with the Anti-Saloon League and retired from the field owing "to the demands of his family."

We thought when we exposed the political trickery and the political fraud practiced in Oswego county by Mr. Burke under the direction of Anderson that there would be some kind of a demand soon that would take him from this field of labor. When we turned the light of publicity upon the political trickery and fraud practiced by Anderson and Burke in Oswego county to defeat Speaker Sweet we knew that the intelligence and moral decency of the State would no longer tolerate such practices in the name of reform.

But in justice to Mr. Burke we must say that heh as been made the scapegoat. The real culprit in the political fraud and dishonest trickery practiced in Oswego county was Anderson. While Anderson compelled Burke to make a statement in the American Issue to the effect that he did the "dirty work" in Oswego county on his own responsibility, yet Burke has since admitted that he did the work under the direction of Anderson, that it was distasteful to him, that it was wrong and that he had concluded to sever his connections with the Anti-Saloon League because of the unprincipled tactics resorted to by Anderson.

These are facts that can all be substantiated and now that Mr. Burke has gone we supply want to say to the decent temperance people of the State that the interest of the cause of temperance, the interest of the cause of morality, thei nterest of the cause of reform, demands that the arch conspirator Anderson should also go, and the sooner the better for the temperance cause in this State.

Art in Sandwiches.

The hostess who learns the art of making sandwiches is always well fortified against problems when serving an informal luncheon to guests. Close grained bread should be used, for coarse bread will crumble, and bread baked in round tins is preferable to that cut into slices and cut with a biscuit cutter, since the baked edges preserve the shape. Very moist fillings should be laid between lettuce leaves, and by buttering the bread the moisture cannot penetrate it, making it soggy.—Exchange.

TEACHERS MEET NEXT WEEK IN ROCHESTER

Thanksgiving week in Rochester will see what probably will be the largest gathering of classical teachers ever held in the state. The occasion will be the first annual meeting of the Classical Association of New York State, an organization recently formed by the union of several previously independent societies. The general programme will last Tuesday and Wednesday, November 23d and 24th, and will contain many interesting and unique features.

Of the speakers expected, the most prominent doubtless is former President Taft, who will address the association Wednesday in American Life.' Mr. Taft has long been a staunch defender of classical education and his opinion becomes all the more important in view of his close personal connection with the practical problems of education in his professorship at Yale. Mr. Taft will speak before the Classical Association directly after his address before the general association.

The president of the Classical Association is a Rochester man, Dr. Mason D. Gray, head of the classical department of East High school. In anouncing the program Dr. Gray said it represented the combined judgment of twenty experienced teachers throughout the state who had been in constant correspondence on the subject for more than a year.

DOG'S HAIR LIP CURED BY SURGERY

Milwaukee.—Oxomian Maid, a bull terrier pup of royal lineage, has returned to he rownet, E. W. Bennett, after a two weeks' stay in a hospital for hare lip. This pup of the blood royal was as beautiful as a bull terrier can be, with the exception of the lip, which was badly marked.

The dog's owner consulted with a veterinarian, whose greatest problem was how to care for the dog so that she would not tear loose the stitches in the wound while it was healing.

The operation was performed while the dog's mistress was in a hospital, and the dog was cared for in the same hospital.

The dog was suspended for six days in a bag tied tightly about the dog's neck so that the dog could not reach her itching, healing nose with her paws until the healing process was complete.

ANOTHER AIR RAID ON CITY OF VENICE

Vienna, via London.—Venice has again been bombarded by Austrian aeroplanes. Official announcement was made here today that an aerial attacked military establishments of that city yesterday afternoon. The announcement follows:

"Navy headquarters announces that on the afternoon of November 18 one of our seaplane squadrons successfully dropped bomb on the forts at San Nicola and Alberoni, and on the arsenal, aviation station, gas works, railway station and several barracks at Venice.

"Notwithstanding the heavy fire of anti-aircraft guns and the attack of three hostile aeroplanes, our squadron returned with complete safety."

Alberoni and San Nicola are small points in the neighborhood of Venice

MAIMED PREFERRED IN FRENCH CIVI SERVICE

The measure was amended to give preference, among the wounded to fathers of large families. Another amendment, voted unanimously, reserved for disabled soldiers places in State monopolies.

INDUSTRIES BUSIER AS HOLIDAYS GET NEAR

New York.—Bradstreets' review of trade fo rthe week ending tomorrow will say:

Further progress in trade accompanies greater industrial activity, higher prices, better collections, increased demand for money, record bank deposits, sharp reduction in unemployment, heavier pay rolls, a big movement of grain and lower temperatures over a wide area, which latter has given snap to retail trade in seasonable wearing apparel.

Rain has helped winter wheat, and cold weather far South has put a period to cotton growth. Final purveyors, short of goods as they are, and feeling certain of sustained growth in business, are buying freely from wholesale houses as well as from jobbers. While ordering for future delivery is not neglected, the necessity of getting goods for near future use is very marked and in some sections of the country heavy weight fabrics are positively scarce.

Holiday trade is proceding on a satisfactory basis. Unemployment has dwindled to insignificant proportions, and numerous cities actually report a paucity of help, which is likely to become morem arked as the season advances, a development that is all the more remarkable because at this seoson outdoor work usually slackens.

DIFFICULT TO FORESEE PRICE FOR TURKEYS

Syracuse. —Will turkeys be scarce in Syracuse this year?

This question causes many arguments at the North Side public market each day and it is difficuls to obtain an authoritative opinion on the matter.

Many farmers contend that the rainy weather all summer had a detrimental effect on turkeys, while others claim the birds did not suffer greatly from the rain and they will be as plentiful this year as in previous seasons.

One gardener, who offered turkeys at 25c a pound yesterday said: "There is no doubt but that receipts will be fairly large, but it is feared that the proportion of well grown and plump birds suitable for holiday wants will be moderate." The offering of live birds was fairly large yesterday and sales were active at 25c a pound.

Other lines of poultry were plentiful. Live chickens sold at 14@16c a pound and live fowls brought 13@14c a pound. Live ducks sold at 15@17c a pound and live geese, 18@20c a lb. Dressed chickens were quoted at 22 @24c a pound, dresed fowls at 21@ 23c a pound. Dressed ducks and geese were not offered.

The egg market was active and the prices firm at 50@55c a dozen, Ducks eggs sold at 55c a dozen. The offerings in this line were small. Butter was more plentiful than it has been in some time and large sales kept quotations firm at 32@34c a pound.

ITALIANS CLEAR VALLEY IN 4-DAY BATTLE

Rome.—After a four days' battle the Italians have succeeded in clearing the Acqua valley in their campaign against Gorizia, according to a War Office announcement.

Gorizia is nothing but a mass of smoking ruins, as a result of the Italian bombardment; it is reported.

The fighting in the valley and on the heights, northwest of Gorizia, has been practically uninterrupted. It has been waged night and day with the Itailian troops slowly, but steadily advanceing.

The battle began last Saturday and continued until Thursday. The Italian strategy called for both frantal attacks against the strongly organized Austrian positions and a climbing advance along the sides of thev alley in an effort to surround the defenders.

Only a few of the Austrian soldiers who participated in the battle escaped the War Office says. Some were taken prisoners.

In one trench 303 bodies were found.

Gale Sweeps New York; 2 Dead; Many Hurt

New York.—Attaining a maximum velocity of seventy-one miles an hour, a terrific easterly wind swooped down upon New York city and its vicinity yesterday, buffeted pedestrians, smashed windows, tore signs from their fastenings, overturned wagons and wrought havoc with the shipping in the harbor. Two men were killed and many persons were injured in the resulting accidents.

Most of those injured were hurt by being struck by pieces of falling signs and by glass from shattered windows. Others were blown into danger by the force of the wind alone. Three persons were injured, one seriously, and a score more were placed in peril when an iron sign, fifty by thirty feet, was blown from the top of a building at Lafayette and Worth streets. Fragments of the sign pierce the roof of a subway kiosk there, causing a stampede to safety.

The wind played strange pranks near the Municipal Building and in City Hall Park. Five wagons were overturned near the Municipal Building. A motor truck was blown against a surface car under the new Chambers street arch. Miss Fannie Siles of No. 1522 Washington avenue, the Bronx, wasb lown against a railing in City Hall Park and knocked unconscious. She went home after being attended by an ambulance surgeon.

The most serious accident reported in the harbor was the collison between the freight steamship Corozal, of the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company, and the Andreas Gerakis, a Greek frieght steamship. The Corozal, blown from its anchorage, fouled the Gerakis Woodwork and railing were ripped off both vessels. The Morgan line, which holds the Corozal under charter, sent a tug which towed her to a new anchorage.

At City Island a dozen boats were blown adrift. The speed launch Blue Streak was blown on Sugar Loaf Rocks and wrecked An oyster sloop foundered off Carroll street, and the schooner Alfred sank off the yards of the Jacob Shipbuilding company.

SUPERVISORS PROPOSE NEW DOG LICENSE LAW

No more meetings of the Board of Supervisors will be held until Monday, November 29, at 8 p. m. At yesterday's session Mr Pierce offered the report of the committee on local legislation, recommending that the propsed licensing of dogs take effect January 1, 1917, instead of February, 1, 1916 The rule was suspended and the report adopted. Subsequently, Mr. Pierce offered an amendment to the resolution of Mr. Vant, providing for the application of a licensing plan in place of the taxation of dogs as heretofore, fixing the license fee at 1 for all dogs over 4 months old, and $3 for female dogs.

The cities of Fulton and Oswego are excepted in the provision.

By Mr. Vincent—That N. O. Marion be appointed janitor at the Court House and have charge of the grounds, etc., at a salary of $600 per year. Over one day under the new rule.

Mr. Soule offered the report of the committee to compare and foot rolls, as follows:

Over one day under the rule.

Mr. Vant offered the supervisors' poor report, town of Volney. Referred.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Alice Stone Blackwell cites the report of the U. S. Commissioner of Education as showing more efficient care of children as a result of voting mothers. It shows that every equal suffrage State, save one, spent on education more than the average for the United States, and that all save one spent ten per cent more of their total budget for this purpose than did the state of New York.

Polls taken in Vassar, Wellesley, and Syracuse University at election time returned handsome majorities for woman suffrage in each instance. Out of over a thousand votes cast at Vassar but 175 were against. Out of nearly six hundred cast at Wellesley but 136 were against. At Syracuse four hundred votes were cast with 173 against.

Women in colleges are representative of the best thought and conscience among women. That they are so strongly pro-suffrage ought to silence the time worn quibble about thrusting the vote upon reluctant women.

Beardstown, Ill., has gone wet and the women voted, They surely did. The press reports that fully ninety per cent of the voting population went to the polls. In Illinois the votes of men and women are kept separate. The count showed for the women a majority of 119 for a dry town, but the men's votes won the day for the saloons.

A statue on Trafalgar Square and a Cavell Home for Nurses are the proposed tributes in England to the nurse who was shot by the Germans. George Bernard Shaw suggests more lasting memorial. "There is a way" he says, "in which we can pay our debt to her. We can enfranchise her sex in recognition of her proof of its valor. If this proposal is received in dead silence I shall know that Edith Cavell's sacrifice has been rejected by her country."

The anti-suffragists interpret the defeat of woman suffrage in three states on election day as settling the question for all time. A glance at the histor yof the movement would show them they are mistaken.

Equal Suffrage won in Kansas after two defeats; in Washington the same thing happened; in California it was voted on twice; in Oregon six times. What the vote in November did settle was all doubt as to its early and decisive victory.

Eat Onions.

Regular onion eaters rarely if ever fall ill from infectious diseases, and they are singularly immune from practically all ailments. Onions, too, are a grand specific for the complexion. They should be boiled whole in milk—drink the latter—or steamed and eaten with bread and butter and cheese. Then they make a satisfying and nutritious meal, on which you can do brain work or manual labor. Try onions. The taste and after smell? A mouthful of hot coffee takes away both.—London Mail.

Pineapple Seeds.

The pineapple as ordinarily cultivated is almost seedless, seeds being so rarely produced that the great majority of growers have never seen a seed and believe the fruit to be wholly sterile. But it is possible to produce them.

Anglo-French Fleet Ready to Strike to Guard Troop Ships

London.—Despatches from Athens report that Lord Kitchener had more than an hour's conference with King Constantine on Saturday morning, followed by a brief interview with Mr. Skouloudis, the Prime Minister, and coincidently with the fateful call of Britain's War Secretary on the King the newspapers of Athens published extras containing the communique issued by the British Legation declaring in the name of the Quadruple Entente an economic and commercial blockade of Greece. The announcement caused a panic in all circles, as it is recognized the hour for Greece has struck. The King must now declare for the Central Empires, give to the Allies a satisfactory guarantee of the continuance of a benevolent neutrality or, by immediate action, prove that he is willing to submit to the wishes of the great majority of the Hellenic people by honoring the treaty with Serbia and ranging his army and navy on the side of the Entente, thus making for a Greater Greece.

An immense crowd that witnessed the arrival of Lord Kitchener at the Palace cheered Britain's War Secretary as heartily as it did Mr. Denys Cochin, Minister of France, thus evidencing that the heart of the Greek people is with the Allies.

Despite the pessimistic tone of the British newspapers there still is hope the King will go with instead of against his people. If he does Mr. Venizelos will be immediately recalled.

Whatever the outcome is to be, and we shall not have a long wait, the great Franco-British fleet is where it can strike hard and protect the allied troops in Serbia from Greek treachery.

Of the French and British troops no news has been received. Apparently they are only holding their positions and can no longer hope to render assistance to the Serbians except by keeping a large number of Bulgarians engaged. According to German reports an effort will be made by the French and British, to save the Serbian armies by sending troops through Montenegro and Albania, but with poor roads, it will take a long time for them to reach the battlefield.

Already the Serbians are making what may be their last stand near Monastir and also on the Plains of ossovo. The Bulgarians, is it true, are being held up by unfavorable weather conditions, but they must be almost at theg ates of the Macedonian capital by this time, while the Austro-Germans and Bulgarians are slowly but surely pressing back the northern army.

The Germans announced yesterday the capture of Novibazar. and are therefore on the direct road to Mitrovitza, which has been the Serbian capital since Nish fell into the hands of the Bulgarians. Other armies are pressing in from the north, then orthwest, the northeast, and the east, and even the Montenegrins, who have been joined by a Serb detachment and who held their positions for so long, are being driven into their own mountains.

GREECE WARNED AGAINST DANGERS OF BLOCKADE

London.—The economic and commercial blockade of Greece is heartily indorsed by all the newspapers this morning, this vigorous action being defended on theg round that the suppresion of the constitution by the King in defiance of thew ill of the Hellenic people and the sinister threats of Mr. Gounaris and other pro-German Ministers that the Serbians and Franco-British forces would be discussed and interned if they were forced to retreat into Greek territory warrant not only theb lockade but even more drastic measures to prove to King Constantine that his treachery will mean the end ot his reign.

This is the attitude of the conservative Daily Telegraph, which says:

"The Allies mean to have their way, and that, to rescue gallant Serbia and safeguard thel ives of the French and British soldiers who are fighting where Greece, honoring her treaty, should have shown

YOUNG PEOPLE TO TAKE TRIP TO CHICAGO; FAST SPECIAL TRAIN HIRED

Finding this city does not compare with Chicago in the way of wondrous sights, and that it is at times just a little dull, the members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, plan to leave here Wednesday evening for the western metropolis and relieve the monotony of existence.

While the train conveying the young people will be made up of Pullman cars exclusively, and as no advance reservations are permissible, it will be up to each traveller to be at the station at the exact time when the conductor yells, "All aboard." The leaving time is 8.11 and the place is Utica and 3rd sts., [illegible] points of trains passing through the city. In other words, if you don't get there on time, you needn't expect to get aboard the train.

The train will be known as the "Christian Endeavor Special," and it is hoped by the committee on [illegible] to reach Syracuse in time to partake of the noonday meal there, menu for this one meal will comprise blue point oysters, rolls, hermits, date gems, canvas-back ducks, pressed chicken, escalloped potatoes, string beans, peas, green tea and demi tasse (large cups preferred).

In order to maintain interest in the trip after leaving Billy Sunday in Syracuse and to prevent the travellers from jumping from the moving train, slips of paper are to be distributed, telling just what may be looked for in the great windy city. Here is the list of sights:

The Field museum, stock yards, south Water st., trip to the country to see a prize pumpkin, an alligator farm and the "milky way." The foregoing do not include all that is to be seen in Chicago, one of the omitted sights being a moving picture show, and another one, a photographic gallery.

[illegible] has been set for the [illegible] but it is assumed that the travellers will remain away from home until the expiration of the date of their meal and railroad tickets.

British Seize Another U. S. Ship Bound for South America

New York.—The American steamship Genesee has been seized by a British cruiser and carried by a prize crew into St. Lucia, British West Indies.

The Genesee has American registry and was flying the American flag.

She is the second American ship to be seized by Great Britain within a month. The Hocking, now in the prize court at Halifax, was the first. Like the Hocking, the Genesee was engaged in neutral trade, she cleared from Norfolk, October 14, with a cargo of coal for Montevideo. She was on the so-called British blacklist.

Immediately on receipt of the news here R. G. Warner, president of the American Transatlantic Company, wired a protest to Washington. He also instructed his counsel there to demand of the State Department a prompt statement from Great Britain as to the reasons for this renewed attack on the American merchant marine. Captain Rasmussen was also notified to cable at once full details of the seizure.

Mr. Wagner denounced the British act as an outrage and an open defiance of the United States.

"What can I say," he asked, "except to repeat that the American flag no longer has any standing on the high seas? Here is another one of our ships tied up, before the State Department has got any further than polite inquiries of Great Britain with regard to the Hocking.

"If ever a ship had a clear record it is the Genesee. She was built in England, and as the Avristam was run under British registry. Her British owners sold her to L. N. Condylis, of Andros, Greece, through a British shipping agency. Under the reek flag she was known as the Condylis. The Finland Steamship company, of Copenhagen, bought her from the Greek owners, Last June the American Transatlantic company bought her from the Copenhagen concern and renamed her the Genesee.

Mrs. Galt's Gown Not Involved in Action of Paris Dressmakers

Paris—The war, if not neglected, has been receiving only divided homage today, the Paris press being deeply interested in the incident raised by the refusal of the Paris Syndicate of Dressmakers to have any dealings with Mr. Charles Kurzman, who asserts he is here to buy dresses for Mrs. Norman Galt's trousseau.

Mr. Philip Ortiz, American representative of the Dressmakers' Syndicate of Paris emphatically denied yesterday that the organization was formed with any intent other than to protect Parisian designers and legitimate importers in America. He said that it was absurd to say that the organization was formed with any idea of declaring war on American importers or that its aim was to keep Paris thef ashion center of the world. Americans can excel in most everything, he said, except in fashion designing, in which the French will always take the lead. The drastic regulations required by the syndicate before an American importer can inspect Parisian dressmaking salons is entirely for the purpose of conserving Paris models.

Mr. Ortiz refused to discuss the incident concerning the purchase of gowns in Paris for Mrs. Norman Galt, the President's fiancee, beyond saying that heh ad sent her a telegram and expected an answer today. He said that he would like to see a statement from Mr. Charles Kurzman, who was quoted as saying that he went to Paris to purchase Mrs. Galt's gowns and who was refused admittance to the salons of the syndicate.

"The story of the information of the syndicate dates back almost three years ago when Mr. Paul Poiret, president of the organization was in this country." he said. "At that time, much to Mr. Poiret's surprise, he found gowns in shop windows of outside stores at prices ranging from $12 to $35 with his label on them. On inspection he discovered that the labels were fakes.

Continuing Mr. Taylor says

"It is ridiculous to think that Paris dressmakers and designers are declaring war on American importers. Every one in Paris knows that for several years following the war America will be Paris' best market, and the Parisian houses are taking every possible measure to extend their trade and friendly relations in this country. Every one may rest assured that nothing will be done by the Parisian houses to impair thef riendly relations which have existed in the past, exist now and which we trust, will always exist."

Invaders Take 500 Serbs and 500 Guns

London.—The Austro-German-Bulgarian subjugation of Serbia is nearly concluded.

Troops under General von Koevess have occupied Novi-Bazar according to the Berlin headquarters report today. They have taken 4,400 more prisoners.

Other groups have pressed back the Montenegrins, until they now are defending their last positions in the Sanjak. General von Gallwitz and the Bulgarians under General Boyadjieff are trying to force the valley of the Lim.

Berlin military experts declare that the campaign is rapidly being brought to a close. More than 80,000 Serbians and 500 guns have been captured, press dispatches assert, while German troops already are beginning to pour into Constantinople.

Field Marshal von Mackensen, commander-in-chief of the Austro-German forces in Serbia, is reported in a dispatch from Burcharest to be on his way to the Turkish capital. The new campaign against Egypt and the Suez Canal is believed imminent.

Their ranks rent and torn, their country all but lost, the Serbians are being steadily forced back to the great Kossovo Plain. On this historic battleground they will make their last defense.

The Serbians seemingly are handicapped by lack of food supplies. for each town and village captured by the Austro-German forces gives evidence of having been systematically ramsacked for eatables. This presents additional difficulties for the advancing troops who are obliged to depend upon their rear communications for supplies and cannot provision themselves in the occupied territory.

The appeal of King George V. for volunteers to save the country is at once pathetic and suggestive. The appeal is adressed to "my subjects" for "my empire," and so on. It is a monarch's call, not a national slogan. Others have appealed in the name of the nation and of the government and failed. The king's attitude appears like a forlorn hope, a last attempt to reach the heart of Britons. Will they rally for their king? England's monarch has long been a mere figurehead, and royalty is a survival, a decaying, not a constructive, force. The people maintain it as an institution contributing to national development. Fifty years ago, when the best of the civilized world was studying republican liberty, it was said by Englishmen as well as outside observers that the monarchy would probably die with Queen Victoria. But the queen outlasted that era, and new questions made the continuance of royalty necessary for peace. The war puts a new test upon royalty and gives it a chance to make good. A charm in the voice or person of the king on the throne which the nation would heed in the hour of disaster would make him ruler in a sense unknown to Britons for two generations. Such an event might enthrone royalty above politics and write a new chapter in English history.

The report of the Carnegie peace endowment commission on the state of war in the Balkans two years ago is timely. Referring to the atrocities, of which glaring accounts were printed at the time, the commission says: "The worst atrocities were not due to the excesses of the regular soldiery. The population mutually slaughtered with a ferocity heightened by mutual knowledge and the old hatreds and resentments they cherished." There will be more lurid tales of atrocities from the near east, and it is well to be reminded that the soldiery are not the only offenders nor the worst. The brutalization of soldiers is not the main count in the indictment against war. It also brutalizes civilians, women and children among them.

Among the various motives assigned for the great war acquisition of territory and trade expansion are conspicuous if not overpowering. When the war ends there will be the same motives at work among nations which lose, for all cannot win, and they will be well organized for the new commercial struggle. In that conflict the United States dare not be neutral, and this is the time to organize the forces which will be brought into play.

As to means and methods for national defense it is pertinent to ask what has become of the system of inland waterways which experts and commissions planned out years ago. As long ago as the civil war President Lincoln recommended to congress a military canal connecting the east and the west.

When the soldiers get home from the big war will they push aside the women mechanics, mail carriers, car conductors, policemen and the like and take their old jobs back or loaf, Indian fashion, and let the "squaws" do the hard labor?

The proposed work of adding letters to our alphabet and generally reconstructing the language will afford endless amusement for all, providing the reform stops short of sending busy adults back to their spelling books.

Game protection laws work fairly well for the conservation of bird and animal life, but [illegible] a killer just the same.

PSALM OF WAR

The War Lord is my shepherd; I shall always be in want.

He maketh me to lie down in mean trenches; he leadeth me into chill waters.

He harasseth my soul; he leadeth me into hellish combat for his fame's sake.

Yea, though I come unscathed from the shadow of death, I shall be no better off, for thou art still with me; thy tyranny and thy taxes discomfort me.

Thou preparest danger for me in the presence of so-called enemies, thou makest me useless toil; my cup runneth empty.

Surely evil and hatred will follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the army of the War Lord forever.—Ellis O. Jones, in Life.

COLD-BLOODED FACTS

If an argument were needed in favor of vocational education in the schools of this or any other city, it can be found in a recent number of a publication, "The Bricklayer, Mason and Plasterer," which says among other things.

"It may seem somewhat clod-blooded, but, according to statistics, the best way to stay out of the penitentiary is to learn a trade. It does not make so much difference what trade the boy learns; any trade learned and followed will have a tendency to keep the boy and later the man out of the penitentiary, if statistics are a criterion."

If one cares to inspect the result of investigations by persons who have made a study of the prison populations of this country he will find there are very few men with trades in the prisons of this country. Statistics show, for example, that where there are 177 persons confined in a prison, there is not a single member of any of the skilled trades to be found. Further searching in records shows that in the various penal institutions of one of the eastern states with a large population, 77 per cent of the prisoners had no trade or regular calling.

It is not the pleasantest thing in the world to swallow these cold-blooded facts; to think that our boys going out into the world unprepared with training in one of the great crafts is destined to fall by the wayside and become a charge upon society, and yet we are compelled to note the facts as they exist. It is obvious that men having a trade or regular occupation do not commit crimes to the extent that people do who are without training in useful lines of work or endeavor. Hard work and crime do not go hand in hand, but the person who wants to get along without working is the one who is bound to cause a lot of trouble in the world.

While there is nothing new in the suggestion, in its relation to this city, the time for making a start to secure vocational education in the local schools was never riper. This is an industrial town and all of us believe it is destined to grow to become a manufacturing center, yet we fail to do the right thing by the young persons who are forced in hundreds of instances to leave school at an early age to plunge into the great class of unskilled workers, whose terms of employment are unsteady and uncertain. We may not like to look the situation squarely in the face; we prefer to think our boy will be one of the exceptions; that he will get through life without having to spend five or more years in learning a trade, but we are taking a great chance.

We may postpone the day when we shall have vocational education in our schools, but we cannot shirk the responsibility, nor can we forget the proof afforded by statistics that "the idler's mind is the devil's workshop."

KULTUR

Various definations have been given for Kultur, or Culture, which seems to emanate from the German Empire. The word appears to cover a multitude of things all of which represent progress in various researches. Perhaps it is one of the many things which have been sifted from the Kaiser's many secrets, and found to be desirable—a lasting trophy.

And thinking of the word "Kultur" brings up what a man said to me the other day about the Manual Training Department operated in connection with the local schools.

"Why not place a paper machine or a loom or a lathe and files in the school, and turn out machinists for local consumption?" was his query.

Of course there was no answer, so I kept still and grinned, awaiting the gentleman to answer the question himself. He didn't.

I couldn't have answered it any way, because it was apparent that the state didn't foot theb ills for a loom or a paper machine, and from the way the city fathers pruned the budget every year, it would be difficult to slip even a lathe into the appropriation without close scrutiny. Besides, it is evident that the manual training department is doing its mite toward Kultur—and otherwise—far be it from me to question the deliberations of the Board of Education. So there, now!

But any way, the word "Kultur" has made an impression, or had one, upon the minds of parents who were unable to provide a higher education for their children. To provide at least the ground work for a trade or vocation for grade or high school pupils certainly puts the cult in culture.

In most colleges and prep. schools, today, the need of practicability in connection with a course is felt. For a number of years, a friend of mine, Mr. Cunningham, statistician of the B. & A. R. R., has conducted a class in railroad economics, in connection with Harvard college. This class makes a regular inspection of railroads. A street line in Massachusetts has donated a special car and the use of their lines to a class in a technical school in Worcester, Mass.

And so, if the days of apprenticeship are over, Kultur may seek to supplant— perhaps in name only. But let it come for, "it ain't such a bad animal after all," and may be attacked with all kinds of weapons—even a knife, fork or spoon—without objection from polite society.

THEIR ADVICE IS NEEDED

It is announced from Washington that the President is going to call to his aid some of the leaders of the opposite party in consultation regarding national defense. This is as it should be. Their advice may prove of great value. They can tell him a great deal about national defense. especially about the most important form of national defense, a Protective Ttariff. They can tell him that the first and most important thing to defend are American labor, American industry, American prosperity. Unless these are defended by the repeal of the Free Trade Ttariff and the return of full Protection, where is the money coming from with which to build warships, establish coast fortifications, buy guns and powder and pay soldiers and sailors? Oh, yes; by all means let the President get the advice of leaders of the opposite party. He needs it.—Economist.

OUR HODGE-PODGE EDUCATION

The extent to which education has been diversified in latter years is shown by the program of the New York State Tteachers' Association, which is to assemble in convention at Rochester next week. The teachers will be called upon to dabble in the following subjects, among numberless others: Subnormal and backward children, school journalisb, other kinds of journalism, citizenship training, vocational training, physical training, and hygiene, the training of non-English speaking aliens, newspaper English, industrial training, and they will hear a public debate on the question of equal suffrage.

One wonders whether the teachers themselves, let alone the young minds whose ideas are to be taught "how to shoot," can begin to absorb more than a smattering of these diverse, complex and highly specialized subjects; and just how much place any or all of them have in a system of public education of children. It may be wondered, also, whether the increasing diversity of educational activities may account for the failure of so many high school graduates to attain a parity in such common requirements for instance as the use and meaning of words, the spelling of the most ordinary words, the construction of sentences, a fair knowledge of geography, both local and national, and a working knowledge of civil government.

Possibly the answers to these questions which arise in the minds of the thoughtful parents and of many educators themselves would constitute a full and complete answer to Rev. D. M. Geddes of this city, who unless he is misquoted maintains that only children "unfitted or handicapped" by mental deficiency, so as to be unable to compete with their fellows in the public schools, should be sent to private or parochial schools. It might furnish also an answer to the question which has arisen in the minds of parents who have been wondering whether their children, now in public schools, would not be better fitted for the tasks of life in private institutions, where the number of fads and fancies and the complexity of inculcation are reputed to be infinitely less.—Auburn Adv.-Journal.

CASE OF JUDGE LINDSEY

In Denver the father of a 12-year-old-boy, named Neil Wright, was shot and killed. The boy confessed to Judge Lindsey of the Juvenile Court all the circumstances of the murder. The wife of the murdered man was charged with the crime. At her trial the boy testified that he himself had fired the fatal shot. The District Attorney assumed that the boy had told Judge Lindsey that his mother had done the shooting, and demanded that the Judge repeat the conversation. The magistrate refused, and the boy's mother was acquitted. Judge Linsey has now been convicted of contempt of court.

The District Attorney seems to have lost sight of the fact that if the Judge should be called upon to testify habitually he would have nothing of interest to report. For if he habitually divulged confessions, he would never hear a confession. In place of frankness and confidence he would meet, as pointed out the the Philadelphia Public Ledger, with suspicion and silence. The boys would hate him as a sort of super-detective with power to punish them unless they disgorged the information he desired. The Juvenile Court would become an infant inquisition, and no man of character would be willing to serve as judge-detective, tattle-tale-confessor. The usefulness of the court would be destroyed and the work of the criminal courts would be in no way assisted. The Ledger adds: "On the ground of public policy, it seems as if the Supreme Court of Colorado should reverse the decision against Judge Lindsey. As the case stands today, it may be technically correct, but it is one of the cases which make people believe that today most triumphs of law are mockeries of justice and most triumphs of justice are mocheries of law. In dealing with children above all other, the courts must remember that the law was made for mankind, not mankind for the law."—Utica Dispatch.

Art in Sandwiches.

The hostess who learns the art of making sandwiches is always well fortified against problems when serving an informal luncheon to guests. Close grained bread should be used, for coarse bread will crumble, and bread baked in round tins is preferable to that cut into slices and cut with a biscuit cutter, since the baked edges preserve the shape. WE'RE SENDING OUR CHILDREN TO THE JUNK HEAP—H. D. HERVE

(Auburn Citizen)

The public schools from the seventh grade through the High School are not offering equal educational opportunities to all the pupils of the community, according to Superintendent of Schools H. D. Hervey who in an article appearing in this month's issue of The Journa, the monthly publication of the State Teachers' Association, scores the present "undemocratic" system of education. Mr. Hervey points out several possible remedies for the condition which "consigns pupils to the scrap heap" in such large proportions.

"It behooves us as schoolmen to face this question earnestly and squarely, without fear, without prejudice, and without delay. It strikes at the very root of things. Fundamently it is this: Is the public school at once the child and the chief bulwark of democracy, true to the ideals of democracy?"

Thus Superintendent Hervey begins the article which is comprehensive and intensely interesting in indicating the changes which must come about in the conduct of the schools for the ultimate success of the educational system. In part the article follows.

"Democracy demands that every human being capable of being educated, rich or poor, bright or dull, strong or weak, old or young, shall be given his fair and equal chance for the largest measure of self-development, that each individual shall have a chance to become all that he has the latent possibility of becoming. It demands that no individual or group of individuals shall be sacrificed for the sake of any other individual or group of individuals.

"The enormously increased appropriations necessary to carry out the programme which this involves will be forthcoming when the necessity for these appropriations is made clear and when the people understand the significance of the changes which made these increased appropriations necessary. It is for us who are charged with administrative responsibility and who feel most keenly present educational shortcomings and needs to lead the way.

OPINION IS UNANIMOUS

"The foremost students of current educational problems are now practicaly unanimous in the belief that the demands of democracy are not being adequately met today in our seventh and eighth grades.

"Suffice it to say, that the fact that our present elementary school course is eight years in length is the result of accident, pure and simple. An eight year elementary course has no justification in psychology, logic or history. In no other country do we find an undifferentiated and inflexible course eight years in length. In no other country do we find the secondary course limited to four years. The normal 12-year old child, having acquired a working knowledge of the tools of learning, demands fresh subjects of instruction different methods of teaching, and more appropriate methods of teaching and more appropriate methods of discipline. The present waste of time, energy and opportunity in the seventh and eighth grades and the heavy losses due to withdrawal from school are due in large part to the fact that these legitimate demands of the adolescent have been ignored.

"A bare statement of the statistics of failure in our high schools is enough of itself to convince all but the most hardened that the high school as at present organized and conducted is a highly selective institution and is by no means adapting itself to individual capacity and need. A study of 16 large representative high schools, mainly in the Middle West, showed that an average of 28 per cent failed in algebra, 24 per cent in geometry, 23 per cent in Latin, 20 per cent in chemistry, English, French and physics, and 18 per cent in German; or a general average of 22 per cent in all subjects. The same study showed that the percentage of failure among first year students was 31 per cent.; of second year students, 21 per cent.; of third year pupils, 119 per cent.; of fourth year students, 14 pei cent.; or a general average for the four years of 23 per cent.

A COMPARISON

"A factory that consigned to the scrap heap from one-third to one-fourth of all its raw material would soon have to go out of business, and the American secondary school must find a method of preventing this frightful waste of the nation's human material or confess itself pedogogically bankrupt.

"The easy but brutal method of elimination as the sole means of maintaining standards of scholarship should no longer be tolerated in any enlightened Christian community. This does not mean that teachers should be less scholarly. It does demand that they shall b emore human. It does not mean that they shall teach subjects less. It does demand that they shall teach boys and girls more. It does not mean a lowering of scholarly standards. It means a truer conception of what a high school is for and what we are for.

"It remains to indicate in briefest form some of the steps that must be taken to make our schools the true instruments of democracy offering in reality, as well as in name, equality of opportunity to all. These changes are of two kinds. First, outer changes affecting matters of organization; and secondly, and far more important, those radically affecting the inner life and spirit of the school itself.

SUGGESTED STEPS

"1. The reorganization of the seventh and eighth grades, making it possible a differentiation of courses; different methods of treatment of the same subject for varying types of mind; and promotion by subject.

"2. The lengthening of the school day. The present school day, generally from four and one-half to five and one-half hours in length, is too short for effective work and the pressure on both teachers and pupils too great.

"3. Ceasing the present over-emphasis age for the four years of 23 per cent.

"The written examination cannot produce scholarship, nor can it create a genuine interest in learning. As a stimulus to either teacher or pupil it is an instrument of questionable value. As a means for measuring scholarship, it is always crude, generally unfair, especially to certain types of mind, and often totally misleading. It is an almost insuperable obstacle to true teaching, especially the teaching of cultural subjects. A uniform system of written examinations set by a central authority far removed from the pupils to be examined, cannot fail to be mechanical and arbitrary no matter with what wisdom and consideration such a system may be administered.

"4. The recasting and rearrangement of subject matter to meet individual ability, aptitude and need.

"5. Every pupil must have expert and sympathetic guidance in the choice of subjects to be studied.

"Here is a vast field as yet practically untouched. The great majority of pupils entering high school are as sheep without a shepherd.

"6. Finally the ideals of democracy must reign supreme in the hearts of all teachers. All changes of courses, of methods and of organization will be of no avail until equality of opportunity ceases to be a mere formula and becomes a religion; until the spirit of the Good Shepherd who careth for the sheep becomes the ruling spirit of the schools; until mere scholarship, of itself cold and forbidding, is warmed, transfused and transformed, by a glowing passion for humanity in them aking. There are already many such teachers. The rest will be as loyal to the newer ideals as they have been to the old when once they have seen the light. It is the immediate, the supreme task of educational leadership to make that light shine."

IMPROVE YOUR HOME GROUNDS

Make your home surroundings beautiful by following the laws of order and simplicity—is the keynote of a bulletin on home grounds which has just been published by the New York state college of agriculture at Cornell. Beautiful grounds can be obtained without a lavish expenditure of money and without a sacrifice of convenience. Since the house is the center of all home activities, too much attention can not be given to its location. If possible, the home should be set slightly above the land immediately surrounding it, but not too high; see that the view from the windows of the rooms most used are the best ones to be obtained from your particular location. Select your type of house with a view to making it fit in with its surroundings. A smoothly graded lawn is more easily mowed, as well as more beautiful. Lawns should be kept clear of flower beds and also of many single trees and shrubs. A little planting about a house, some large trees, with most of the plantings along the boundaries, looks best. Unsightly objects that are necesary, may be covered up with planting.

Do not chop up your grounds with paths, says the bulletin. Lay out walks with a purpose, that purpose being to make them lead somewhere, without cutting across a grass plat or spoiling the general appearance of a lawn and then make them beautiful with shrubs and trees that lend themselves to such uses. Oftentimes, these shrubs and trees may be of a fruit-bearing type, thus serving a two-fold purpose.

In the bulletin published by the landscape authorities of the college of agriculture are diagrams showing the proper arrangement of home grounds in relation to the house and out buildings, and a classified list of trees, shrubs, and flowers. A general description of each plant and tree is given, from which selections can be made with an intelligent conception of the general appearance of the tree or plant, its height, its foliage, its blossoms if it has any, and its habits.

A copy of this bulletin may be obtained by any resident of the state on application to the New York State college of agriculture, at Ithaca, New York.

Old Reapers.

Contrary to the common belief, reaping machines are not a modern invention. They were used nearly 2,000 years ago. Pliny, the Roman historian, tells of some he saw at work in the first century of our era.

JOGALONGS MEET THE CRESCENTS

Captain Eaton of the Jogalongs Will Steer His Team for the $2.00 Prize This Week.

The Crescents and the Jogalongs will be the opposing teams in tonight's game at the Onyx alleys. The Jogalongs made entry into the league last Friday and the following bowlers are on the team: Eaton (Capt), Stauring, Holliagsworth, Barria and Durst.

Manager Powell, of the Onyx alleys, has made several announcements in connection with the league which he desires made known to the members of the bowling teams. On Thursday night there will be no match in the City Series, all the alleys being kept open for the public patronage.

Mr Powell will award a prize of $2 to the highest scorer this week.

The team captained by Painter, which had the name of B. S. S. S. P. has been renamed the N. G.'s. From the standing of the teams at present it would appear that the name is misapplied as the N. G. team is leading the league and from indications it will take exceptionally good bowling on the part of the bowlers from the other teams to wrest the leadership away from them.

The standing of the teams to date is as follows:

	Won	Lost
N. G.	3	0
Crescent A. C.	2	1
Nondescripts	2	1
Jogalongs	1	2

It is likely that the Canastotans may also attend the basketball game at Maccabee hall where the 1st ward team will oppose the Maccabees in the first game of the season.

The Nondescripts will introduce a mascot in Thursday's game. While its indentity is being kept a secret, offhand information indicates that it may be a goose.

MASONIC BALL TO BE HELD THIS WEDNESDAY EVENING

The annual ball of the Masonic fraternity is looked upon by its patrons each year as the one bright spot in the early Winter social life of the city. With this fact clearly in mind, the various committees in charge of the ball, which is to occur Wednesday evening of this week, promise something out of the ordinary in the way of decorations and the supper that will fit in somewhere in the program. Ross Eaton will cater to the appetites of the dancers and those who attend the ball as spectators, and the orchestra of ten pieces will do its share toward making everybody dancing happy. The old Masonic headquarters in the Bradshaw block, are being transformed into a veritable fairyland, and the fact that the ball takes place immediately preceding a holiday is assurance enough that a large number of persons will be present.

UTOKA TRIBE, NO. 420 TO CELEBRATE FOUNDING

Toasts will be given at the dinner by a member yet to be selected, and by some ponses thereto will be made by some of the oldest members of the Tribe. The committeemen through whose efforts the celebration has been brought about comprise Joseph Dingle, jr., chairman, Edward McCormick, Ted Battles and Charles Church.

MACCABEES TO PREPARE FOR NEXT YEAR

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS FAIR OPENS TONIGHT

The big Knights of Columbus fair and bazaar which was scheduled to open Saturday night, in Oswego, had to be postponed, because many of the booths were not completed and decorations were not yet in place. The State's armory will tonight be a perfect bower of beauty, the decorations comprising hundreds of lanterns, flags colored lights and flowers.

The K. of C. band will furnish music for the dancing each night and a fee of five cents is all that will be asked for each set. Mayor Hennessey will open the fair tonight.

10,000 TEACHERS IN ROCHESTER

Two of Them, the Misses Lois A. Harrington and Cornelia Rice, Belong to Fulton's Faculty.

Rochester.—How many New York state best solve her immigrant problem? What must be done to institute a teaching in rural schols which will educate the pupils for country life instead of sending them flying cityward? Would military training of public school children build up a more sturdy and efficient citizenry, and what steps are necesary to pursue in the schools of the state to cerate a fundamental patriotism that will operate to preserve the country from war? Are the schools teaching English and preliminary subjects in a way that equips the students with an adequate knowledge for work in the business world? Is the supervision or play cared for by the right kind of directors and based on the right lines? Can there not be a better health inspection which will strike at the root of disease and graduate from the schools healthy young men and women instead of defectives? Are the teachers up to the high standard needed, and, if not, how may the best trainers of the state's children be obtained?

Thousands of teachers are coming to Rochester today and tomorrow to discuss these vital questions with some of the greatest educators in the country—between eight and ten thausand of them, it is estimated, besides their wives and children.

Estimate Seems Justified

Last year the advance registration was about 1,000; this year it is 4,500 plus. Six thousand attended the last convention, and, if comparison means anything at all, it is safe to predict that ten thousand teachers will attend the sessions of the Rochester convention, the seventieth of the New York State Teachers' Association and affiliated organizations.

Thev ast army of New York's school force presents a problem of quarterin gto tax the most capable of local committees, but Chairmon C. E. Kellogg, president of the Rochester Teachers' Association, and Joseph P. O'Hern, assistant superintendent of Rochester schools, have established a system of housing that assures that everyone will be cared for.

Both the State Department of Education and the association have sent personal fetters to the heads of schools throughout the state urging that every teacher be ollowed to attend the sesions with full pay for the time so spent.

The meetings will be addressed by United States Commissioner of Education P. P. Claxton, John H. Finley, president of the University of the State of New York and state commissioner of education, and noted university professors. William Howard Taft, Talcott Williams, head of the School of Journalism of Columbia University, and that versatile writer and inventor, Hudson Maxim, feature the array of outsiders scheduled to participate in the convention.

Delegates Meet This Afternoon

The first meeting of the convention will be that of the House of Delegates at 4 o'clock this afternoon in Convention Hall. After the appointment of committees and outline of future sessions, the meeting will be addressed by Thomas E. Finegan, deputy commissioner of education. Mr. Finnegan will speakon "The Relation of the Normal Schools to the State's System of Education." This House of Delegates has 205 regular members and five alternates, or one from each supervising district.

Convention Hall will welcome the first general meeting of the teachers this evening at 8 o'clock. Mayor Edgerton and Superintendent of Rochester Schools Herbert S. Weet will greet the visitors. The response will be made by Dr. Finley, who is expected to make a speech of vital interest to the teachers and the public. He will outline thep lans and hopes of the State Department of Education and disecuss briefly problems facing educators. Dr. Finley will be followed by United States Commissioner of Education Claxton. Mr. Claxton has systematically investigated the rural school problem and his address is awaited by the teachers as a treat. This will undoubtedly be the only meeting of the convention open to the public as there are enough visiting teachers to fill all the space at Convention Hall.

The central churches and schools have opened their doors for the various section meetings tomorrow and Wednesday, which include the following sections: American School Peace League, classical, commercial, elementary school principals and teachers, elocution English, evening school, fine arts, household arts, history, hygiene and physical education, immigrant education, industrial arts, kindergarten, library, modern language, music, normal, and training school, penmanship, rural education, school administration, school journalism, science, and subnormal and backward children.

The teachers are expressing much interest in the junior high school experiment by Rochester. This will be discussed and the Rochester educators believe that the idea will be adopted throughout the state. This city will also figure in the discussions on immigant education. The immigrant must be educated if the United States is to maintain its place among nations and the educators believe that the evening schools can fulfil this duty best. Papers on this subject will be read by principals of New York city evening schools and men and women who have made this phase of educational work a study.

Mr. Claxton will lead the discussions on rural education, another vital issue at this time when the government is realizing that something must be done to keep its tillers of the soil at that work. The problem is to furnish a teaching in the country schools which will train the young men and women for agriculture and not keep city life foremost in their minds.

These are only what appear to be the high points to be considered in the sessions. The European war has shoved the question of military training in the public schools into the teeth of the educators for decision. German efficiency is due to her militarism, it is claimed, and yet the educators hesitate about advising such training in the public schools. Then, there are the questions of health, supervised play and practical business education to be thrashed out. The claim is made tha tthe schols are turning out boys and girls that can neither spell nor write good English. Believing that reason exists for this charge, the association will endeavor to smoke out its cause.

The principal officers of the association are: President, Alfred C. Thompson, of Brockport; vice president Myra L. Ingalsbe, of Hartford; secretary, Richard A. Searing, of North Tonawanda; treasurer, W. H. Benedict of Elmira.

JEFFERSON CO. MAY LOSE ONE ASSEMBLYMAN

Watertown.—The re-adjustment of the assembly districts throughout the state upon the last census reports may result in Jefferson county losing one of its assemblymen. The distribution of assemblymen throughout the state is based upon the population of thev arious counties.

In the last redistricting Jefferson county nearly lost one of its districts and Oswego was reduced to a single assemblyman. It is feared that under the new division Jefferson will likewise be confined to a single representative. The redistricting becomes effectiveyear after next. Local politicians admit that there is quite a possibility that Jefferson will lose an assemblyman.

There will be a primary this next April, the election law providing for such a meeting every year that a president is to be elected. Brooklyn is said to be sure of an extra assemblyman and New York will also gain one. The duty of determining the ratio on which asemblymen shall be named devolves upon the next legislature, and in order that the redistricting can be done before the new committeemen are elected in April, it will have to take up thew ork early in January.

"What we see we believe." The Evening Times press believes you would be satisfied if your stationery bore its imprint.

TO STANDARDIZE LETTER BOXES

Two Sizes Required on Rural and Star Routes; Rule Effective Next July.

The postmaster general has issued an order standardizing rural and star route mail boxes. The specifications adopted provide for boxes in two sizes, the one 18½ inches longj 6 1-4 inches wide and 7½ inches high, and the other 23½ inches long, 11 inches wide and 14 inches high.

The smaller of the two boxes is slightly larger than the box now in use, though in general respects the requirements for this new box and for the old ones are much larger than those now in use on rural routes and is designed to supply the needs of patrons who are regular mailers of parcel post and find the present box too small for their purpose

The new specifications for both types of box provide for coin holders to assist carriers in the collection of money left by patronc for postage. At present, when the patrons of rural or star routes do not have stam to cover letters or parcels left for collection, the practice is to leave the money loose in the box. This involves waste of time and effort by the carrier, while reaching into many boxes on his route to be certain whether money has been left in there, and, if so, to collect it all.

All such deposits will now be placed in th ecoin holder. This will be a simple device of galvanized iron and riveted to the left of the inside of theb oxfl.

All mail boxes put in service after July 1, 1916, by patrons of rural or star routes must conform to the new specifications. Manufacturers of mail boxes who desire the authorization of the use of their boxes upon rural and star routes will be required to submit for approval a sample box of each size. The manufacture of boxes shall be deferred until the receipt of notice that the sample has been approved by the department.

The box must be painted with a coat of aluminum bronze, covering all outside surfaces, except the flag signal. The latter which will serve to give notice whether the box contains mail for collection, must be painted on both sides with two coats of red paint. The words "U. S. Mail, Approved by the Postmaster General," in well defined letters and uniformly spaced must be embossed upon the door of each box. The box owners' names must be stenciled in black letters not less than one inch high on both sides of the boxes.

POOR OUTLOOK FOR NEW POTATO SEED

The outlook for reliable seed for next spring's potato planting is extremely precarious, according to the farm crop experts at Cornell, who state that growers in New York, knowing their crop to be entirely free from blight, will find ready sale and good returns from it for seed purposes.

They say that Franklin, Clinton and Erie counties comprise practically the only sections of New York State not badly affected by late blight and rot. Even these counties were not entirel yfree from this disease. The surplus crop of these counties, it seed which may be obtained from Maine, Michigan and Wisconsin, is is understood, will be marketed in other parts o fthe statef or sed.

It is further stated that even the likely not to be free of disease unless it s so guaranteed, inasmuch as each of these states was affected with blight.

PROBLEMS OF MUNICIPALITIES

City League and Societies to Meet at Dayton.

How shall we run our municipalities? is a question that is pressing upon every man, woman and child who lives in what is legally known as a city or town, and on every one in the country, for that matter, because the municipalities are so closely bound up by railroad tracks, telephone and telegraph wires and a hundred and one other interests with the districts round about.

It is to answering this question that the National Municipal league and its allies will address themselves in Dayton in "municipal week." The league fixed its annual meeting for Nov. 17-19. Then the City Managers' association, of which Henry M. Waite, the efficient city manager of Dayton, is president, determined to meet at the same time so as to get the benefit of contact with long time students of the problem. Then the Ohio Municipal league decided to meet in Dayton in the same week, and finally the Ohio Civil Service Reform league took the same action. The appropriateness of the latter body meeting in the same connection is obvious, as one calls to mind that the question of selecting experts and employees to carry on municipal work is one of the most difficult with which administrators have to deal,

The great big question before the National Muncipal league will be the adoption of a model charter upon which the muncipal program committee has been at work for two years and more. This charter will embody the city manager plan and the utilization of business methods and experts in the management of the municipality. This committee is composed of twelve men who have studied the municipal problem from every conceivable angle. Some of them have had actual experience in city government, some in state government, others have had experience as civil service commissioners, some are college professors, some are public utility experts, another is the editor of an engineering magazine, so that when the committee speaks it is with the voice of experience and authority. President William Dudley Foulke of the National Municipal league is chairman of the committee.

Civic education will be another feature that will come up for extended attention. This is a subject to which the National Municipal league has devoted years of patient study through a series of committees.

In discussing this question at Dayton the league will have the active cooperation of the Urban Universities association, a body of which Charles W. Dabney of the University of Cincinnati, a vice president of the league, is president.

There will be a long list of committee reports involving such questions as the relation of the city to its food supply, franchises, immigration, municipal reference libraries and political methods up for consideration.

These annual conferences are of the greatest value to all municipal workers, bringing together as they do leaders in various lines of civic activity.

Another one of the important committees of the league is the civic secretaries' committee, which is composed of the men and women who are serving as secretaries of the leading civic bodies in the country. Once a year they get together to discuss matters of the greatest importance to the conduct of organized civic work.

This "municipal week" will be of far reaching importance not only because of the program to be discussed, but of the personnel of the speakers and the character of the organizations which are to be represented. Henry M. Waite, the city manager of Dayton, is at the head of the arrangements and will take a leading part in the meetings.

YOUNG SEALS NOW PLENTY.

The Protective Law of 1912 Has Done More Than Was Expected.

That the fur seals of the Pribilof islands have so increased since the passage of the protective law of 1912 that the resumption of limited commercial sealing is advisable for the welfare of the seal herds is the conclusion of the special commission sent to the islands last summer by the bureau of fisheries of the department of commerce.

The law of 1912 provided that the killing of all seals, with the exception of a few needed by the natives of these northern islands, should be stopped for five years and that 5,000 three-year-old males should be maintained as an annual breeding reserve during the life of the treaty suspending pelagic sealing which was concluded by the United States, Russia, Japan and Great Britain in 1911.

The commission finds that the law of 1912 has fully done what was expected of it, the annual herd of pups during 1914 being almost twice as large as it was in 1909. The commission has reached the conclusion that there is a considerable overstock of male seals and that "this constitutes the principal undesirable feature of the herd as found in 1914. The welfare of the herd demands that some of them should be killed in 1915."

This year there are available to be killed 31,751 males, from whose skins the government could get a revenue amounting to $932,745, whereas the continued suspension of sealing will bring about a useless and even harmful excess of males and a minimum loss in skins of $2,700,000 to be divided among the nations involved.—Outlook.

Making Coffins of Glass.

Made of two pieces, which are bound together by heavy metal bands, a glass casket has been invented which will soon be introduced for burial purposes. This serves both as a coffin and vault, as it requires no protection against the chemical action of the earth. When closed it is hermetically sealed and is proof against both air and water. The two sections are molded in heavy glass, which gives the casket great strength. Its general form is the same practically as that of other burial receptacles. The chief point advanced in its favor is its obvious qualities of durability.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Green Proper Color For Freshmen.

"Resolved, That green is the proper color with which to adorn the members of the freshmen class of Hamline university.

"Resolved further, That since heads are the most conspicuous portion of the anatomies of said persons green caps shall cover the domes of all freshmen hereafter and that the caps be decorated with a button."

This, in effect, is a resolution passed recently by the student council of Hamline university.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Wild Buffalo Increasing.

Government authorities of Alberta, Canada, have made as reliable a census as possible of the wild buffalo of the province and announce that the number is not less than 400, probably nearer 500. The greater portion of these range in northern Alberta and the remainder in the Mackenzie district. Hunting, of course, is prohibited. The Royal northwest mounted police have the animals under their protection, and any infraction of the law protecting them is severely punished.

Artificial Coffee.

A young Japanese in Hyogo is reported to have invented artificial coffee almost equal in every respect to natural Brazilian coffee. As the result of chemical analysis by experts it is said that the goods now manufactured by the young inventor are more wholesome than the natural bean, while retaining all its flavor and quality.

Diamond Back Terrapin.

To select a real diamond back terrapin amateurs should be guided by these distinguishing and characteristic markings: It is of a greenish, dark olive color, sometimes running to spotted gray, yellow on the plate which surrounds the shell and has concentric dark stripes along the plate on both shells. The sides of the head are a dirty white, sprinkled with small black spots. The bottom shell is of whitish yellow. The males are much larger than the females and have the concentric streaks much better defined. The female has the more delicate flesh. The male can be distinguished by his toe nails, which are much longer than those of the female.

The Comparison.

Dropping into the Garrick club one afternoon, Charles Brookfield, the dramatist, found a well known actor, who happened to be playing David Garrick at the time, reclining in a chair right under the portrait of the immortal "Davy." Brookfield stopped in front of him and looked first at the portrait and then at the man. "By Jove, old fellow," he exclaimed at last, "you grow more and more like Garrick every day!"

"Do you really think so, Brookfield?" returned the delighted victim.

"Yes," came the crushing retort, "and less and less like him every night."—London Tatler.

Fun For the Tar.

A New Jersey hen spying a barrel of fine, soft tar, alighted thereon and laid an egg. There resulted a firmly bound sandwich, tar, egg and chicken in the order named. A woman and a man, who went to the rescue, were also held fast by the hands until the police were called and effected a rescue.—Exchange.

WON HIS SPURS BY ACCIDENT

Good Luck Helped a Soldier to High Place.

Several "vets" of the civil war were comparing notes as to the why and wherefore of their advancement during their term of active service. All gave accounts creditable to themselves till it was the last man's turn, when he told the following story:

I enlisted in the ranks with the rest of the boys I knew in 1861. I didn't seem to have been cut out for a soldier. I was not easily disciplined. I was always straggling, and drills were to me intolerable. The only time I could be relied on to show up for duty was when there was fighting, and then it was not because I liked it, for I didn't, but because I dreaded the sneers of my comrades. Nobody ever thought for a moment of my even being made a non com., much less decorated with a shoulder strap.

Well, one day when we were cavorting around in Virginia, marching in one direction one day, another the next, never still forty-eight consecutive hours, not having had regular rations for some time, I got hungry and took the first opportunity to drop out and do a little foraging. I passed a house beside the road with a door leading down into a cellar. I tried it and found it unlocked. So I opened it and went in. There was nothing in the place but a girl, one of the southern girls of the period, with an olive complexion and hair cut square around her neck. She was washing something.

"What d'y' want?" she asked.

"I'm looking for something to eat," I replied. "I saw the door opening on to the road very convenient, so I thought I'd just step in and see what I could find."

"That's just the way that door has looked to all the stragglers in the army," she replied. "There's not been less than 5,000 men come in here. At first we had some provisions, but they were soon eaten up by soldiers, so we didn't put any more here. We don't keep the door locked because it would be kicked open. Are there any of your men near by?"

"Guess not," I said.

"Well, if there ain't I don't mind showing you where we keep our eatables. Do you see that wall? That shuts off a part of the cellar. Come upstairs and I'll show you how to get into it."

I went up to the floor above, and the girl opened a trapdoor. I went down and was looking about for a snack when I heard the door shut and locked.

There was no getting out, so after awhile I stretched myself on a table and went to sleep. I was awakened by a trampling above. The cellar was dark, so I knew it was night. Hearing the clank of a saber, I listened to discover if some of our men hadn't come in. They were not Federals, but Confederates of high rank. I could hear every word they said. It was a council of war. When at last they settled on a plan to concentrate and attack our forces they went over each detail again and again to be sure there should be no mistake. While they were doing it I was fixing it all in my memory so that if I got out in time I could warn our general.

In the morning the trap was opened and a couple of Confederate soldiers took me in charge. The girl wasn't there, but an old man and woman seemed to know all about my having been trapped. I doubt if either of them knew that their living room and kitchen had been used for a conference. I'm not sure they knew I was there when the conference was held. The soldiers took me away, and on the road we met the girl who had trapped me. I asked to speak to her and told her I had a watch in one of my pockets and would give it to her if she would get me off. Her eyes sparkled, and she agreed to try. She sent one of my guards to a house where she said they had a stock of hams and while he was gone managed to get the other one's musket, which she playfully fired at a tree. I ran up and took it from her, she only pretending to resist. The owner, seeing that I had the advantage of him, ran away. Then I gave the girl my watch, as I had promised, and took to the woods till I ran across some of our men.

While I was on my way to the general with my information I wondered how I would explain my being made a prisoner without giving away the fact that I had been straggling. Then it occurred to me that my story wasn't very probable anyway. Why didn't the old folks tell the generals that a Yankee soldier was imprisoned in the cellar? Why didn't the girl ask the soldiers to take my watch instead of getting me away from them in order to get it? I can't to this day explain the first, and the only explanation I can give of the second is that the girl didn't want any other claimant for it.

I made up a cock and bull story about having gone to sleep from exhaustion on the march and on waking up had found a chance to do some scouting. I called for a map and showed just where certain Confederate forces were located and how they could be concentrated. The information was acted on, and when the attack came our men were ready for it.

The result of all this was that I was given a commission and a place on the staff of the general commanding, with charge of the scouts. During the rest of my army service I told lots of men how to scout, and after my remarkable feat in that line they all believed I was fully competent to instruct them.

For the Children

Crown Prince Humbert, Heir to Italian Throne.

Crown Prince Humbert of Italy, King Victor Emmanuel's son, was eleven years old Sept. 15 last. Recently the prince has been very happy because he was permitted to become a member of the boy scouts. Last July at a fete given to raise money for the Red Cross he was guarded by an escort of boy scouts.

At the close of the afternoon he complained to his mother that he had been made to act just like a girl. He wanted to be a boy, like other boys, and nothing would satisfy him but permission to don the boy scouts' uniform, exchange his handsomely trimmed sailor cap for their broad brimmed brown hat and carry the staff.

A few days later the prince was initiated in the gardens of the Villa Savoy when Queen Elena received the chief officers of the scouts and then reviewed a detachment of the boys, her son taking up a proud position in the middle of the first line, his black eyes bubbling over with delight as he gave the salute and went through the movements. It was explained that his tutor, Commander Bonaldi, had been training him in the meantime and that the boy had been assiduously practicing so as to be able to show as much skill in the maneuvers as his comrades.

Boy Policemen.

America has one city wherein boy policemen are doing real work. The city is New York, and the organization is known as the Junior Police Force of the City of New York.

Good results have already come from the union of these 300 or more youngsters, who are banded together to uphold the law, maintain order and keep clean the streets near the Bowery.

Captain John Sweeny of the regulars, who heads this force, says that bonfires have been reduced 98 per cent in the district, complaints of disorderly street gatherings have been cut to less than half, street cleaning has been made lighter, fire escapes cleared, garbage cans put in order and cigarette smoking made unpopular.

The boy policemen are all working toward good citizenship.

"Judge and Jury."

An enjoyable game for a party is judge and jury. The players or jury form up two rows facing each other. The judge sits at one end and asks questions. These may be of any description. Perhaps he will say, "Miss A., do you think it will rain tomorrow?" Now, although the judge addresses Miss A. and looks at her, it is not she who must answer, but the player opposite to her. And he, in his answer, is not allowed to say either "Yes," "No," "Black," "White," or "Gray." If the player who was addressed answers she becomes judge, and the judge takes her seat, or, if the opposite player does not answer before the judge has counted ten, he becomes judge, and the judge takes his seat.

The Kitchen Cupboard

Thanksgiving day is a festival for home going, for a reunion of families. It is interesting to have as many old fashioned dishes as practicable, with some modern ones.

In the center of the table place a rose bowl, filled loosely with roses, or if these are not available the bowl can be filled with carnations, which are inexpensive. A few pots of chrysanthemums, which are in the'r prime, arranged in the dining room add much to the pleasure of the guests. A few trailing vines cut from the garden before injured by the frosts can be kept fresh several weeks by putting the ends in deep dishes of water. Use them to decorate the table.

Oysters on the Half Shell.—Wash the shells and wipe dry. Just before serving open them carefully and remove the upper shell; serve half a dozen on an oyster plate for each person, with a quarter of a lemon in the center of the plate. Spread thin slices of brown bread with a little butter, cut the slices in fancy shapes and serve with the oysters.

Roast Turkey.—Clean and stuff turkey with soft bread or cracker crumbs highly seasoned with sage, thyme, salt and pepper. Moisten the stuffing with half a cupful of melted butter and hot water enough to make it quite moist. Add a beaten egg, a dozen oysters and half a cupful of chopped celery. Put the turkey on a rack in a pan, rub well with butter and dredge with salt, pepper and flour. Put in a hot oven, and when the flour is browned reduce the heat and add a pint of water. Baste with butter until nicely browned, then with the fat in the pan. Baste often and dredge with salt and flour after every basting. Allow three hours for an eight pound turkey. Cook till the legs will separate from the body. Prepare the gravy and garnish the turkey with parsley or celery leaves.

Fish Souffle.—Any good fresh fish which has white meat makes a good souffle. Trout are very nice and easy to prepare, as they have no scales. Dress one which weighs about two pounds without the head, wrap in a cloth and cook in boiling salted water twenty minutes. When done take out and set away to cool; then pick the fish into flakes with a fork, rejecting the skin, and be careful not to get any bones in. Put half a pint of milk in a double kettle; add half a cupful of fine breadcrumbs without any crust, mix together two tablespoonfuls of butter and one and a half of flour until smooth, stir into the milk, stirring constantly until smooth and thick. Take it off the fire, season with a teaspoonful of salt and a little pepper if you wish, then stir in the fish and the well beaten yolks of three eggs, butter shells and set them into the dripping pan, fill them with the mixture and bake in a quick oven twenty-five minutes. Serve in the shells.

Parisienne Potatoes.—Peel and boil ten large potatoes fifteen minutes, take out with a vegetable scoop and cool, cut out tiny balls which are perfectly round, fry in a wire basket in a kettle of very hot fat, drain on a piece of cheesecloth thrown over a colander.

Fruit Cake.—Two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of butter, one pint of bread dough when first kneaded, two eggs, one teaspoonful of soda wet with hot water, one cupful of chopped raisins after they are seeded, one-fourth nutmeg grated, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, half teaspoonful of ground cloves, flour enough to make it of the consistency of fruit cake; let it rise, after being put in a greased tin, before baking. This cake and all which are made of yeast are better after they are a week old.

Doughnuts.—Scald one pint of milk and add two heaping tablespoonfuls of butter, set in a pan of water to cool. When nearly cold add half a cupful of sugar, half a cupful of soft yeast and sifted flour enough to make a batter, beat three minutes and cover, set in a warm room until morning. The first thing beat three eggs with egg beater and add to the batter, with flour enough to make a soft dough, not as stiff as bread dough; mix in a little cinnamon, knead a little and cover until light, then take part at a time and roll out on molding board; cut with tin cutter, then with a very small cutter take out the center; lay a large cloth on the board and place the cakes on it, cover and let them rise twenty minutes. Have a kettle of hot suet or lard, try fat with small piece of dough which you cut out of center. If the dough browns a little and rises to the top the fat is hot enough. Drop in carefully, watching them, turn with a fork; when done take out and drain. Cook only a few at one frying. It is not wise to leave the room while frying cakes, as the fat is likely to get too hot and scorch the cakes and sometimes cook over. When turning them put the fork through the hole in the center and do not make holes in the cakes.

RUSSIAN JACKET WITH RAISED WAISTLINE.

The size of the waist and proper length of the waist-line are decided issues of the latest Russian blouses. Youthful models accentuate the broad waist and slightly elevated waist-line, as illustrated in this stunning suit of forest green whipcord. The blouse is trimmed with black braid and velvet buttons. A choice of collar treatment is afforded in the high or turn-over effect. In medium size the blouse requires 2¼ yards 54-inch whipcord and 8½ yards of braid. If made shorter than illustrated 1¾ yards material will be sufficient for the blouse.

The back of the blouse and the back gore of the peplum are laid on the lengthwise fold of the material and intervening between these pieces is the upper sleeve section. The remaining parts are all laid on a lengthwise thread and are arranged as follows: The front opposite the back, the front gore of peplum opposite the upper sleeve section, the collar to the right of the front peplum gore and the lower sleeve section opposite the back gore of the peplum. The belt is laid crosswise of the whipcord and rests on the lengthwise fold to avoid a seam.

To obtain the V-shaped neck it is necessary to cut out the neck edge of front on single small "o" perforations. The peplum is perforated for shorter length, if preferred. For the left front open, by far the most fashionable form of adjustment just now, cut the front edge of front on large "O" perforations.

Many separate coats for winter wear are made upon the Russian blouse model, and when made of velvet their beauty is enhanced by a trimming of peltry applied in wide or narrow bands.

SHIRT WAIST WITH STRAIGHT YOKE.

Blouse of dead leaf brown crepe Georgette; trimmed with a yoke which may be finished in either straight or indented outline.

The excessive smartness of the yoked shirt waist finds expression in this model of crepe Georgette. It is possible to have two styles, however, by extending the lower front edges of the yoke so as to obtain an indented effect. Dead leaf brown satin stripes on the light tan crepe foundation forms a pretty color scheme for the waist. The model illustrated today requires 2⅛ yards 36-inch material, and the yoke is made first, when the home dressmaker duplicates the model for herself. Begin by turning under the front edge of the yoke on small "o" perforations for an underfacing. Next, turn under front edge of front 1¾ inch for a hem, center-fronts being indicated by large "O" perforations. Gather upper edge of front from armhole to center-front. If yoke is desired with extension see cutting directions; gather upper edge of front between double "TT" perforations. Sew yoke to upper edge of front, center-fronts, notches and corresponding edges even. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched.

The collar is made of contrasting material and may be made in turn-over as well as open effect. The sections are faced and joined when using the collar shown here, notches and center-backs even. Then the collar is sewn to the neck edge as notched, the front being indicated by the large "O" perforations.

Now, gather the sleeve edge above extension between double "TT" perforations; sew cuff to lower edge, notches and corresponding edges even, drawing gathers to fit the extension on cuff. Close seam as notched. For short sleeve see cutting directions. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

The most radical change in the waist styles this season is in the color. The dressy designs are either dark, so as to match the suit, or are in some high color, thus contrasting with the suit.

Crepe materials striped with panne velvet and chenille are much in vogue.

Washing Knitted Articles.

When washing crocheted or knitted articles first sew them in a pillowslip and then proceed to wash them. Squeeze the bag in the soapy water, but do not rub or wring it. Simply press out as much water as you can and then hang the bag in the air to drain and dry. When it is thoroughly dry rip open the pillowslip, and the articles will be found in good shape.

When the Death Penalty Was Common.

Until 1827 stealing a sheep was a capital crime in Great Britain. An act of that year removed the distinction between grand and petit larceny. Before that year the theft of goods above the value of twelvepence, in the house of the owner, though not from his person, was a capital crime. In [illegible] over 200 and in 1819 about 180 crimes were punishable by the death penalty.

Growth Builders for Children

Most mothers and housekeepers should give much more time than they do to the study of what is the right food for their children. It is a foregone conclusion that the young child needs plenty of pure, rich milk, but the time comes when milk should be supplemented by other food. Many mothers err in one of two directions, either in depriving their children of simple nourishing food, which is so necessary to the building up of nerves and muscle, or in overfeeding their youngsters.

When your child reaches the age of fifteen months it is extremely important that he has three good meals a day, with a glass of milk between dinner and supper and at bedtime.

Breakfast may be served at 8 o'clock. It may include stewed fruit or orange juice, cereal, an egg, bread and butter and milk.

Your child should have his chief meal between 12 and 1. This should include a meat or vegetable soup, a small amount of meat, a chop or small piece of rare steak shredded, baked potatoes, two vegetables and a simple dessert.

BREAKFAST.

Stewed Fruit or Orange Juice.
Cereal. Alternate, Soft Boiled or Poached Egg.
Bread and Butter or Toast.
Milk or Weak Cocoa.

DINNER.

Meat or Vegetable Soup Thickened With Cereal.
Lamb Chop, Scraped Beef or Chicken.
Beef Juice.
Baked or Mashed Potato.
Strained Spinach, Carrots, Peas or Celery.
Gelatin, Custard or Cornstarch Pudding.

SUPPER.

Bread and Milk or Cereal.
Baked Apple or Apple Sauce.

After your child is a year old you can continue the usual amount of milk you are accustomed giving him, but it is no less important that he have a mixed diet. The breakfast foods, especially oatmeal, farina and boiled rice, are extremely important for the building of the body. Since these foods are sustaining and rather filling, they should be given at breakfast and supper instead of at the main meal.

Animal food is also necessary for the making of blood and muscle, but the amount of meat should be carefully considered. Crisp bacon, to alternate with soft boiled eggs, is nourishing.

If you find that your child is not getting all the fat he needs you can put butter in mashed potatoes, mixing it with vegetables. An added amount of butter can be put on the chops, the beef or the minced chicken, which children should have once a day at least. When you have no meat at hand you can make an excellent soup out of chicken bones flavored with vegetables or bits of beef.

Instead of broth, sugared milk may be the base of vegetable purees. A soup of rice boiled in broth or milk is easily made and is nourishing. The same may be said of cornmeal broth, provided it be seasoned with plenty of butter. Cornmeal mush is also to be highly recommended on account of the long cooking.

From what has been said about soups it may be inferred that bread is an excellent food for your child. It contains many nitrogenous substances and it is rich in starches, but it is lacking in fat, which should be supplied by the using of plenty of butter. Simple custards make excellent desserts for the young child if you can make them with good milk and fresh eggs; otherwise they had better be left alone. Orange juice and scraped apples are also excellent food. They aid assimilation and help to purify the blood.

Should you find that your child loves to eat in a hurry you can teach him to masticate his food well by giving dry crusts of bread or hard baked biscuits. He will be forced to chew this.

One of the great dangers is monotony in the menus. A child, no matter how husky and strong, can become just as quickly tired of a continued menu as its elders.

If you want your child to be strong nerved and robust do not send him to bed with a heavy meal lying on his stomach asking to be digested.

Sunlight in the Nursery.

It is impossible to overestimate the importance of sunlight in the well being of babies and little children. A nursery should always be chosen with this in view and whenever circumstances render it possible should face south, so that the greatest number of hours of sunshine may be available throughout the year. Curtains and hangings around the window would stand condemned on the score of impeding the ingress of sun if they did not on those of cleanliness and other hygienic precautions. One of the earliest signs of conscious sensibility is found in the pleasure evinced by an infant in the sun, and the improvement in growth and condition which follows upon a full amount of sunlight falling upon a child who has hitherto been deprived of it in greater or less degree is [illegible].

"The sooner the pro-German party in Athens realizes the Allies' inflexible determination the better it will be for the Kaiser's brother-in-law and the Hellenic kingdom.

There are also the views of other newspapers, such as the Daily Chronicle, the Daily News and the Times, the latter suggesting that if Greece will not enter the war on the side of the Allies King Constantine still has a chance to save his country by ordering the demobilization of the army.

The Times says it considers the reports of a prospective blockade of Greece greatly exaggerated. While Greece's attitude is still doubtful, the newspaper adds, it would be natural for the Entente Allies, to control the sea routes, to consider the expediency of stopping thef urther passage of military and other supplies to Greece, but no extreme steps have yetb een taken.

The Entente Allies, it continues, recognize that King Constantine is in a difficult position. They desire to take his embarrassments fully into account, and should Greece agree to demobilize it would instantly relieve the crisis and solve the awkward constitutional question presented by the impending elections.

LOWER TEMPERATURES IMPROVE THE CONDITIONS

Dun's Review of last week says:

Fresh impetus to the forward movement is imparted by lower temperatures in many sections, which stimulate the demand for all classes of seasonable merchandise, notably clothing, footwear and fuel. As retail distribution quickens and broadens, wholesale departments in turn benefit and reports from all parts of the country are remarkably uniform in disclosing progressive improvement. Not only does business continue highly favorable in actual performance, but there is every promise, especially in industrial lines, of a degree of expansion limited only by facilities. These are being increased as rapidly as possible in iron and steel, yet though more wheels are turning, there is not sufficient machinery running to keep pace with the rush of new orders, many of which extend far into 1916. Nothing in history parallels existing conditions in the great basic industry, while all of the minor metals, particularly copper, are more active, at advancing prices. Generally, manufacturing operations are on a steadily broadening scale — though the dyestuffs continues a handicap in textile production—and the effect of the additions to the working force is now more clearly apparent in strictly mercantile branches. One reflection of the greater ability and disposition of the people to purchase is seen in the enlarged sales of holiday goods, while it is also significant of the improved financial position of consumers that there is a growing demand for the more costly grades of merchandise. There would be less warrant for optimism if the business development were confined, as was formerly the case, to a few special lines in a restricted area of the country. But all of the statistical barometers tell the story of general progress. It is now not unusual to hear of railroads reporting the largest traffic movements in their history,and gross earnings of systems making returns fo rthe first week of November were at maximum for the period. Bank clearings continue to reflect the growth of trade volumes, there being a gain at outside centers this week of 29.8 per cent. over last year and of 17.8 per cent. over 1913; oversea commerce is still of remarkable proportions, while 89 advances and 21 declines occurred this week in the 322 wholesale commodity quotations regularly compiled by Dun's Review.

ZEALANDIA SEARCHED LESS THAN 5 MILES OUT

New York—The American steamship Zealandia was searched by a British cruiser seven-tenths of a mile from shore, off Progresso, Mexico. This was stated yesterday by Fred Jensen, chief engineer of the Zealandia, who arrived here on the Ward Liner Morro Castle.

Mr Jensen, who is an American, said he left the Zealandia in Progresso because of differences with Captain Devantier.

BIG BENEFICENCE IS PLANNED BY GAMBLER

Nicholas de Szemere, Hungarian, Proposing Aid to Soldiers.

Vienna.--Out of the ruck and roar and miseries of war varied suggestions have come, many of them bearing on the best way to deal with the soldiers at the front who may come back alive and whole or be permanently disabled. It has remained for a Hungarian noble to help in solving the problem. He is a man who a few years since startled Austro-Hungary by winning more than $800,000 in a single session in the Vienna Jockey club from Count Joseph Potocki. It took only four plays at baccarat in the fashionable gambling resort of this city to transfer this immense sum from the young count to the pockets of the sportsman and gambler for high stakes, Nicholas de Szemere. For Herr de Szemere owns one of the most famous stables in the dual empire and has won many of the classic races with his horses. Now, for the time being at least, he has chosen to forget the fascination of the race track and to dedicate some of his enormous winnings on the turf and at the gaming tables to caring for some of the soldiers when they return from the war. Incidentally, it may be stated that Herr de Szemere is well known in fashionable circles in New York city, where he visited a dozen years ago.

Herr de Szemere proposes to present Hungarian, German, Austrian and Turkish soldiers of his own selection with shares in a property consisting of thousands of acres of land which he will donate to the men lucky enough to be chosen by him to live and work upon it. He hopes by the inspiration of his gift to induce other large landowners of Hungary and Austria to follow his example. His letter announcing his intention has stirred the people.

Herr de Szemere's proposal can in a measure be better understood in America by identifying it with the "back to the land" movement in the United States.

FORTUNE FOR MAIL CARRIER.

Changes Living Cost Problem to How to Spend Income.

Kenosha, Wis.—Raymond Morehouse, a mail carrier here, has joined the "silk stocking" class.

The other night he went to bed wondering how to meet the high cost of living. The next morning he received a letter announcing he was heir to $150,600 from the estate of his uncle, Louis Morehouse, at San Leandro, who left here more than fifty years ago to seek his fortune in California.

A Hundred Rattlers on String.

Tucumcari, N. M.—One hundred rattlesnakes is the record of C. T. Taylor of Gesbla, who claims to be the champion snake killer of eastern New Mexico. He now has 100 rattlers on a long string which he calls his "devil's rosary."

Nutmegs as Medicine.

A drowsy state after meals is what we should welcome, for it is the most favorable condition for good digestion. Nutmegs may produce it because their effect is to increase the flow of gastric juice. The nutmeg is much used by doctors as a remedy in weak digestion. If one has a keen appetite he does not need nutmeg, for appetite is the most powerful stimulant of the flow of gastric juice. If the appetite is not good the digestion will be feeble, and then the addition of a little nutmeg will be found of benefit.—London Answers.

GERMAN AGENTS WORK FOR SUPPORT OF CHINA

Pekin.—According to Harbin telegrams German officers are constantly escaping from Siberia into Manchuria disguised as Chinamen. The business is controlled from Pekin and Shanghai.

Several officials of legations here affirm there is a pro-German propaganda and that the sentiments of many leading Chinese officials are the result of a secret agrement made before the Japanese attack on Kiaochow.

China believes her destiny is bound up with the success of the Central European Powers.

Germany in China supports the monarchial scheme because that means militarism Her olny anxiety is whether the United States will side with or against Japan. Chinese mon archy would involve a conscription scheme covering the North Chint provinces drawn up by the pro-German chief of staff, General Yinchang.

ITALY TO FOLLOW THE BEST COURSE

Palermo—Italy's intervention in the Balkans is a question which will be decided simply on the basis of what course is best for the common cause of the Allies. Italy will seek no separate peace.

These are the outstanding features of the official pronouncement delivered by Signor Orlando, Minister of Justice and Ecclesiastical Affairs before a crowd of 5,000 here today.

Minister Orlando arrived here yesterday with Premier Salandra. They constitute an official commission from the Ministry which occasionally visits different sections of the country to enunciate to the people the Goverment's policies and report to Italian subjects by word of mouth the progress of government programmes. A large number of deputies and senators were in the audience.

BATTLESHIP KENTUCKY INVESTIGATING THE SEARCH

Washington—It was officially admitted today that the United States had rushed the battleship Kentucky to Progresso, Mexico, to inquire into the Zealandia case. The captain of the American ship has made affidavit it was boarded and searched by the British cruiser Iris within the three-mile limit. The British declare she was outside the line.

The State Department expects a report tomorrow from the battleship's commander. On that report depends whether a grave isue will be made of the incident.

Clothing Manufacturers Pleased With Prospects

Rochester.—The clothing business, Rochester's second largest industry, the annual output of which exceeds $25,000,000, is in excellent condition, say representative manufacturers. Several firms claim to be doing the greatest volume of business in their history.

The Levy Brothers Clothing Company, which ranks about fifth in size, says it finds its quarters in St. Paul street wholly inadequate. It employs about 00 hands. This firm and several others say they are swamped with orders. Business in the Central West and in the New England states has been exceptionally good, said William L. Dobbin, secretary of the Levy Brothers company. In his opinion, the good business in the West is due to the large crops, and in the East to the manufacturer of munitions of war.

Another clothing company that claims to be doing more than a capacity business is the R. Goldstein company of St. Paul street. Michaels, Stern & company and the Stein-Bloch company, the two largest clothing houses in the city, say their business is satisfactory.

"Business in the East is better than in the West," said Rudolph Stein, the financial man of the Stein-Bloch company. "Onbsolation of reality i responsible for a depressing condition on the Pacific coast. Business in the South has not been up to par. The sluggishness of the cotton market has struck the South a severe blow. Our foreign trade has been greatly injured. We are doing a normal foreign business only in England."

Clothiers are now making spring goods. The manufacture of next winter's clothing will be begun in a month or six weeks. The clothiers say they are quite ready to put in their woolen orders for the fall if the mills will accept them now. The greatest shortage of woolens in the history of the industry will be felt before many months have passed, say some of the manufacturers.

Several of the mills making both woolens and worsteds have war contracts that take upa large part, if not all, of their woolen production. They are said, however, to desire to see their worsted machinery as fully occupied. Clothiers say that to effect this end the mills probably will offer attractive prices to the early buyers until a fair amount of business is booked, and then increase prices, to prevent any cancellations of orders. In that case, the late buyer will pay the profits.

Woolen mills arefi nding it is increasing hard to figure on war contracts, it is said. Prices on raw materials change almost over night, and the estimate that will yield a profit today may cause a loss tomorrow because of an advancing market.

A woolen buyer connected with a large clothing manufacturing concern said that he was buying for his house everything desirable he could get. This was partly accounted for by prosperone conditions, but was said to be due more largely to the idea that a scarcity of woolens was certain to arise.

AEROPLANE DROPS BOMBS CLOSE TO JOHN REDMOND

London.—Mr. John Redmond's tour of the British front opened dramatically ,as when he was addressing the Munster Fusiliers a German Albatross began to drop bombs, the ceremony being brought to a sudden end in order to enable the anti-aircraft guns to pepper the unwelcome visitor which sppedily disappeared.

Their leader, who had come as an Irishman to speak and encourage the Irishmen, not only visited his fellow countrymen from the South but his compatriots from the North, who like the Munster Fusilliers and Dublin's Royal Irish Rifles, who had added to the glorious records of these regiments from Mons to Loos, received him with "Caed mille faithe."

Mr. Redmond was cheered lustily as he saw the Leinsters bombing the enemy, and as a farewell message to his countrymen, who surrounded him in a hollow square, with green flags waving everywhere, he said:

"I speak as a man who has lived by fighting to the men of my race who have set the seal on their valor in France and Flanders and far off Gallipoli; to the men who are fighting no wand tomorrow may die. I am going back to Ireland to tell them what you are and what you have deserved of them, andI pledge you that when Ireland hears my story of your glory she will send two men to fill the place of every Irishman who falls fighting for the freedom of the world.'

Sir John French and Sir Douglas Haig and the Irish Brigade commanders who met Mr. Redmond at the frant are confident that the result of the visit of the Irish leader will be a great boo nto recruiting in the Green Isle.

Boys' Club Movement Assumes Tangible Form—Quarters to Be Located in Business Section—Cash Contributions in Hand and to Be Sought After

While not largely attended, the meeting held yesterday in connection with the movement for a Boys' Club was nevertheless successful. Immediately after the discussion ended, Attorney Spangle, the Rev. Mr. Holmes, and Myron Freedman of the Times, went about the city looking for suitable quarters.

A number of citizens were unable to attend the meeting because it came within business hours. These men were present in spirit and they promise hearty support to the clubroom movement.

One of the places visited by the committeemen is ideal for the purpose as it is located on the top floor of a three-story building downtown which contains no living rooms. There would, therefore, be no complaint of noise made by the boys. These rooms are spacious and can accommodate conveniently at least one hundred boys at a time.

Yesterday's meeting was held in Chief Dyer's office. The first procedure will be to lease the rooms looked at yesterday by the committee. By charging the boys a small sum of dues monthly, the room rent can be nearly all made up. The heating of the place does not represent a large item.

Three or four tables, a number of benches and chairs, pictures for the walls, etc., can be contributed by those who are in sympathy with the movement.

Upwards of $200 has been voluntarily subscribed to the fund and Attorney Spangle will today draw up blank subscription lists for circulation. Soliciting will be started immediately, it being the aim to raise at least $1,000 to be set aside for building up the club and enlarging its usefulness in the future. It is the aim to start the club entirely fre of debt and with $1,000 in the treasury.

It will be necessary to have supervision over the boys, and this will be done by having each one of a number of public spirited citizens spend one evening a week in the club rooms.

With three large rooms constituting quarters, one can be spared as a library. Current magazines i nlarge quantities can be obtained from homes in the city and a lecture can be arranged for weekly.

The persons interested in forming the club have been desirous of including a gymnasium in the equipment, but at present this feature is out of the question. Efforts will be made to obtain the use of the City Hall for members of the club.

New Dreadnought Strikes Mine; Goes to Bottom in Baltic

London.K—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Rotterdam says:

"One of Germany's newest dreadnoughts struck a mine Friday in the Baltic Sea and went to the bottom. All the members of the crew were saved except thirty-three, who were drowned."

ANGLO-FRENCH ARMY PREPARE FOR ONSLAUGHT

London.—Reports that a great offensive operation is under way at the Dardanelles and that the Allies are preparing for another general attack on the Turks continue to come from Ottoman and German sources. The War Office yesterday told of some British activity in the Auzac zone, and the Paris War Office statement last night referred to some sharp fighting near Sedd-ul-Bahr.

Them ost positive statement came from Rotterdam, where correspondents quoted the Cologne Gazette as saying great operations were in progress, with the Allies on the offensive.

The Turkish War Office yesterday in a communication sent through Amsterdam said:—

"Artillery duels are in progress on the Dardanelles front. Violent fighting with bombs is taking place near Sedd-ul-Bahr."

The sinking of a Turkish transport which was carrying 500 soldiers across the Sea of Marmora is reported in a message from Zurich and forwarded from Amsterdam. The message says the transport struck a mine and that nearly all on board were drowned.

Army Officers Accused of Distorting Records of Naval Gun Tests

Washington.—Certain officers in the Ordnance Bureau of the Navy, of which Admiral Joseph Strauss is chief, were charged yesterday with having made misleading reports regarding tests of high explosive shells.

As a result, our ships have not been equipped with the most effective weapons of modern warfare.

A resolution embodying those charges was formulated by Representative William J. Cary, of Wisconsin. As soon as Congress meets, Mr. Cary said, he would introduce the resolution and demand a far reaching naval investigation

"Our fleets are helpless," said the Wisconsin Congressman. "Our best ships are the slowest of their kind. In case of war their mountains of armor will sink rather than save them. We possess no swift battle cruisers line England, Germany and Japan. We have failed to arm what vessels we have with high explosive shells. We have allowed the Armor Trust to make our navy obsolete."

President Wilson's $[illegible] programme for a greater navy fails to provide for high explosive shells or an adequate fleet of fast battle cruisers.

It also became known yesterday that charges against Admiral Strauss were laid before Secretary Daniels by Congressman H Robert Fowler more than a week ago. When Mr. Fowler was asked about the matter he replied:

"I protested against the way the Bureau of Ordnance prevented fair and impartial tests of high explosive shells Admiral Strauss said that it was impossible to fire a high explosive projectile without the danger of blowing up the gun, and he apparently was determined not to change his mind.

"When the present war showed that the Germans could level the hitherto impregnable fortresses of Europe with high explosive shells, Admiral Strauss appeared so blind to these facts that I said to Secretary Daniels: 'If the American navy is to be made efficient it must be equipped with high explosive shells. Admiral Strauss is not the man to so equip it.'"

BULGARIANS RAPIDLY CLOSE IN ON SERBIAN FORCES

Saloniki.—"Serbia will fight to the end. When the end comes, the entity of the State will be kept in existence, like that of Belgium, in thec onfident hope of ultimate victory of the allies."

So declared the Serbian Minister of War in a statement given today at Prisrend. The statement voices the opinion of most Serbians. They realize that all is over, for the present at least.

The main Serbian army is severed from al loutside communications, and to avoid famine must either cut its way through the Bulgarians at Uskup or retreat to the South across Albania to the Adriatic.

It is surrounded on four-fifths of its front. The Bulgarians, executing double manoeuvres, are rapidly encircling this army, as well as the forces in the South.

It is probable that the Serbians will choose the alternative of a retreat into Albania. The Bulgarians, however, according to a Cettinje message, are penetrating Albania from Tetovo and are being helped by Albanian bands, to which they are supplying munitions.

The same message says the people of Cettinje fear the Serbian army has lost its fighting spirit owing to the shortage of provisions.

Railroad Tunnels at Washington Guarded Against Plotters

Washington.—Acting upon secret advices received from Baltimore, an increased guard of terminal police was placed on duty in the tunnels leading into the Union Railroad station in Washington last night. This news was in effect that bomb plotters would attempt to destroy railroad communication between the South and New York by blowing up railroad approaches leading to the station in Washington. It is said that news of the plot was sent to railroad officials in Baltimore.

Despatches from Cleveland reported that British secret service agents have discovered clews there of large stores of explosives secreted in that city by enemies of the Allies. United States secret service agents are also working there.

A German prisoner, Otto Buelow, arrested as a deserter from the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, declared in Baltimore that "in six months there will not be a war munition plant in operation in the United States." He boasted that plots had been perfected which would destroy all of the Allies' ammunition sources here.

Five buildings of a Canadian explosives company at Parry Sound, Ontario, were blown up simultaneously last night.

Washington police officials say that they know nothing of the matter and have not been asked for any assistance. Consequently, the railroad police force isg oing it alone in the search of the tunnels and the guard duty.

Accordingto rumors that the terminal officials refuse to either affirm or deny, a letter supposed to have been written by a German was received by railway officials in Baltimore, and the contents made known to terminal officials here.

Chief of Police Viett said that he could not discuss the alleged plot, or measures for protection of the tunnels taken by his force.

A. M. Keppel, general superintendent of the terminal company, said that, in view of rumors affecting the safety of the bride over the Delaware River at Trenton, he deemed it advisable to have Chief Viett take extra precautions to guard the tunnels.

Similar precautions had been taken, he said, to guard the viaducts and overhead structures in Washington. Particular attention is being given, it is believed, to the H street viaduct, over which much of the traffic into and out of Washington north, east and west moves.

Mr. Keppel said that several officers had been assigned to this work. Mr. eppel denied any knowledge, however, of the supposed letter from a German, or that he had special reason for fear of damage to the terminal property.

SODUS MUCK BRINGS ENORMOUS PRICE

The Rochester Chronicle and Democrat of yesterday tells of a recent sale of muck land, as follows:

"The vegetable farm of Danford and Becker, consisting of 171 acres, about four miles south of this village, has been sold to J. H. Snyder, of Arkport and Burns, for $71,000. Possession will be given on January 1st.

A most interesting commentary on the rapid appreciation in value of developed muck land in Sodus is noted in that when the farm was purchased by Mr. Danford nine years ago it passed as a realty transfer of under $3,000. On the tract were about 65 acres of virgin muck soil, which for generations had been considered of little value. The new owner soon began clearing the land. Through co-operative effort with other growers a drainage plan was hit upon, shunting part of the water into Salmon Creek. New buildings were erected on the farm and about three years ago Mr. Danford sold an undivided half to Clarence E. Beecker, of Sodus for $11,000.

At present there are about 35 acres of bearing muck and it is expected that the remaining acreage will soon be cleared."

MRS MARSHALL IMPROVES

Indianapolis.—Mrs. Thomas Marshall, wife of the vice president, passed a fairly good night andw as reported to be in good condition today. She underwent an operation at a local hospital yesterday.

SUCCESS IN PUBLIC SERVICE.

Let the test of success in the public service be whether the public has been benefited, not whether the department or office has made a record.—American City.

AN OVERWORKED BOOM.

Survey of Port Townsend, Wash. Shows Heavy Bonded Indebtedness.

The problem faced in an educational way by a boom town which has not realized all the ambitions of its youth are illustrated in a survey recently made of the schools of Port Townsend, Wash., and published by the extension division of the University of Washington. Dr. Herbert G. Lull, who directed the survey, believes that Port Townsend can overcome its difficulties if rigorous economy is practiced and money expended only with an eye to the most essential things for the next ten years.

"The people of Port Townsend are working under a great financial handicap," said Dr. Lull, describing the results of the survey, which was undertaken at the request of the superintendent of the board of education. "In the boom days the people bonded the district heavily. They procrastinated in paying the bonds, and then valuations went down. It is practically impossible for the city to get new buildings now.

"This situation is peculiar to a number of boom towns in the state, but to Port Townsend in particular, for the people there once looked to the day when their city would be the leading port on the sound.

"The people are paying a local school tax of 10 mills, but 6 mills must go to raise sinking funds and pay the interest on bonds. The other 4 mills remain for the maintenance of the schools. Fortunately, because of the large number of children and low valuation of property, they get more from the state apportionment than they pay.

"The people of Port Townsend do not realize and have not realized for a long time the necessity of providing adequate administration and supervision of the school system. They have had excellent superintendents, but their time has been used rather for teaching than superintending the schools. It has even been proposed by some of the citizens that the office of superintendent be abolished. Much of the poor instruction observed in the schools is due to lack of provision for supervision. The commission does not recommend the dismissal of a single teacher if provision is made for supervision."

Hunting Truffles.

The fashion of procuring the truffle by the aid of swine and hounds originated in France. More ill assorted sporting companions can hardly be imagined. The truffles grow underground. Pigs are particularly fond of these delicacies and, guided by the scent, will discover them by rooting in the earth. After the discovery of the truffles the dogs are employed to beat back the pigs and prevent them from devouring the spoil. A FACTOR IN BUILDING

About one year ago, Mr. R. L. McCully offered a suggestion to the members of the Chamber of Commerce that existed at that time, which if adopted and pushed to a tangible conclusion, might have resulted by this time in building up more of the community spirit between the people within and without the corporate limits of this city than is known to exist at present.

Nothing came of Mr. McCully's suggestion then, but now comes along the thought of another gentleman who is always interested in the welfare of Fulton, and who would like to see something of the spirit of community building here that exists in most of the western states. It is this gentleman's hope that there shall be established in this vicinity a local Association of the Land Bank of the State of New York, the effect of which would be—he believes— to bind closer together the people whose farms add to the industries of this section.

John J. Dillion has prepared a pamphlet which treats upon the plan of the Land Bank of this state, and from it it is learned that under the operation of the savings and loan association the borrower is made no longer a supplicant. Mr. Dllon says as follows:

"For the first time in the history of the United States the financing of the farm mortgage is, under this system, put on a level with large corporations, or a public utility. It puts the financing of the farm mortgage on an equal footing with the sale of bonds of a city or township, or of the State itself. The farmer need no longer be a supplicant at the door of the money-lender. No man can any longer claim a farmer's vote or otherwise control his actions on an intimation that the mortgage may otherwise be foreclosed. Just as a city may bind all its citizens to the payment of city bonds, and sell the combined credit of its citizens at a lower rate of interest than the individual bonds of the citizens would have to pay, so the Land Bank of the State of New York may sell its bonds based on the security of the accumulated mortgages at a lower rate than each farmer would be obliged to pay on his individual mortgage. The farmer gets the benefit of this rate without incurring any additional responsibility himself. Just as the municipality or public utility corporation issues its bonds, and goes into the market and sells them on their merits for what they demand in the money market, so the farmer or home owner through his Land Bank, will sell bonds based on the combined credit of the farm and home mortgages, on terms regulated by the supply of money at the time and the quality of security offered. Since there is no better security anywhere the rate should not exceed the interest rate on municipal or State bonds. In this process the farmer and home owner for the first time liquefy and standardize their mortgage credits. By this we mean he has converted his mortgage into a negotiable bond and given that bond such a stable value that it will readily and conveniently pass from one person to another without fear of loss by anyone, and without hesitation as to its actual value. The consciousness on the part of theo wner that he is financing his business on an equal footing with other business men, that he is the master of the situation and not a supplicant for favors, stimulates an independence of action and sense of freedom that results in greater business success, and in higher appreciation of citizenship."

INTERESTING SUBJECT

A writer once said that "man's unhappiness comes from his greatness."

If the writer meant to say that the genius as a rule is too absorbed to look out for his own best interests, for his comforts, then perhaps we have the sequel to the writer's idea.

Mrs. Thomas A. Edison throws some light on this interesting subject:

"What does it mean to live with a genius? How do I help him plan his time schedules? Those questions almost answer themselves. My husband is like every other man in his home, only he needs just a little more thoughtful devotion than some men do. Men are all babies when it comes to needing a woman's care. He knows when he is hot or cold, but that is about all he does know about himself when he is at work in his laboratory. We manage to see that he gets his hat and coat when he starts out in the morning, but no power on earth will make him remember his rubbers, and he doesn't know what an umbrella looks like unless it is literally thrust upon him.

"As for his time schedule, why, he hasn't any. He just works all the time. Just now he is working fully eighteen hours a day, seven days in a week. As a 'schedule' I think that is bad! But that is where 'adaptability' comes in again. Even though I do not approve so much work, I can help him by making life outside of the laboratory as happy as possible.

"Women need to find out what is the biggest thing in life. They must learn all over again how much their country needs the homes they can make. A genius without a home is like a ship without a pilot. A man cannot make his biggest success alone. If women only would wake up to the fact that this one thing alone allows but one answer to the modern cry for feminine careers!"—Silent Partner.

Opinions

PREVENTION OF BLINDNESS.

An experiment that will be watched with much interest is that in which the Buffalo departments of health and education will co- perate with the National Commission for the Prevention of Blindness in an endeavor to ascertain how much can be done by of vision in many cases leads to blindness or defective sight.

Gradual diminution of the power of visin in many cases leads t blindness, and even when the result is not so serious as that, there is no doubt that with elimination of conditions known to cause bad eyesight, and with individual tendencies in that direction taken in time, a vast amount of suffering might be saved, and there might be attained a great increase in the visual powers of thousands, who as matters now are, go through life handicapped by eyesight below the normal.

There is a growing realization that maladies of the eye, like many other diseases, are in a large number of cases preventable. It is amazing how recklessly multitudes fritter that most precious sense-gift of Nature —good eyesight.

A fact that has important bearings on the subject in its industrial relations, is that nothing is a more insidious enemy to effective working qualities than decline of vision. The working efficiency of the country would be measurably increased if science were systematically to deal with this evil. There is no reason why the Buffalo experiment should not furnish its proper quota of information on the question of how best to deal, by comprehensive and systematized prevention, with blindness and what brings blindness about.—Buffalo Times.

TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION

The legislature which will convene in January should again give its attention to temperance legislation. Last year after considerable discussion, after considerable backing and filling, after considerable unnecessary wabbling first one way and then another, the legislature finally increased the liquor tax license in the state 25 per cent. It then made the tax only operative for one year. This was a mistake. The legislature should have made the increase of liquor tax certificates 50 per cent and it should have made this permanent. The Lyons Republican advocated a 50 per cent raise in the license last year.

The legislature of 1916 should complete the work of 1915 and it should raise the liquor tax certificates in this state 50 per cent permanently and then the legislature will do in 1916 what it ought to have done in 1915.

This will bring much increased revenue to every locality in the state and relieve taxation in every community. This will bring much increased revenue to the state and relieve the farmers and the householders from taxation. But this is not all. It will put out of business a large number of cheap saloons which are simply dives and hell-holes of vice. It will clean them up and will reduce the number of saloons in the state and thereby improve moral conditions and this will be an important and practical step forward in the cause of temperance reform.

In addition to this the legislature should pass an act giving third class cities the right to vote on local option. The editor of this paper was in favor of this proposition five yea ago and tried to get the Republican leaders of the legislature to favor the proposition, a fact which Mr. C. L. Boothby, who was at the time State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, well knows. We are in favor of genuine temperance reform. We are in favor of passing practical and sensible legislation to improve conditions and to eliminate, so far as possible, the evils of intemperance. We are not in favor, however, of Mr. Anderson's program of allowing all the cheap dives to flourish for the express purpose of creating public sentiment for the sole purpose of enabling reform lobbyists and grafters to extract money from the pockets of the people and fleece the churches with contributions for themselves.

There is no greater evil in the country today than the evil of intemperance unless it be the evil that results from loading down the temperance cause and blighting it with fanatics, bigots, lobbyists and fakers. There never was a great moral reform or political reform that did not attract to it imposters and selfish adventures who aim to clothe their own depravity with the respectability of a decent cause and who prostitute the cause by trying to enrich themselves.

The greatest handicap to the cause of temperance, the greatest obstacle which impedes its progress are men like Anderson and Burke who practice political frauds in the name of reform and who disgrace the cause of temperance by dishonorable and crooked methods that wuold put to shame the lowest heeler in Tammar Hall. The legislature should give no attention to these two paid lobbyists of reform. The legislature should rise to the dignity of real representatives of the people and should enact such temperance legislation as will improve conditions and work out practical and beneficial results to the whole people of the state instead of passing some pet measure to fill the pockets of a paid lobbyist.

The Lyons Republican appeals to the leaders of the Republican legislature to take up the temperance question early in the session and settle it on their own responsibility without any regard to a crooked paid lobbyist or reform.—Lyons Republican.

DUTY OF THE PEDESTRIAN

A good deal has been said and done in various cities about reckless drivers of motor vehicles. Measures have been proposed or taken, having as an object the suppression of those public nusiances. While praising these efforts, citizens in good standing in New York recently proposed that something should also be done regarding the regulation of the "reckless pedestrian."

That suggestion is timely. Automobiles have completely changed traffic conditions in city streets, and automobiles are here to stay. Yet many worthy persons forget or overlook those obvious and indisputable facts. They stroll across roads with entire unconcern, or with a manner that says: "I am within my rights; if motorists wish to avoid trouble they had better take care to keep out of my way."

Pedestrians have a right to cross a street without being molested, but so have motorists the right to use the highways without having their progress unduly impeded. If all pedestrians were possessed by the idea that they were at liberty to roam as they would over the pavements, the highways would be scenes of indescribable confusion.

A little courtesy and consideration would do more than many laws to end the danger of pedestrians being struck by automobiles. Motorists should have their cars always under control, and should on no account make a pedestrian "step lively" to avoid being struck. Pedestrians should do their part by being alert and cautions when crossing roads; should never dart thoughtlessly into the roadway; and should come out of the habit of walking abroad in a dreamy condition of mind.

There is absolutely no reason for an yquarrel between pedestrians and motorists. They are the same sort of people, with virtues and faults in common. The advent of the cheap and safe care has removed any vestige of class prejudice which may have existed. Common sense and fair play ought to settle traffic problems for the many. The law will deal with the visious or careless few.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

WISCONSIN RECOGNIZING DEMAND FOR TRAINED MEN IN AGRICULTURAL WORK

The demand for well trained young men to take up responsible farm positions is much greater than the supply. The employment office of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture is constantly receiving requests for reliable young men. During thep ast year 300 applications for help were received at this college and only 172 students completed the Short Course.

The kind of positions which are open to Short Course graduates is indicated by the nature of the applications, some of which are as follows: assistants on dairy farms at $30 to $35 per month; herdsmen and feeders, $35 to $50; gardeners and fruit raisers, $30 to $35; farm managers, $40 to $75; ranch foremen, $60 to $100; teamsters, $30 to $40; tenants to operate farms on shares, poultrymen, etc.

Such positions do not attract all Short Course students as many realize that there is a much largerfield with greater financial income in returning to their home farms and beginning operations in co-operation with their fathers or brothers.

PURPOSE OF THE SHORT COURSE

The Short Course in Agriculture at the University of Wisconsin was started in December, 1885, with an audience of 19 students. It was largely at the suggestion and insistence of the late Senator W. F. Vilas, that Dean Henry undertook the direction of this course. The course is designed to meet the needs of the young men who desire to increase their skill andk nowledge of agricultural science and practice by studying during the winter months, when it is possible to leave the farm without serious inconvenience.

This College of Agriculture has had 30 years' experience in planning a course of study, selecting apparatus, equipment buildings, and securing instructors, and has succeeded in adapting this course to the needs of the ambitious young farmers of Wisconsin.

The six principal objects of the Short Course may be summed up as follows:

1. To give the largest amount of information and training in practical agriculture in the shortest possible time without undue crowding. This enables young farmers, unable to take a longer course, to reap many of theb enefits to be secured at the State's College of Agriculture.

2. To give this information at the season of the year when the work on the farm is least pressing.

3. To enable young men from various portions of the state to associate with each other and meet prominent men from this and other states, and from foreign countries.

4. To awaken the young farmer to the many interesting facts and opportunities on the farm; to remove the drudgery from farm work; and to give him an inspiration along agricultural lines that will remain with him for life.

5. To help young men with little or no capital to secure positions where they can save money and gain valuable experience.

6. To uplift the farming interests of the state, to make better farmers, and more intelligent, useful citizens.

PLAN OF THE COURSE

The Short Course in Agriculture includes two winter terms of fourteen weeks each. Instruction is given by means of lectures, recitations, laboratory practice, demonstrations, and conferences. The greatest opportunity is given for the students to secure answers to individual questions, which makes the studies practical and helpful to each student. The course of study is so arranged that students are given an idea of thef undamental sciences underlying successful agriculture in so far as time will permit. Based upon these fundamental sciences, the principles and approved practices of profitable farming are explained.

Graduates of the county short courses in agriculture held under the direction of the county agricultural representatives, will be admitted to the Short Course with advanced standing equivalent to one year's work. It is thus possible for them to complete the work of the short course and be entitled to graduation therefrom at the end of one winter's resident study at the university.

Text-books are used as an aid to understanding the lectures and laboratory exercises. In the laboratories, students are given practice in such subjects as stock and grain judging, grafting, budding, and pruning fruit trees, testing seeds, laying drains, operating farm engines and machines, mixing rations for animals, and examination of horses for soundness. Classes begin at 8 a. m. and continue throughout the day until 3:30 p. m. with a 1 1-2 hour noon intermission from 12 to 1:30 p. m. No classes are held on Saturday afternoons.

The Short Course for the present year opens November 26 and closes March 17. No entrance examinations are required, but students should be at least sixteen years old and have a common school education. Further details as to the course may be secured by writing Manager of Short Course, College of Agriculture, Madison, Wis.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Mother Can Largely Prevent Diseases

By F. G. Andrews, Philadelphia, Pa.

The mother is the real doctor of the family. This does not mean she can cure diseases or should try her hand at doing so. It does mean, however, that she can very largely prevent them, which is a much easier task and has no magic about it except daily attention to the rules of cleanliness.

Doctor Hygiene, in one word, means keeping clean. It is one of the happiest signs of these times that the best aids science can give are brought to the door of the humblest home. But cleanliness does not mean merely washing a child's face and hands. It must go in dowright fashion all through its habits and surroundings. It means clean air, clean food, clean clothing, clean things to handle with its deft and busy fingers. It means a house so cleanly from top to bottom that a youngster will find it the hardest job imaginable to get his "peck of dirt." It is no longer a sign of genius that a child can make mud pies in the gutter.

No mother wishes to see her children pale, puny, weak and ailing. She has genuine pride in seeing them with eyes bright as daisies and brimming over with mischievous laughter. They can have limbs clean as a filbert and the soul of a sunbeam in their gaze. The scientists who have swept whole territories free of dread plagues by sanitation tell what is good for a continent is good for the household.

The "go to the doctor week" is one way to do yeoman's work for national defense after all the fine talk about it the last few years—defense against disease and inefficiency.

The states of Europe are in a fair way of disarming, whether they will or not. After that a United States of Europe would be much cheaper than rearmament.

If this war begets a worldwide longing for war we should expunge from our copybooks the axiom, "We can judge of the future but by the past."

Carnegie is eighty years old. If Osler had chloroformed Andy at sixty what a wealth of entertainment would have been lost to this generation!

Eat Onions.

Regular onion eaters rarely if ever fall ill from infectious diseases, and they are singularly immune from practically all ailments. Onions, too, are a grand specific for the complexion. They should be boiled whole in milk—drink the latter—or steamed and eaten with bread and butter and cheese. Then they make a satisfying and nutritious meal, on which you can do brain work or manual labor. Try onions. The taste and after smell? A mouthful of hot coffee takes away both.—London Mail.

Pineapple Seeds.

The pineapple as ordinarily cultivated is almost seedless, seeds being so rarely produced that the great majority of growers have never seen a seed and believe the fruit to be wholly sterile. But it is possible to produce them.

WILL SERVE THREE MONTHS FOR SMASHING RIG

The Watertown Times says the final argument for a reversal of the verdict convicting R. J. Curtis of violating the highway law, and the sentence of three months in Onondaga county penitentiary, will be made before the court of appeals at Albany the coming week, Justice Pardon C. Williams appearing for Mr Curtis and District Attorney C. B. Alverson opposing the appeal. It is expected the case will be reached by the highest court next Wednesday.

"In the fall of 1913 Curtis drove his automobile into the rig of Brainard Cole on Upper Washington street, smashing the wagon and seriously injuring its occupant. He was indicted for violating the highway law in failing to report the accident. A settlement was later effected with Mr. Cole for his injuries and the criminal court. Mr. Curtis was found guilty and a penitentiary sentence was imposed by County Judge George W. Reeves.

"Curtis secured a certificate of reasonable doubt, permitting him to retain his liberty under bonds pending an appeal and the case was imediately carried to the appellate division of supreme court, which sustained the verdict and sentence. From this decision of affirmance a further appeal was taken to the court of appeals at Albany, and this is about to be argued and submitted. Mr. Curtis, who now resides in Herkimer, is under $2,500 bonds Should the verdict and sentence again be sistained, it is probable that District Attorney Alverson will at once move the execution of the punishment imposed."

Art In Sandwiches.

The hostess who learns the art of making sandwiches is always well fortified against problems when serving an informal luncheon to guests. Close grained bread should be used, for coarse bread will crumble, and bread baked in round tins is preferable to that cut into slices and cut with a biscuit cutter, since the baked edges preserve the shape. Very moist fillings should be laid between lettuce leaves, and by buttering the bread the moisture cannot penetrate it, making it soggy.—Exchange.

PARK COMMISSIONERS WANT MAN WITH AN AX; MAPLE TREES TO BURN

A strong man able to swing an ax in true woodsman's style is wanted by the gentlemen who are doing their best to keep in good order the trees and grass of the East Side Park.

It has been decreed by an expert in tree lore that too many noble maples stand in some sections of the beauty spot, and that in order to promote the growth of the best specimens some of them must be brought to earth then reduced to firewood, if the cutter so pleases.

Now it is a fact that the city this year did not appropriate a dollar from its depleted treasury toward the maintenance of the park, hence there are no funds available to be used in thinning out the trees, and the park commissioners do not see fit to reach down in their pockets for money to defray the expense of felling the superfluous maples. Right here is where a bargain offer comes in—greater than can be offered by any one of the city's department stores. All that one needs do is to first find an ax, get it good and sharp and appear in person at the residence of Mr. J. A. Morrill, Academy and 3rd sts. and ask for a job. If the applicant looks good to Mr. Morrill a contract will be entered into between him and the man with the ax, the pay to be the entire result of the cutter's work, i. e., every stick of the maple wood that comes of cutting down the trees. This is an opportunity of a lifetime and a person who wants work and good pay should get the ax at once.

TURKEYS DROP IN PRICE; TRADE GOOD

Syracuse.— Thanksgiving trading started with a rush at the North Side public market yesterday morning. The number of farmers was the largest that has been registered on a Monday in many months and the supply of produce was exceptionally large.

Live and dressed poultry commanded the most attention and brisk sales took place at firm prices. Live turkeys readily sold at 25c a pound during the early hours, but at noon the price dropped as low as 22c a pound. Dressed turkeys were plentiful at 35c a pound.

Live chickens sold at 15@17c a lb. live fowls. 14@15c; live ducks, 15@17c and live geese, 117@18c. Dressed chickens brought 23@25c a pound dressed fowls, 20@22c; dressed ducks, 24@25c, and dressed geese, 24@25c. Farmers were not inclined to lower the prices on any lines, preferring to hold their stock until today.

Apples were in active demand but no changes in prices were recorded when they were disposed of at 50c@$1 a bushel, according to the quality. Duchess, Sheldon and Keifers pears sold at $1@1.25 a bushel.

The vegetable and hay markets were active, but no changes in quotations were recorded.

Trading in the wholesale markets has been stimulated by the Thanksgiving rush. Several changes were made in wholesale meat prices, when bacon was advanced ½c a pound to 17c and pork loins and shoulders were lowered 1-8c a pound, when loins brought 15c and shoulders, 12c. Lard in tierces and tubs was lower 1-8c a pound, when in tierces it sold at 10½c and in tubs, 10 5-8c.

Western eggs were advanced 1c a dozen to 32@36c. Fresh gathered, New York state eggs were unchanged ta 41@43c.

QUANTITY LARGE, PROFIT SMALL, ON PAPER DAY

Mrs. Sarah E. True, whose efforts to raise funds for the hospital, resulted in another "paper day" last Saturday, is extremely thankful to everybody who assisted, either by advertising or by making contributions of old newspapers and magazines. While the quantity of matter collected was larger than usual, the net proceeds were less than in years gone by. Fifty-four hundred pounds of paper were collected by the big Van Wagenen truck, for which the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper, company paid thirty-five and forty-five cents a hundred, acording to grade. The net profits amounted to $16.48, making a total for the year of $35.67 from the sale of papers.

REPORT SAYS FEW FIRES ARE DUE TO ELECTRICITY

"Only 3.2 per cent of fires requirquiring attention of New York's fire department during 1914 were charged to electric origin," says Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson in his annual report to Mayor Mitchel. "This remarkable 'safety first' record in electricity was made in a city of 375,037 buildings.

It is surprising when you take into consideration the fact that electricity is applied in almost every conceivable form in these buildings. The record is a concrete lesson in safety to the public.

Much attention has been given in recent years to preventable fire waste It is conceded that 70 to 80 per cent of all fires could have been prevented. During Electrical Prosperity Week of November 29-December 4 the safety and economy of using electricity in everyday use will be exhibited and demonstrated in electric shows in all the big cities of America.

New York suffered an estimated loss of $8,217,811 from fires last year, and that portion attributed to the various applications of electricity, such as electric wires, cars, conduits, insulations — everything — is only $250,130, or only about 3 per cent of the total loss. This record proves that there is very little danger of burning oneself or settling fire to anything where electricity is used.

Only 1 per cent of fires in oston in recent years were charged to electricity. In Louisville, Ky., a city of average fire risk, out of 200 fires during a period of five months only two, or 1 per cent, were caused by electricity, and those two were of a minor nature. Usually it can be shown that in any fire caused by electricity some rule was violated.

Electrical appliances used in the home seldom are the causes of fire, There is no more danger of shock in operating these appliances than in turning the lights on and off.

MOTT'S SHORT WORK OF BILL

Slim Attendance Was Not Encouraging to Promoters of Game—Next Bout May Be Last One.

Hank Mott scored two out of three falls last night at Sullivan's hall before a small-sized crowd, in his first fall pinning Big Bill Eastman's shoulders to the mat after thirty-eight minutes of strenous grappling. Mott's second fall was scored in one minute, when with a flying grape vine and arm lock hold, Mott downed his opponent. Mott took the first and third falls while Eastman scored the second in twenty-eight minutes. Eastman used a grape vine and arm lock hold also in winning over the Fulton wrestler. Mott's first fall was secured by a double Nelson with his legs.

"Tunk" Ward was unable physically to go on with his bout against Ryan. A preliminary was staged, however, between Young Green and Kid Cooper, of Oswego, in which both boys grappled for thirty minutes to a draw.

Next Tuesday night Mott is scheduled to meet Fred Shattuck, considered the light-heavyweight champion wrestler of the United States at Sullivan's hall. Shattuck is well known in sporting circles as her ecently travelled with Jess Willard, world's heavyweight boxing champion, in the "101 Ranch" show. On the same night Ward will meet Miles of Buffalo.

The promoters of the wrestling shows in this city have threatened to cease staging matches next week unless a better attendance is obtained. Bringing high class wrestlers from distant cities entails a large expense and the wrestling fans should show their appreciation of the efforts of the local wrestling club by attending the bouts.

Mott and Ward have arranged to go to Newark on December 9th to meet "Young" Fasett and Billy Ryan of Rochester, respectively.

OUT OF DARKNESS THERE CAME FELLOWSHIP

Captain Ross Eaton, of the Jogalong bowling team, after playing a game on the Onyx alleys last night, went to his place of busines and was surprised to find it in total darkness.

As he entered the store the lights were turned on and Mr. Eaton espied a table around which eighteen of his friends were seated. Mrs. Eaton had prepared the surprise in honor of her husband's birthday.

In the center of the table was a monster cake decorated with 35 candles.

After partaking of a course dinner the guests entertained by spinning stories and providing music. Mrs. Fessenden sang several solos which were heartily received.

Miss Hattie Stanton and Chet Hampton exhibited several of the latest tango steps and each guest was called upon to entertain in some manner.

MAIL PACKAGES EARLY WRAP THEM SECURELY

As usual at this season of the year, postoffices throughout the country issue injunctions to the public relative to early mailing and the proper wrapping of packages sent through the mails to friends and relatives. Postmaster Conley in keeping abreast with the custom asks that all parcels shall be mailed early and that to insure their safe carriage they be wrapped in as secure manner as possible; and further, that the names of the recipient and the sender be marked plainly. In many instances a sender of a package desires that the recipent shall not open the article untill Christmas. In this case a package may be marked. "Do not open untill Christmas." In all instances valuable packages should be insured.

THE QUIRK TODAY— "THE TWO ORPHANS"

The Two Orphans—Henrietto, (Theda Bara), and Louise (Jean Sothern) are the two orphans. Henrietta is vividly beautiful and Louise, while equally fair to look upon, is blind.

On the death of their parents in a French province, they are sent to Paris where an uncle has promised to provide for them. On their arrival in the capitol, Henrietta, who has attracted the eye of the rascally Marquis De Presles, is abducted by his orders. Louise falls into hands of Mother Frochard, a profesional beggar. Mother Frochard has two sons, Jacques, a swaggering handsome dare devil, too proud to work, and Pierre, a hunchback, who earns an honest living as a knife grinder.

In the squalid cellar that the Frochards call home, Louise is terrified by the unwelcome attentions paid to her by Jacques. Pierre, on the other hand, does all in his power to protect the blind waif.

Meanwhile Henrietta, has been taken to the Marquis' chateau. Frightened by her experiences and half mad with apprehension, she appeals to the assembled guests, one of whom, Chevalier De Vaudrey, rescues her after a duel with DePresles.

Won by Henrietta's appealing beauty, the Chevalier wishes to marry her. His father indignantly refuses his consent and causes the girl to be sentenced to prison and exile. How she escapes this fate and with her blind sister finds the way to peace and happiness, makes a story of compelling charm and thrilling interest. "The Two Orphans" well deserves the term "photoplay supreme."

JOGALONGS TOOK TWO MATCHES

Stauring Was Chief Winner of Points, Thirty-four Being the Total Number Secured.

The Jogalongs, the new entries in the City Bowling League, through the exceptionally good bowling of Stauring, one of its members, took two of the three matches in the game bowled last night at the Onyx alleys with the Crescent A. C.

Two of Stauring's teammates ran very low in the second match, but by rolling up 241 Stauring was able to bring his team through with a victory by 34 points. Stauring not only scored higher than any of his teammates in every one of the three matches but he also carried away honors for high score and high game. His high game of 611 was brilliant.

The results of the game were as follows:

A Romeo and Juliet Affair

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

I lived in a block of houses the rear of which formed a junction with the rear of another similar block at a right angle. My room was on the third floor back. There was a succession of fire escapes by which one who was ambitious to break his neck might get from one house to another.

In a window in rear of the other block a pretty girl was used to sit, sometimes sewing, sometimes reading, sometimes watching what was going on in the limited yard spaces below. When at home I used to sit in my window watching the pretty girl.

I have told quite enough to indicate that trouble was brewing for the pretty girl and myself.

It began by my looking admiringly at the pretty girl and, being a bold young man, following up my glances by throwing a kiss. Of course the young lady disappeared from the window. The next time I saw her there I poised a flower and, taking careful aim, threw it so correctly that it fell in her lap. She tried hard to look offended, but gave way to a bit of a smile, which was followed by an expression of great severity.

To make a long story short, in the course of a couple of weeks I and the pretty girl were holding up messages written in large letters for each other to read. This was followed by my taking advantage of darkness one evening when I would not likely be observed by others to swing myself from one fire escape to another to a platform directly beneath the pretty girl's abode. She was in her room at the time and, hearing a tap on the windowpane, saw me without.

Self preservation is the first law of nature, and the girl, to prevent any one seeing what was going on, turned off the light. Then she came to the window, put the sash up a few inches and her mouth to the aperture, saying excitedly:

"For heaven's sake, go away from here!"

Instead of obeying her I endeavored to kiss her.

"Police! Burglars!" came a cry.

"Oh, heavens!" cried the pretty girl. "I hear some one coming up the fire escape. What shall we do?"

For reply I threw up the sash as far as it would go and climbed through the window. The pretty girl, hearing some one hurrying upstairs, locked the door.

Well, there we were!

"This is dreadful!" cried the girl, wringing her hands.

I crawled under a lounge and told her to unlock the door. She did so just in time to prevent discovery of its having been locked. A woman came into the room exclaiming:

"There's a burglar trying to get in somewhere."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the pretty girl, going to the window, pulling down the sash and locking it.

There was a confusion of sounds. Some one knocked at the window and called out, "All right here?" The woman who had entered replied, "Yes," but declined to open the window. Doubtless she did not trust any one.

"Sure a man didn't go through this room?" called the voice.

"Certainly not," said the pretty girl.

"Then it was the next window," I heard the voice say. "I saw him."

For some time I heard evidences that a burglar was being hunted; then gradually the commotion quieted down. Some one—I concluded that it was the woman who had entered—left the room. Then the pretty girl said to me:

"You can't stay here, and you can't get out without almost surely being discovered."

"If worse comes to worst, say I am your husband."

Although this dialogue was spoken in a low tone, it was overheard. A woman—the same who had come in before—entered.

"To whom were you speaking?" she asked.

The pretty girl stammered a denial that she had spoken to any one. It did not satisfy the other. She began a hunt. Rather than be dragged out I came from my hiding place voluntarily.

"Be quiet," I said to the elderly woman who stood before me. "I'm no burglar, and we don't wish our marriage to be known as yet."

The woman looked thunderstruck. Turning to the girl, she said:

"You don't mean to tell me that you have been secretly married?"

"I do," I interrupted, "and if you'll let this unfortunate affair blow over you shall have one of the most affecting love stories you ever dreamed of."

"I should think so," she said very severely.

I was permitted to consult with the pretty girl privately. She was a lodger with the woman who had discovered me and alone in the world. We were not obliged to satisfy the landlady further, but it was arranged that I should see my supposed wife in the parlor occasionally, and there I did the rest of my courting in a far more respectable manner than on the Romeo principle. After we were really married we told the landlady the whole story. She said she was glad at having been instrumental in making the match.

"Didn't I tell you you would hear an affecting love story?" I remarked.

"It might have been more affecting if you had been caught by the police," was the reply.

"Or broken your neck, as you deserved," my wife put in.

"The Girl on the Cover" Advises "Movie-Stricken" Women and Girls—Also Discusses Movie Wardrobes

Miss Edith Johnson who herewith writes her own story of motion picture experiences has developed within the past few years into one of the most vesatile of movie stars. Before her debut in the movies, Miss Johnson was know as "the girl on the cover," her pretty face adorning the outside covers of many popular magazines.—Ed.

By EDITH JOHNSON

There really was nothing exciting about my entering motion pictures. I just wanted to get into the work and I applied to the Selig company because I enjoyed their artistic productions. I surely was surprised when I received word that I would be given a trial, for I had feared that my ambition would never be satisfied.

I had been working for a Philadelphia Company posing for illustrations which appeared on the covers of their advertising booklets. When I received word from Mr. Selig that an opportunity to enter motion picture work awaited me, I took the first train for the West and arrived as soon as possible in Los Angeles where the great studios of the Selig Company are located.

I have found it is so much easier for the men who pose for the camera to dress than the women that it almost seems unjust at times. One of the things which keeps me busy night after night in my home is planning new dresses to wear in forthcoming productions. It may surprise many to know that when an actress wears the same dress in two or three productions she is certain to receive a number of letters commenting on the fact. It is necessary therefore to change every gown in some manner after it has been worn in a few scenes in a motion picture play.

The work is harder than posing for cover subjects and there is a great deal of art connected with the work despite certain contrary statements. After several years with the Selig Company, during which I have been cast for more and more important roles, I can look back and easily notice the advancement I have made in both experience and conception of motion picture art. I fear I would have been lost when I started my engagement with the Selig Company if I had not had some previous dramatic experience, but even in my schooldays I was fond of amateur theatricals and frequently appeared in them, and this experience proved very valuable indeed.

There are many hazards encountered in the course of motion picture production, but an actress gets used to that quickly and it becomes a matter of course—a part of her daily life. I have got so that I consider the wild beasts at the Selig Jungle-Zoo as pets rather than ferocious animals and I am told that if I feared them I would never be able to work in scenes with them. They are really like little children and one must humor them continually in order to keep them in the best of spirits.

There is one thing I feel it my duty to discuss here and I hope all the girls who read my story will profit by my experience. This is my advice to the hundreds of girls in all parts of the world who continually write to me asking if there are opportunities for them to become motion picture actresses. Some of these epistles come from very young girls, too—girls who should be thinking of their school work and not of the theater.

It has become almost impossible for young women without previous theatrical experience to secure engagements in motion picture productions. Long lists of experienced theatrical people are waiting for engagements and there is little opportunity for the amateurs to gain a livelihood via motion picture acting. And some of these girls would be sadly disillusionized, too, should they engage in the art. When your screen favorite appears in the cozy theatre and the orchestra plays and there is applause, the girls may be pardoned for longing to become film favorites like the others. This is just one side to the situation, however. The other side is not so attractive. There is the hard toil which every movie actress must undergo. Frequently work starts at 7 a. m., and does not finish until late at night. There are no bright lights, no applause in the actual work of movie acting. Instead there is the sometimes gloomy studio, suffocatingly hot under the glass roof in the summer time, often unbearably cold in the big barn-like structure in the winter time; there is the director who does not hesitate to reprimand; there are the scenes to be rehearsed time and time again until one is exhausted; there are the hazards which are necessary to undergo in order to provide the thrills longed for by the audiences and there is the uncertainty for weeks or maybe months whether or not your part has "gone over."

To all "movie-struck girls" I would say "Don't!"

Film critics tell me that my very best work was in the part of "Sweet Alyssum" in the late Charles Major's appealing story of the same name, released as a Selig Red Seal play in five acts. I am not surprised. The part of "Sweet Alyssum" is that of an innocent young girl, care-free and unsophisticated. She lives with her father on a little farm and is the apple of his eye. And then the stranger comes into her life. He is handsome—a school teacher with a past. She loves the stranger with all her heart and they elope and are married. Later he is arrested for theft and bigamy. There is a baby which "Sweet Alyssum" is willing to sacrifice for the life of her husband. Of course everything turns out all right and the real villain is punished.

I always loved that story and I was delighted when Director Colin Campbell cast me for the title role. I was proud, too, to appear in a Selig Red Seal play in a stock company that included such artists as Tyrone Power and Miss Kathlyn Williams. I really and truly lost myself in the role, something that is as possible in motion picture art as on the legitimate stage.

The big scene where "Sweet Alyssum" holds her first-born in the line of fire from her father's rifle in order to save the life of her young husband, was rehearsed again and again before it was satisfactory and I am told the rehearsing was worth while for the scene has been pronounced one of the most intense in motion pictures.

There is another scene that I just know would be praised. That scene is where Roanoke Brooks confronts his wife with the hidden finery. It should be remembered by motion picture lovers that "Sweet Alyssum" is the first Selig play in which Tyrone Power and Miss Kathlyn Williams appear. How could the scene be otherwise than tense with those two great stars playing opposite to each other? It is a situation that is certain to go down into motion picture history.

A BEAUTIFUL FROCK.

Deep Shades of Dahlia Are Used to Fashion This Gown.

FOR DRESSY OCCASIONS.

This artistic afternoon frock is made of dahlia colored crape banded with a deeper shade of taffeta. The long tunic dips at the back and is also banded. The simple bodice has touches of hand embroidery and shadow lace to enliven it, and taffeta buttons are extended down an inset tab. The soft felt hat completing this pretty costume is trimmed with a band of six big velvet dahlias.

This Chapeau Is Both Smart and Serviceable For Winter Wear.

Black velvet, a beaded bird and an ostrich tip are the materials that fashion this beautiful hat. Over a narrow, sloping brim mount folds of the velvet intersected by beaded wings, while a jaunty white plume in the rear falls gracefully over the left side. This is the kind of hat that has both wear and style.

Simple Home Remedies.

For Chapped Hands.—Five tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, two tablespoonfuls of glycerin and two tablespoonfuls of alcohol.

For Sore Throat.—One teaspoonful each of salt, sugar and turpentine in a pint of water. Use as a gargle.

When giving a sick person an alcohol bath make a mitten for your hand out of an old bath towel. It will hold more moisture and be better for rubbing purposes.

A mustard plaster mixed with the white of an egg or vinegar instead of water will not leave a blister.

Velvet Blouses.

Among the dressier blouses those made of velvet are holding a very prominent place. As the material is very heavy, it is usually combined with chiffon, lace or georgette crape. In some instances the velvet is used to form bib effects. Other blouses are all velvet except for the sleeves. Many chiffon blouses are trimmed with bands of velvet in harmonizing or contrasting color. At any rate, one's wardrobe will not be complete this season unless one has a blouse [illegible] [illegible] velvet [illegible] sleeves.

Dental Hygiene and Good Health

Some startling theories have of late been brought out as to the part played by bad teeth upon the welfare of the human race. It is indeed about time that people were made to realize the importance of sound teeth and the proper care of decayed teeth. In no line of physical development is the ounce of prevention of more importance than in the mouth.

Not only is an unclean mouth a harborage for germs of any and all descriptions, but many authorities now claim that defective teeth result in moral turpitude as well as in physical diseases. This is by no means impossible, for since degenerates are usually found to have been the victims of improper nourishment as well as wrong influences which might not have harmed them had they been rightly built up mentally and physically, what can be more to blame than the teeth which, being decayed, could not properly masticate the food which passed through the mouth?

If poor teeth can cause disease's entrance to the heart, lungs, digestive tract and the like it is safe to assume that the malnutrition and infection will affect the brain as well.

Therefore look to the children's teeth from the moment they are born, and before that see that the parent's own teeth are well looked after as well. The example set by indifferent parents to their own mouths is not apt to encourage the youngsters to be careful. Do not think that the first teeth can be neglected because they are to come out. The second teeth mature so close in proximity to the roots of the first crop that the decay and infection of the first teeth can easily be transmitted to the second teeth beneath.

Before the baby has any teeth at all the little mouth should be wiped out gently but thoroughly morning and evening with a soft rag or piece of cotton wrapped around the mother's finger wet with a solution of weak boracic acid—one teaspoonful of powder to a pint of boiling water. Small pieces of rag are preferable because they do not shed small particles as cotton is apt to do, but in either case what is once used should be thrown away and fresh prepared for the next time.

When a child is old enough to use a brush and powder teach him to brush his teeth regularly every day after breakfast and at bedtime, with dental floss added, as soon as he can manipulate it.

A CHRISTMAS HINT!

Knitted Sweater For Dolly That Small Girls Can Make.

Any little girl over seven years old may be taught to knit, and the homely accomplishment may relieve her from boredom many a time later on in life. Here is a simple direction for making a knitted sweater for dolly, a task that will be quite to the fancy of the youthful knitter. Incidentally she will learn a lot about knitting.

Use one hank of Shetland wool in any pretty color and a pair of knitting needles about No. 5 size. Cast on twenty stitches for the back of the sweater and knit twenty ribs. Then cast on ten more stitches; knit across and cast on ten at the opposite side. You have on the needle now forty stitches, which gives the width from sleeve edge to sleeve edge. When you have knit ten ribs the sleeves will be finished up as far as the shoulder line. About eight stitches may be bound off for the back of the neck. Eight stitches from the forty on the needle leaves thirty-two stitches. So when you have knit half of the thirty-two or sixteen stitches bind off eight for the neck and continue to knit across the remaining sixteen stitches.

You must now abandon work on the whole sweater and finish each front separately. To do this slip off the sixteen stitches on the opposite side of the bound off portion on a big safety pin and fasten securely. Take the empty needle and commence knitting where the end of your worsted is. Knit as far as the bound off place and back twice, which will give you two ribs for the shoulder. Now cast on six stitches to make the front wide enough and knit across the twenty-two stitches for ten rows. This completes the sleeve. Bind off under the sleeve for ten stitches (the original number you cast on for the sleeve) and then knit across and across, straight down the front until the front is as long as the back. Finish the opposite front in the same way and sew up the under-arm seams with a bit of worsted. Cuffs may be knitted on the sleeves, if desired, and even a little collar added.

Rice and Creamed Fish.

Cook one cupful of rice until it is tender; season it with a little salt and butter. Do not put any sugar in it. Boil the fish in some water, and when it is nearly done let the water boil away until the remaining water is very rich. Remove the fish and from the water make a creamed sauce by adding a little milk, then stirring in enough flour to make it medium thick. Cut the fish in small pieces and put it in the bottom of a baking dish, with a third of the cream sauce over it. Next put in the rice, seasoning both as much as you like. Over the rice pour the remaining sauce. Put in hot oven and let bake for twenty minutes and serve while hot.

A BLOUSE FOR MODISH WOMEN.

The contrasting blouse is asserting itself once more, and this model in a gay rose tone will be charming to wear with the tailored costume this winter.

There were seasons when the modish woman wore a matching blouse with her tailored suit, but the contrasting blouse has asserted itself once more, and it comes in so many attractive designs that it is sure to hold the ground it has gained.

Models trimmed with embroidery are numerous, and Georgette crepe seems the most fashionable as well as the most practical material for their development, since it looks as good as the best of silks and satins and launders as well as the coarsest of lawns.

The little details of this waist help to make it unusual—the bead-tipped tabs falling over the top of the girdle, the shoulder yoke and the shaped collar. In medium size the blouse requires 2⅝ yards 36-inch material. If a high neck finish is preferred, a removable vest, with standing collar, is provided.

The crepe is first folded before cutting. The back is laid along the lengthwise fold and opposite to it the vest, or shield, is placed. If made of contrasting material, however, be sure to place the pattern in the same position on the other goods as it is shown on the crepe. Next to the back comes the sleeve, arranged on a lengthwise thread of material and following the sleeve the front. There are two sections to the girdle, back and front, and these are laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods to the left of the collars. The turn-over and cuff are placed into position next and the stay comes last, being laid along the selvage edge of the crepe.

Bright blue, green, clay color or pink would be a fashionable color. In addition to the crepe blouses there are some very good models of simple design in soft faille. They are in lustrous, soft, rich looking silk which in some cases has a shot weave that gives it a bloom and are in the lovely pastel tones that have come to the fore again and that succeed in being warm and glowing without being vivid. These blouses will be charming to wear this winter with tailored costumes of the more severe class.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

SIMPLE FROCK IN PRINCESS EFFECT.

Little dress of dark blue denim made with panel front and back and worn with guimpe of white lawn. The straps are of the same material.

The heavier wash fabrics are used to make effective frocks for growing girls, and this model, made in semi-princess effect, is very attractive in dark blue denim, with a white lawn or linen guimpe. The dress is sleeveless, the body and skirt being cut in one, and is closed at the center-back. The guimpe may be finished with high or low neck since the collar is a convertible design.

In medium size the dress requires 2¾ yards 36-inch material, with 1⅝ yards lawn for the guimpe. To make the guimpe, turn under the front edge of the front on slot perforations for an underfacing, then close the under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn the hem at lower edge on small "o" perforations and insert a draw-string. Face the collar, then sew to the neck edge, notches, center-backs and front edges even.

Close the sleeve and cuff seams and sew cuff to lower edge of sleeve, seams even. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

To make the dress, close the under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Pleat, creasing on lines of slot perforations and bring folded edges to corresponding double "oo" perforations and tack. Gather on crosslines of single small "o" perforations. Adjust stay to position underneath gathers, bringing single large, single small and double small "oo" perforations to corresponding perforations in front and back, single small "o" perforations at upper and lower edges of stay at the under-arm seam.

Adjust the straps to position over the gathers as illustrated, and, if desired, pipe them with white linen and tack the pointed ends. Turn hems at back and at lower edges of dress on small "o" perforations. Lap right back on left, center-backs even, using the large "O" perforations to locate the center-back, and stitch 1 inch from folded edge, leaving edges free above single large "O" perforation for opening.

If desired to use for a dressier purpose the little frock may be carried out in taffeta, serge or velvet, in which case the guimpe would be of organdy, crepe de Chine or some other equally suitable fabric.

Homemade Wire Solder.

Wire solder is made by punching small holes from one thirty-second to one-sixteenth of an inch in diameter in the bottom of a sheet iron pan along one side, holes to be one-half inch apart. Set the pan upon a flat plate of iron or a flat stone slab, pour in the solder and tip the pan so that solder will flow through the holes, drawing the pan along the slab fast enough to leave trains of solder cooling in the form of wires. This will require a few trials to adjust the flow and make the wire even.

GRUMBLING.

Do not waste time in whining over an unpleasant task. If we bear what we must bear with murmuring and grudging we do but gall our shoulders with the yoke and render that a heavy, unprofitable load which might be fruitful and glorious.—Thomas à Kempis.

SCIENCE—INVENTION.

Stove Coal In Demand.

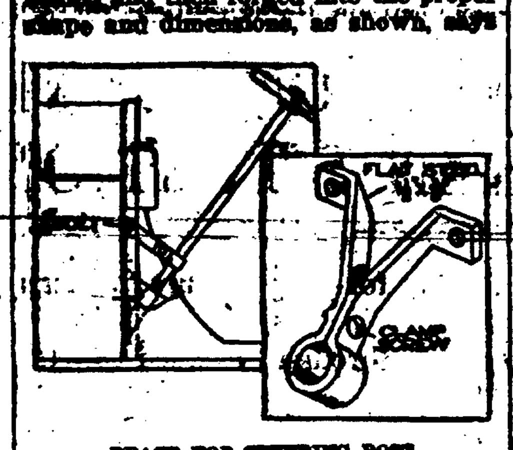
Stove and chestnut sizes of anthracite coal are in the greatest demand and make up over 40 per cent of the total shipments from the mines. They are essentially domestic sizes, and the relatively large proportion they make of the shipments serves as an index to the conditions governing the anthracite trade. Egg coal finds its way principally to the furnaces of residences, and pea coal is used in the same way to some extent, though it is also used for kitchen ranges, and some of it goes with the buckwheat and smaller sizes for use as steam coal. The small sizes come directly into competition with bituminous coal and are sometimes used mixed with bituminous coal for generating steam, chiefly in hotels, apartment houses and office buildings.—United States Geological Survey.

Construction Too Permanent.

A very good illustration of the fact that construction can at times be too permanent can be found in the case of an English railroad between London and Liverpool, which was built many years ago and was laid out with the intention of using only small freight cars with a ten ton capacity limit, says the Engineering Magazine. Owing to the fact that all cuts, tunnels, bridges, etc., were made so permanent by using masonry and stone construction throughout the cost of rebuilding the road later on was so great as to make it prohibitive. Today the freight rates between these two cities, a distance of approximately 200 miles, is nearly twice that charged between New York and Chicago, a distance of almost 1,000 miles.

Re-enforcing a Loose Steering Post.

A loose steering post on an old automobile truck was re-enforced in the following manner: A piece of flat steel stock one and one-half inches by three-eighths inch in cross section was annealed and then forged into the proper shape and dimensions, as shown, says



BRACE FOR STEERING POST.

Popular Mechanics. This was slipped over the steering post and clamped to it by means of a three-eighths inch screw and nut. The base in turn was fastened to the steel dash with suitable screws. This supported the steering post at two points and consequently made it very rigid.

Iron Pipe and Steel.

Viewing impartially all of the data presented so far, there seems to be little to choose between wrought iron and steel pipe, on the whole, as regards their resistance to corrosive influences, but one point may be mentioned with reference to the manner in which these materials corrode. With steel the rusting takes place more or less uniformly over the surface, while wrought iron shows a decided inclination to form deep pits. That this is a dangerous tendency can hardly be doubted. To paraphrase an old saying, a pipe wall is no stronger than its thinnest spot. Therefore to the extent in which wrought iron exhibits this defect in greater measure than steel it may be considered correspondingly inferior.—Engineering Magazine.

Magnet Cranes.

Before the advent of the magnet the handling of steel plates, steel rails, scrap iron, pig iron and other materials proved a tedious and difficult matter. There was delay in applying the hoisting tackle, accidents were frequent because of the slipping of hooks or appliances used to hold the material together, and with small pieces the cost was very high. Magnets have improved these conditions and have added an element of safety to the handling of iron and steel products. Regardless of the shape of the material, the magnet attaches itself instantly to its load, holds it as long as necessary and then releases it, all the operations being completed without having a man approach either the magnet or the load.—Engineering Magazine.

A New Cuban Bagging Fiber.

Experiments are being carried on in Cuba with the fiber of a plant locally known as "malva blanca," which is said to produce an ideal fabric for sugar bags. According to the Havana correspondent of Sugar, the fiber is soft and silky, possesses a tensile strength greater than hemp, is capable of close weaving and not susceptible to shrinkage if wet. No special machines are required for handling the fiber, those adapted for spinning and weaving hemp, jute or henequen being suitable for malva blanca.

Steering Wheel That Tilts.

A tiltable steering wheel invented by two Michigan men saves the driver much trouble when entering his car. It tilts up parallel with the steering post instead of remaining at the usual rigid position at right angles to the steering post. The driver thus has the use of the entire space between the [illegible] and the steering post when entering the car or leaving it. A [illegible] is provided by which the wheel is at other times locked in its normal position for steering the car.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE.

There is a subtlety about the combination of lace and satin that is irresistible. This evening gown is fashioned of cerise charmeuse satin and lace, the satin forming the tunic and over blouse. The underskirt of lace is finished with a deep band of silver braid, while the bib front of the waist is enriched with a motif of silver bead and silk embroidery. In medium size the dress requires 3½ yards 36-inch lace and 3 3-8 yards 36-inch satin, with 2 3-4 yards banding for the skirt.

Roll to half an inch thickness, cut with small round cutter and bake about twelve minutes in hot oven. This makes two dozen small biscuits.

Japanese Chocolate Cake.—One-half cupful of grated chocolate, one and one-half cupfuls of granulated sugar, one-half cupful of butter, four eggs, one and three-quarter cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of soda and one cupful of sweet milk. Cook half of the milk with the chocolate until it is as thick as cream. Cream butter and sugar, add yolks of eggs beaten light; then add milk, flour and whites of eggs, a little at a time. Lastly add the chocolate and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Bake in layers.

Fig Pudding.—One cupful sugar, one-half cupful butter, one-half cupful water, four level teaspoonfuls baking powder, two-thirds cupful flour, one-half cupful figs, chopped fine, whites of four eggs. Cream the butter, add the sugar gradually, sift the baking powder with the flour and add milk and flour alternately; add figs and fold in the whites of the eggs. Pour mixture into buttered molds. Place molds in kettle and add boiling water until it almost comes to top of molds. Boil fifteen minutes and place in cooker for two hours. Serve with hard sauce.

Stewed Prunes.—Wash prunes well, put in kettle, cover with cold water and let stand all night. In the morning put on stove in same water. Boil until tender. Do not stir or break. Set back on stove, where they will simmer until [illegible] and very little of it. Serve with whipped cream.

ALLIED CAPITALS CONFIDENT OF BALKAN SITUATION

London.—Developments of the last forty-eight hours have caused a much more hopeful feling to spread through the allied countries concerning the Balkan situation. Foremost is the blockade of Greece which is now in force. By this measure there is more or less certitude that King Constantine will be unable to resist the pressure put on him and that he will be compelled, if not to actively align himself with the Entente to give to the Powers such guarantees as they demand.

The closing in of winter in its most severe form and the consequent lessening of the speed of the Austro-German and Bulgarian advance in the mountains, which has permitted a strong concentration of Serbs on the historic Kossove plain, has contributed to the feeling of optimism. This also has been the effect of the arrival of British troops in the neighborhood of Monastir, where they are strengthening the Serbs for a resistance to the Bulgars to the north and west.

Military observers here are puzzled by the reports from the Serbian Legation in Athens of a victory over the Bulgars at Leskovatz, on the Nish-Salonica railroad, twenty-five miles south of Nish. It is known the Bulgarian main army is nearly fifty miles west of the railroad at this point and the only explanation offered of the report is that a detached and independent column has eluded the Bulgar sweep and has attacked the garrison left at the town, or that the message reaching Athens has been delayed and refers to an action in the days immediately folowing thef all of Nish.

While there is no definite news of Greece's reply to the Entente Allies' demands for guarantees for the safety of the Anglo-French forces landed at Salonica or for that of the Serbians who might bef orced over the Greek frontier, one despatch from Athens says the Greek Cabinet is disposed to accept the conditions laid down by the Entente Powers except that condition requiring Greece to participate in the war, and that a solution of the whole difficulty may be expected immediately.

Roumania finds herself in much the same position as Greece, with both the Entente Allies and the Central Powers bringing pressure to bear on her. The Germans, it is said, are asking Roumania to give to them assurances of her continued neutrality and also are offering concessions to her if she intervenes in the war on the side of the Teutonic allies. With a big Russian army in Bessarabia, here however, it is believed in military circles here hardly likely that Roumania will accept the second alternative. On the whole, it is expected here that the firm attitude of the Entente Powers toward Greece will clear the Balkan situation before very long.

COMMISSION'S RESTRICTIONS

Limits Privileges Enjoyed by Companies---Niagara Company May Build New Line Across Oswego River.

Albany.—A series of orders by the up-state Public Service Commission has just been made to regulate this distribution of electricity by several companies in the Oswego river valley.

The orders are based on the theory that where a company is established and regulated it shall not be disturbed by invasions of its territory. The People's Gas and Electric company has a franchise from town board of the town of Scriba, Oswego county, for the retail distribution of current. The exercise of this franchise and the construction of a distribution plant is approved by the Commission.

Extensions of the lines of the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Co., in this same territory are restricted to the distribution of current at high voltage only to its customers. The Niagara, Lockport & Ontaria company is authorized to build a line from the hydro-electric plant at Minetto, across the Oswego River and Canal and to a junction with the line of the Oswego River Power Transmission company in the town of Volney, to build a distribution sytem for high voltage current only in the town of Scriba, to purchase and use for the same purpose the existing transmission line of the Oswego river company from Seneca Hill in the town of Volney through the town of Scriba to the Oswego city line, and to lease the Oswego river company's line from the Oswego river to Seneca Hill.

Objection was made by the People's Gas & Electric company, to permitting these last mentioned lines to be used for low voltage transmission and the town board of Scriba passed resolutions declaring that the franchises of the Niagara company in the town was only for high voltage current. The Commission has accordingly limited the operation of the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario lines to current for its high voltage customers only, preserving the low voltage field for the People's company.

Before Commissioner Carr at the Albany office of the Commission this afternoon the representatives of the Syracuse &Suburban railroad offered a compromise in rates which they hope may settle the complaint of the Board of Trustees of the villages of Fayetteville and Manlius, the Jamestown Business Men's Association and the Fayetteville Grange over the increase in rates heretofore proposed by the company but suspended by the Public Service Commission pending the hearing of this complaint. The company now proposes to tentatively abolish all round trip and coupon fares, placing the road on a strict cash fare basis under the present scale of cash fare rates.

It was claimed that on the more than a million dollars worth of property the company had devoted to the public service, the present rates returned but about $8,000 a year. The representatives of the complainants, however, were not prepared today to accept the terms offered by the company and the matter was adjourned in the hope that an agreement may be reached before the next hearing which was set down for Thursday, December 2 If an agreement is not reached the trial of the case, involving a valuation of the property, will take more time than either side seemed today to feel they wanted to devote to it.

BRITAIN MAY ISSUE WAR LOAN BONDS SOON

London.—For the purpose of attracting a larger part of the savings of the working classes, the Government purposes to issue war loan bonds of the vale of 1 pound ($5) or multiples thereof, bearing five per cent interest.

In making this announcement today in the House of Commons, Reginald McKenna, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said subscriptions to war loan vouchers—the plan previously adopted to attract small subscriptions—had proved disappointing.

These subscriptions aggregated only 5,000,000 pounds. The working classes, he said, evidently preferred two and a half per cent from the savings bank to investment in a loan which was liable to fluctuate.

The Chancellor emphasized strongly the urgent necessity, in the interest both of themselves and of the state, that persons now enjoying exceptional wages should save.

"Extravagant expenditure in any class cannot be tolerated," he continued. "At this moment economy in expenditure is vitally necessary. The nation must be made to understand that a suitable instrument must be devised whereof we may avail ourselves of the nation's earnings."

Mr. McKenna said it was on this account that the Government intended to issue bonds of small denomination which will be convertible into cash at face value on demand. A strong committee will be appointed to popularize these bonds among the workers.

Red Cross Seal Sales Begin Next Monday

A sale of eighty thousand Red Cross seals is the goal set by the committee in charge of the sales in this city in the plans outlined by the men and women interested in the work. According to arrangements made by the committee, who represent virtually the same persons as last year, the seals will be placed on sale in every store in Fulton next Monday morning. In addition to this, the school children will be authorized to make sales and they will begin their work on Tuesday next.

Mr. Glenn Streeter is the sales agent for the Red Cross seals in this city and the remaining committeemen have not yet been named by Dr. Gladmin. Last year the workers mailed three hundred letters to persons, the result being that $200 came back through the mails from the persons addressed who paid for them just the same. This year at least five hundred letters will be mailed, each envelope containing one dollar's worth of the little red messages, and it is believed that the proceeds should hover around the mark of $300. In case the recipient of the circular letter and stamped addressed envelope does not want to purchase the seals, he may use the return envelope to return the packet. But there is every reason to believe that most of the seals sent out in this manner will be retained and cash sent back in payment.

The seals this year, as in all other years, will sell at the nominal rate of one cent or more each and a few purchased to adorn Christmas mail can't work havoc with anyone's pocketbook.

Of the $800 which the committeemen have set out to raise, [illegible]-five per cent will remain in Fulton to carry on the warfare [illegible] tuberculosis.

REDMOND SAYS IRISH WILL FIGHT UNTIL BELGIUM IS FREE FROM HER YOKE

London.—Mr. John Redmond, Irish nationalist leader, fresh from the fighting front in an eloquent speech last night at a big recruiting meeting for the London Irish Rifles, said the greatest impression heb rought back was the absolute confidence of our troops in victory for the Allies.

"There are no pessimists at the front," he said, "but there is a universal feeling of resentment among the gallant men in the trenches against that section of the press and people which is spreading the spirit of pessimism. (Cries of 'Lord Northcliffe's Times and Daily Mail.') Over and over again the troops have asked 'Why, not send the "All is lost brigade" to the front?'

"The truth is, so far as the western front is concerned, the Germans are beaten. Every day and every hour she is growing weaker while we are growing stronger. For every shell the Germans throw today we throw five.

"Anybody who would attempt to preach pessimism to the men in the British, French and Belgian lines would get a very hot reception. The men are all cheery, all are confident, well clad and fit. No armies in the history of the world are better looked after than the Allies. Notheing more cowardly or mischievoue ever occurred than the speech of Lord St. Davids, who represented the General Staff—men of high social position, who have shed their blood for freedom, many of them shot through the lungs, and who, though unfit for the trenches, are doing priceless work at the front—as living idle and vicious lives.

"Without circumlocution," said Mr. Redmond, "I denounce that as a black lie. These men are the hardest worked soldiers in the army. Nothing more disgraceful than this attack on them has occurred in the history of the country.

"I denounce as atrocious the privilege given, whether to Peer or commoner, to circulate libels against these men, who, absent and fighting for God and country, cannot defend themselves.

"I found the Irish troops cheerful, confident and full of fight. I found the Ulstermen, thank God, side by side in the trenches with the Dublins (great cheering), fighting shoulder like true comrades and brother Irishmen. I pray God that whenever a battalion of nationalists go into section there will be a battalion of Ulstermen alongside. It will end the unhappiness and discords of Ireland, for no power on earth can make Irishmen who have risked their lives and spilt their blood together return to the home land as enemies."

Mr. Redmond, who inspected the Belgian lines and saw King Albert, told of his talk with the ruler.

"I told him," he said, "that Ireland was determined to stand by the independence of Belgium at any cost. Come weal or woe Ireland would would have no peace that does not bring about the rehabilitation of Belgium."

Mr. Redmand ended with a message from the Irish troops at the front to their fellow-countrymen:—

"They ask me to say they feel that every man of them in this war is fighting not merely for liberty and right but for the prosperity of their beloved Ireland as well. They ask Ireland to stand by them.

"I say to the Irish people that they will be disgraced forever in history if they fail to send out reserves to replenish the gaps that may arise in the Irish ranks."

At the close of the speech men in the audience actually fought for the privilege of being the first to enroll in the London Irish Rifles.

POLISH CITIZEN TRIED TO OUT DO CARRIE NATION

Stanley Nuk, a Pole, was arrested last night for creating a disturbance at Paul Kowalski's cafe in West Broadway. He demolished a large plate glass mirror and a patrolman brought the man to police headquarters.

Serbians Outflank Bulgars; Long Way From Annihilation

London.—That the Serbians are still a long way from being annihilated is evident from the fighting which has taken place during the last few days to the southward of Uskub. While the main Serbian army remains intrenched in Kossova Plain a detached body, whose presence has been concealed by the censor, succeeded in passing Uskub and has held the territory along the Varsar River in the vicinity of Veles. It is this force of Serbians which has served as the objective of Bulgarian troops operating from the northward and eastward.

From the original position at Veles the Serbians were pushed back, it now develops toward Prilep. Reports have credited the Bulgarians with the capture of Prilep and the further forcing of the Serbians back toward Monastir.

The situation has now suddenly changed by the hasty retreat of the Bulgars to the north of Rilepand the following up of this retrograde movement by the Serbians to the south of them. The immediate objective of the Serbian southern army is to reach the Babun Pass. This pass lies across a divide in the Babuna range, a few miles to the southwest of Veles, and offers a means for the Serbians to pass to the westward of Uskub [illegible] a detour by way of Tetovo.

Simultaneous with the Serbian advance from the south, them ain Serbian army on the Kossoro Plains is throwing several divisions in the direction of Uskuf in order to form a junction with the smaller army. As military men see it, the Serbian operations are more replete with tactical manoeuvres than has been evident in any of the fighting to date.

The German operations in Galicia, in Poland, and in the early stages of the Western fighting, have been simply wedge drives, acting in conjunction with smashing artillery work.

It has been reserved for the Serbians to actually pass armies around the flanks, to take advantage of mountain passes, and to defeat detached forces of the enemy in detail.

If the Serbian Southern army can now form a junction with the division starting out from Pristina, there is every likelihood, military men predict that the Serbians will threaten Uskuf itself, and if Uskuf is taken the Allies will be able to reach the main Serbian army by passing right through Pristina over the Uskuf-Umastic Railroad.

The only portion of the Salonica-Uskub railway below Veles at present in the hands of the Bulgars is Grodesk, and this latter place is now dominated by the artillery of the French from the positions occupied by the latter on the right bank of the Cerna. If the French are successful in forcing the Bulgars out of Grodesk, the result will be to enable the Allies to push a large body of troops into Veles and thereby guard the entrance to the Babuna Pass. So long as the Babuna Pass can be kept open there remains the means of communicating direct with the main Serbian army on the Kossoro plain.

Uskub the Objective

To kep open communications between north and south both the Babuna Pass and Ogtoro must be held by the Serbians. This result will be effected at one stroke in case Uskub is taken. Uskub can be taken only, it is felt, in the event that the Allies seize this opportuit yto push strong forces into the north. The only immediate obstacle is Grodesk, and the task of taking Grodesk now devolves on the French, whof rom the first have been conspicuous in the forward fighting.

German initiative in Serbia is now directed from Nish. The entire Orient railway route from Belgrade by way of Nish, Sofia and Adrianople to Constantinople is open and the Teutons are in a position to send troops and supplies throught direct to the Golden Horn. The nearest position of Serbian forces to this through trunk line is at Pristina, and between Nish and Pristina the Germans are now advancing in force, with the main Serbian army as their objective.

The next few days may well be the most important in Serbian history. That a chance still exists for Serbia to hold her own depends largely, it is believed, on the ability of the Allies to rush the railroad line as far as Uskub and make a junction possible with the main army at Kossovo.

CITY LEAGUE OF BASKET TOSSERS IS IN VIEW

Efforts are being made to organize a basketball league among the young men of this city.

It is probable that the Modern Woodmen of America will organize a basketball team, and with the Maccabee and 1st Ward teams already organized, as well s a tem in the or Wrd, the indications are that a series of games may be arranged.

Tonight's game between the Maccabees and the 1st Ward team has been postponed until tomorrow night. The Nondescripts will entertain the Canastota team and their rooters in Church's hall tonight.

The 1st Ward team will endeavor to make up for the defeat administered by the Maccabee five Monday night when the latter outplayed their opponents in the second half. Eight men comprise the 1st Ward squad, viz: Painter, Rugg, Dutton (Capt.), Smith, Taylor, Yondo, Blake and J. Gillard, from which the quintet to oppose the Macoabees will be made up.

TEXAS BREAKS RECORDS FOR TURKEY SHIPMENTS

San Antonio.— All records have been outdone in the shipment of turkeys from Southwest Texas to the Northern markets for the holiday season. Reports from seventeen counties in this section, which supply many of the Thanksgiving birds, showed that 46,000 turkeys had been sent East during the last tne days.

DEPARTMENT INSPECTS ALL FIRE ESCAPES

Assistant Fire Chief Rude made several tests of fire escapes yesterday in the downtown district.

Particular attention was paid to escapes where a section extends from the ground to the second floor and which are operated by the weight of a person's body allowing the entire ladder to be lowered gradually.

On the Rosenbloom block, the upper floor of which is used by the Clark House, the fire escape was found to be in good condition. Although the fire escape has not been used for several years, the section descended as soon as one of the firemen placed his weight on it.

Chief Rude explained to the spectators that even though guests of the hotel might not be forced to use the fire escapes in case of fire the equipment would be of valuable assistance to the firemen in getting to the top floors quickly.

MRS. GALT DECLINES SYNDICATE'S OFFER

New York—Mrs. Norman Galt, the President's fiancee, yesterday informed Phillip Ortiz, American representative of the Paris Dressmakers' Defence Syndicate, that she had made other arrangements for her trousseau, and as a consequence could not accept the offer of the syndicate to make her gowns for her.

Boys' Club May Open Jan. 1; Cash in Hand $225; More Needed

Now that tentative steps have been taken to provide the young men and boys with quarters in which they may lounge under clean influences, the question uppermost in the minds of the men who have assumed the responsibility of making the venture a reality and a success is—How many more persons are willing to back up the voluntary contributions which now amount to $225; how many more dollars can be reckoned upon to swell the fund to $1,000.

The committeemen have in mind suitable quarters and if these can be secured at a moderate rental, the payment of the rental should be comparatively easy, as each member will be assessed a small sum for this purpose. Once the rooms are secured and the rental made secure the only remaining item of expense apparently would be light, heat, and janitor service, and these items can be taken care of by holding benefits, amateur shows, etc., conducted by lodges, churches and other organizations. It has been recommended that when an organization conducts a benefit, rummage sale, or some other money making venture, a percentage of the profits might be donated to the boys' club fund!

In the estimation of thec ommitteemen there is no valid reason why the clubrooms cannot be in operation about January 1st. This desirable feature will of course depend somewhat upon the willingness of a sufficient number of men coming forward with their services in addition to those who have undertaken to get the ball in motion, for at present not more than one-half dozen persons are working. It should not be inferred from this statement that there is any lagging behind on the part of the men who attended Monday's meeting and who have since then been giving freely of their time to the work, but it is simply a matter of the few finding that their time is curtailed by pressure of business. The half dozen willing workers would gladly give more freely of their time to make the projected boys' club a success than they are now giving, but business is business and the work should not devolve upon a few when there are so many persons interested in the cause. So, hip, hip, hooray, for more workers. Join the band now.

The club will be conducted under the supervision of a city committee, the members being assigned to instruct the boys and exercise proper control over them. It has been suggested to have a salaried superintendent in charge of the rooms, but this is out of the question at present, or until a firm footing is established.

MASSARO SUES PATHFINDER COMPANY TO RECOVER SUM ADVANCED BY PLAINTIFF

The case of Frank Massaro vs. Pathfinder Construction Company was opened this morning in Municipal Court before Judge Wilson and the entire morning was occupied in questioning the plaintiff. It is likely that no verdict will be reached before the close of the day as there are several witnesses to be questioned on both sides.

The suit evolves out of a contract which was awarded to Massaro by W. J. Hartnett, of the Pathfinder Construction company, to manage the commisary department of the construction gang engaged in laying a state road between Antwerp and Philadelphia.

As Mr. Massaro was not supplied with the necessary funds to construct shacks and provide other incidentals in connection with his contract, Mr. Hartnett had the necessary equipment put in place. Later when the scene of the road operations was to be shifted and another lot of shacks was constructed on the site of the new operations, Mr. Hartnett undertook the rebuilding of the camp equipment.

When settlement of the contract price was made the Pathfinder Construction company deducted the cost of the work provided for Massaro in connection with the commissary supplies. Mr. Massaro now requests payment of the money deducted.

PAID [illegible] TO KEEP SHIPS AT SEA

New York—Captain Karl Boy-Ed, Naval Attache of the German Embassy at Washington, personally directed the expenditure of $750,000 of money belonging to the German government in this country in September, 1914, in the equipment of vessels which left American ports under false clearances to coal and provision German sea raiders in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

This was the testimony of Gustave B. Kulenkampff, a wealthy German exporter and importer, in whose name the money stood, before Judge Harland B. Howe and a jury in the United States District Court today, where Dr. Karl Buenz, and three minor officers of the Hamburg-American Steamship company, are on trial on indictments charging them with conspiring to violate the laws of the United States covering clearance papers and manifests.

NO INTERFERENCE WITH MANUFACTURE OF SHELLS

New York—Germans will have an enormous amount of light field artillery and ammunition stored right here in the United States, unles the Bridgeport Projectile company can ship to Germany its output of 75,000 shells a week. Its identity is German, as established by its financial connections and its chief backer, Carl Heynen, a German lawyer and financier, of No. 165 Broadway.

There is no law and no authority vested in any officer of the government to interfere with the manufacture of an indefinite quantity of such material and its storage in Bridgeport or anywhere else.

OSBORNE OF SING SING.

Thomas Mott Osborne, the "honor" warden of Sing Sing, seems to be meeting a fate similar to that of Judge Lindsey. He is said to have offended "the old prison ring." His enemies are not prominent, but they are persistent.

A Dr. Rudolph F. Diedling, a member of the State Prison Commission, is Osborne's latest enemy. Diedling has announced:

"I have him on the hip. I have got him where I want him now." The commissioner's exultation is due to Warden Osborne's alleged refusal to show certain records. Osborne says he offered to let the commissioner have anything he asked for. A Columbia professor and a third person upheld the warden.

But that doesn't matter. Commissioner Diedling is opposed to "reformers' fads." He wishes prisoners "to labor and obey in atonement for their crimes." It is the old conflict between vengeance and reformation, between the middle ages and the Twentieth Century. This is why Osborne's fight has national signficance. It is also the reason he may be nibbled to death by ducks.—William L. Cheney in Chicago Tribune.

THANKSGIVING

James Whitcomb Riley's
Thanksgiving Poem

A Tribute to the Great American Author

Let us be thankful—not only because
Since last our universal thanks were told
We have grown greater in the world's applause,
And fortune's newer smiles suppress the old—

Let us be thankful for the loyal hand
That love held out in welcome to our own,
When love and only love could understand
The need of touches we had never known.

WHY NOT?

Fulton as a city is unique in one way at least. It has no Parent-Teacher Association. Parents and teachers never get together as co-workers, and consequently parents outgrow an interest in the schools. Also, the school finds itself sadly wanting when a question concerning schools is placed before the public. Mark the lack of interest by the small attendance at the public meetings called last year. The smallness of the "party" itself, of course, was of the least importance. It was, though, humbling in its significance as to the lack of interest manifest in a school problem in the community. To promote higher interest in this most important institution cooperation is necessary.

From another standpoint, the child, in order to gain his fullest teachings, needs appreciation and sympathy developed. How shall he learn these necessary qualities unless he catch the spirit in the atmosphere of his home, and how shall that spirit be manifest unless understanding go hand-in-hand with sympathy.

Why should not a Parent-Teachers Association be formed with a branch in each school district in the city? Why couldn't the parents be invited monthly that discussions be held relative to helpfulness both on the part of the teacher and the parent.

The average parent, unless he happens to have been at sometime a member of the teaching fraternity hesitates to enter a class room as a visitor. The teacher is much too busy a person to visit regularly the home of each pupil. The seasons come and go, our schools remain but schools, and are not the living, throbbing heart of the city from which radiates all that which means a broader, better and more wholesome community. If any one doubt the benefit of such united interest as shown by the creation of Parent-Teacher Associations, let him investigate the work done in places where such associations exist.

In a city of 12,000 persons it should be easy to gather enough interested parents to at least start the movement. Later there would be no question of large enough membership to make the work interesting. In other cities, as in Fulton, higher intelligence centers about the schools. Then why not corral that intelligence for the greater development of the community.

"SAFETY FIRST"

(Communication)

Where are the traffic rules and speed laws of this city?

Haven't we any? If so, why are they not observed?

Were laws just made to be violated; or were they intended to be enforced.

Automobiles and vehicles of all description are seen every day, driving on the wrong side of the street, cutting corners short, turning abruptly around in the middle of a block (instead of going to the corner) directly in front of an approaching trolley car or automobile without as much as glancing around to ascertain whether or not they are turning directly in the path of an automobile or trolley car; thus endangering the lives of themselves and others.

Automobiles are permitted to race through the streets and across intersecting streets at twenty-five to thirty miles an hour.

Just a few nights ago I witnessed what might have been a bad accident, had it not been for the fact that the motorman of the so called "Yellow peril" was operating his car cautiously across a bad intersecting street; the car was proceeding East on Broadway at about six miles per hour, the car windows were covered with rain, thus seriously interfering with the motorman's seeing out; and when the car had gotten half way across W. First st. an automobile came tearing recklessly up First st. at about thirty miles per hour and crossed directly in front of the car, nearly running over the fender and also nearly running down a pedestrian who was crossing the street.

This is only one of many such instances that can be observed every day.

Isn't it time we raised the "Safety First" slogan again and did something to minimize the amount of minor accidents and avert (what is sure to come) a serious accident?

Something should be done for the protection and safety of the lives and property of everyone concerned. CITIZEN.

SMALL FARM UNPROFITABLE?

Teh department of agriculture at Washington is soon to issue a report which will declare small farms unprofitable. It has long been contended that the welfare of a country is dependent upon the widest ownership and cultivation of the soil. If this welfare isn't profitable the economists will have something of a problem to solve. The department experts have been collecting exact information on this important and interesting subject, and they have figures to prove that the financial status of the small farmer is usually unsound and therefore hopeless. His costs of cultivation are disproportionate to his profits in almost all cases. In short, it is only farming on a fairly extensive scale that gives a reasonable return on investment and labor.

A number of the most successful farmers in this state have for some time insisted that corporation farming is sure to come, that large sums will be invested in land under one management and that by efficiency a good dividend will be earned. Already there is an enterprise of this character with an investment of more than a million dollars, directed by experts and engineers, marketing its own products and making big money. The success of this enterprise is sure to encourage capital.—Watertown Standard.

MISS JANE ADDAMS IS POOR LOGICIAN.

One cannot help being struck by the difference in Miss Jane Addam's argument against and Dr. Woods Hutchinson's argument in support of Dr. Haiselden's action in the case of the defective Bollinger baby.

Miss Addams argues with emotional language from emotional premises to a wholly emotional conclusion.

Dr. Hutchinson reasons upon the facts to the logical conclusion to which the facts must bring a clear mind.

The truth is that Miss Addams is a noble woman, who has performed a notable work for humanity, and who is at her very worst when she turns from that work to indulge in either political or scientific discussion.

The fact that Miss Addams employs Byron and Milton as examples of "defectives" who might have been left to die if all doctors agreed with Dr. Haiselden, is proof enough that she has no business in a logical discussion.

Milton was renowned among his contemporaries for his manly beauty of face and form. Byron was a vigorous boy and man—the darling of women in his time. One became blind after years of public service. The other had a small deformity of one foot.

To call either of these handsome, hale, vigorous men a defective is on par with calling a building like the Woolworth a ruin because somebody has broken a window.

With all respec and admiration, it is still to be wished that Miss Addams had continued to confine herself to her splendid life-task and had let politics, eugenics, peace conferences and medical arguments alone.—N. Y. American.

TAKING FINGER PRINTS OF CARELESS AUTOISTS.

A proposal to take the finger prints of every auto driver convicted of speeding sounds, to be sure, like business. It appeals to the Police Department and has the warm approval of Magistrate Daniel F. Murphy.

It ranks the reckless automobilist with the wrongdoers of the worst sort, and would no doubt add shame and humiliation to his punishment. Persons arrested and "finger printed" while suspected of crimes they never committeed feel the indignity keenly, and after their release move heaven and earth to have their digit records destroyed.

But after all this method of dealing with auto speeders seems far-fetched and unnecessary. Why tackle the job at the wrong end? If persons who drive automobiles in this state were licensed with proper care and scrutiny in the first place, if they were rigorously required to have their license cards always ready to produce—with photograph and personal description attached—if repeated breaking of the law or proved unfitness meant forfeiture of card and license, whatever other punishment might be administered, and if police and magistrates acted in such cases as methodically as they do in France, for example, we should soon develop a new sense of responsibility among drivers of motor vehicles.—N. Y. Evening World.

Fortunately relief may be had at a very small cost. Mrs. Leonard West, Eastwood, N. American Schools Thrown Open to Candidates for Citizenship

Washington.—Throughout the country the plan of the Bureau of Naturalization of the U. S. Department of Labor to enlist the co-operation of pubic schools in the education and Americanization of candidates for citizenship is receiving the most gratifying support. Approximately 400 cities and towns have already joined in this nation-wide educational movement for the elimination of the hyphen and this number is increasing daily.

The magnitude of this work and its development since its inception are shown, in part, by the territory covered, the number of candidates for citizenship reached, and the night and day schools which have been established for their instruction. It is the intention of the Bureau of Naturalization to communicate with all applicants for citizenship in the United States, wherever they are to be found, and to secure the opening of classes for them. During the current scholastic year all superintendents of schools where classes may be formed will receive monthly from the Bureau the name, address, age, nationality, and other necessary information concerning each alien residing within their jurisdictions who files a declaration of intention or petition for naturalization. In this manner the school authorities are enabled to get in touch with such applicants and afford them valuable assistance in preparing for citizenship. In addition to this the Bureau informs each applicant for citizenship that his name has been forwarded to the educational authorities, advises him to go to school, and points out the benefits to be derived from such attendance. The Bureau is also working in close cooperation with various patriotic and civics bodies of the country to secure the opening of public night schools where there are none.

The wives of all petitioners for naturalization are also advised to attend school, for the reason that they derive citizenship when their husbands obtain their final papers, and because, too, such instruction will materially aid the family to live as Americans live. It has been found that approximately two out of every three petitioners for naturalization are married, and it is toward the improvement of the home life and conditions that this phase of the movement is especially directed.

The records of the Bureau of Naturalization show that since the commencement of the school year on October 1 notifications have been sent to approximately 40,000 declarants, 20,000 petitioners, and 15,000 wives of petitioners, and each day hundreds are added to the list.

The present volume of naturalization shows that over half a million foreign-born residents annually bring themselves within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Naturalization, and it is the plan of the Bureau, through the co-operation of the public schools with its educational movement, to change that portion of the alien body now in a condition of helpless dependence or mere self-maintenance to the state of productive capacity which is the birthright of all American citizens regardless of their orgin of birth.

COUNTY Y. M. C. A. IN PROSPECT

Plan Works in Other Counties of State—Plan Might Dissolve Obstacles Existing Now.

Monday's issue of the Oswego Palladium contains a suggestion worth while. It relates to the promotion of a county-wide Y. M. C. A. and the plan seems to be entirely feasible, from the fact that the several cities and villages of this county are in themselves unable to support their own branch associations. The Palladium says that the idea has been tried in other counties of this state and it has worked satisfactorily. Continuing the Oswego paper says:

Fulton's Failures.

"For some time the Y. M. C. A. has been advocated in Fulton, Mexico and Pulaski and Hannibal, but fear of financial losses has restrained some and as a result the matter has never been tried out. In Fulton there have been numerous efforts to establish a Y. M. C. A., but in all instances it has failed to attract the majority of the public. Certain organizations leaning toward the policies of the Y. M. C. A. have been established in the churches and clubs and societies have taken the place of the association work. It is believed that the organization of a county association would extend the work of the Y. M. C. A. in such a way that all the young men of the county would derive benefits.

"To make such an organization possible it would be necessary to engage the services of a secretary who would organize the young men in each town into divisions which would make up the county association. Such an association has no equipment, although in most of the counties the city Y. M. C. A. is utilized for literary and physical development. The county organizations also have their athletic teams and literary societies. They co-operate with the churches and Sunday schools by providing lectures, etc. They provide a means by which all the young men in the county may get in touch with each other and become members of the same athletic teams.

"What the first move will be toward the organization of such an association in this county will be has not been announced, but it is said that the pastors of the counties have the matter under consideration. General Secretary Howard C. Flewellyn, of the local Y. M. C. A., has been asked for information on the subject on several occasions, one of which was recently. A club has already been started in Mexico, which may develop into an association in the near future."

CAN A COAT HAVE A PERSONALITY OF ITS OWN

Perhaps you'll think a question of this kind strange, but if you will reflect a moment, you will realize that even an inanimate object such as a coat bears a personality of its own. How often have you seen a woman, simply clad, yet so tastefully that you could not help but admire her and her selection of a coat. You felt that her garment had personality—that it was distinctive.

That distinctiveness is a quality found in every Printzess—it is the factor that has made Printzess the choice of women who want clothes of personality—yet they cost no more than the ordinary coat. Come in and let us show you the best of the Fall Styles.

The F. H. S. Orchestra is well organized and is giving excellent music at the public rhetoricals held in the high school. Next to the excellent music furnished the most striking feature is the fact that there are eight violinists in the orchestra.

At the last monthly teachers' meeting held in the high school last week, Miss Thomson, supervisor of music, showed her methods of conducting chorus singing and the results attained by using the 7th and 8th grade pupils from the State St. school. The work of these pupils, especially their ability to handle music which they had not previously tried, was very favorably received and heartily applauded by the teachers present.

this store will be a center of unusual economies. There is much fall and early winter merchandise to be disposed of before the holiday stocks arrive. The latter requires a lot of room now occupied, so the only way to relieve this assured congestion, is to move out fall surplus lines by instituting attractively low prices. This we have done in a broad way, covering every desirable and seasonable line of goods. For the next seven days "AT KATZ'S" should be the byword of every household where economy and thrift abounds.

"PROFITABLE STOREKEEPING"

In addressing the small town merchant says among other things:

"The small town merchant should be thankful that he is doing business where the opportunities are great, where the conditions are favorable, where he is something more than a number on a street several miles long.

"The small town merchant is a recognized factor in the community and if he is willing to do his duty by his fellow citizens, he may easily become a recognized power for good.

"He can reach out as far as the arm of Uncle Sam extends for more business.

"He can make his own personality the prime factor in developing more trade and he can be the best known merchant in his section if he will spend a fair share of his receipts for publicity."

A NEW FAD.

A "War Bride" Veil In Navy Chiffon and Net.

PICTURESQUENESS.

Over a navy velvet, close turban is draped in graceful folds a long net veil beautifully finished across the bottom with a rose pattern done in points. In addition a shorter one of chiffon is thrown back from the face, hanging about half the length of the long veil. These novelties come in all popular shades and are very piquant.

MEALS FOR MEN.

Some Masculine Peculiarities Worth Heeding For the Sake of Harmony.

"Now, that's the kind of dinner I like," said a big business man after dining at a friend's—"no frills, no pastry, and yet the whole dinner fine and dandy. Why don't more women make meals like that instead of all those dinky little dishes?"

The conversation following brought out further points of difference between men meals and women meals, the ornate, the complex, the really disguised foods which she herself relishes with delight.

Several men have these peculiarities: One has for breakfast, morning after morning, a bowl of top milk and white bread, with eggs in different forms; another lunches on rice dishes or the plainest of stews, and all men seem to like the dinner consisting of the following: A good strong cup of bouillon or plain soup, a steak or chops with peppers or mushrooms, a plain salad with French dressing and salted wafers and perhaps pie, with a strong cheese. These are not the plats preferred by madame. She it is who likes the nameless dishes of entrees, the deviled and pastrified meats or pates. She it is who likes the elaborate and creamed vegetable. She it is whose chief delight is the complex fruit salad with sweet dressing and the still sweeter cake and comfit dessert.

Now, this is but a plea for women to understand the tastes of men and not look for them what in reality the women like most themselves. We believe that this century old fiction that man has a capricious appetite is disproved by fact and that most men prefer the plainer, less elaborate dishes. We believe also that most of man's superior strength lies in the secret of his more wholesome feeding. We feel like believing that woman, too, might attain this superior strength if she also ate more plainly and spent less time in making concoctions. "Feed the brute," yes, but what he really wants, and then eat it ourselves, so we may attain his superior strength and physique in order to be shoulder high with him when that great wave of equality comes.

A Retreat For the Kiddies.

Every child needs some corner to call his own. No matter how young he may be, no matter how restricted the home space, he should have some refuge from adult interference. Few city homes and apartment houses are built so that a whole room can be turned over to a child for his exclusive use.

It is often possible, however, to give the child a corner in the living room or one of the sleeping rooms in which to keep his toys and where he may play undisturbed.

The result of such a scheme is that, instead of the toys being scattered all over the house, they are assembled in one spot, and the mother's work is lessened.

Low shelves, arranged like built-in bookcases, make an excellent storage place for playthings. It is imperative that the toys be arranged in an orderly manner, so the child can find a particular toy he wishes without disturbing the rest.

By tacking a strip of denim the color of the paper along the wall it is possible to protect the paper from finger marks, and at the same time it offers a place for the child to pin his drawings or the pictures that appeal to his taste.

Children love individual possessions, and often a plant or flower will add greatly to the appearance of the child's corner and at the [illegible] be a [illegible] of pride.

TOWN IS REWARDED FOR ITS HOSPITALITY

Winchester, Va., Will Get $1,500,000 From Outcast.

Washington.—Because it showed hospitality to a stranger from Pennsylvania who was hated at home the city of Winchester, Va., sixty-two miles from Washington and boasting of a population of 7,000, will come into possession of a legacy of $1,500,000. It is the bequest of John Handley, an eccentric millionaire of Scranton, Pa., who died twenty years ago.

Behind the legacy is a story that dates back to the civil war, when the people of Scranton stoned Handley as a Confederate spy, down to the day a few months ago when Handley's executors informed Winchester that it was heir to the Handley fortune.

Handley's will provided that for twenty years his executors should administer the bulk of his estate in such a way that at the end of that period they could hand it over to the Virginia city for the "education of her poor."

In a separate bequest, handed over to Winchester soon after Handley's death, the old man left $250,000 for the erection and equipment of a public library, which is now in use.

The town will use the money to build what it aims to make the model high school of the United States.

BAKED 20,000,000 BUNS.

Head of University of Notre Dame Bakery Kept Careful Count.

South Bend, Ind.—Brother Willimford, who estimates that he has baked approximately 20,000,000 breakfast buns, has completed his fifteenth year as the head of the bakery of the University of Notre Dame. He has kept careful count of the various eatables he has prepared since he began. The brother's family is about 1,500 while school is in session.

By Brother Willimford's calculations he has mixed 82,850 barrels of flour and made 642,500 five pound loaves of bread, 16,425,000 cookies and almost 20,000,000 buns for breakfast.

HOPES TO REACH 112TH YEAR

Uncle Abe Saw General Jackson and Talks Like History Book.

Atlanta, Ga.—Uncle Abe Coulter of Lafayette, Ga., is going strong for his one hundred and twelfth year. He was born Jan. 7, 1804, at Jasper, Tenn.

He remembers seeing General Andrew Jackson and his army. He saw the Indians corralled at "Big Spring" at La Fayette in 1837 and tells strange stories of happenings when the section was occupied by Indians. To hear Uncle Abe talk is like turning the leaves of history.

Murder Makes Tree Droop.

Thomasville, Ga.—There is an old pine tree beside a public road in Thomas county whose boughs all bend toward the ground. Legend has it that many years ago a man was murdered under it, and since that time the limbs have all grown downward. The colored folk attach much significance to the story and when passing always drive as far as possible on the opposite side of the road.

Pursuing an Elephant.

Any one who has once followed a traveling elephant will not show any undue haste to repeat the amusement, said a man who has hunted big game in Africa. The elephants sail along at an average pace of six miles an hour, regardless of the country, and stop for a bath or a short siesta perhaps once every three days. Anything more exasperating than following very fresh spoor at a dog trot hour after hour in a blazing sun, only to find at a late hour in the afternoon that one was forty miles from camp, with no food or water anywhere in sight and that the elephant had increased his lead from one mile to ten, it would be difficult to imagine.—Exchange.

Corrected.

New Maid—Please, ma'am, when I bring the dinner in should I say "Dinner's ready" or "Dinner's served?"

Mistress—Well, if it's like it was yesterday you'd better say "Dinner is spoiled."

Had Heard of Him.

The stranger, within the gates was walking along one of England's magnificent highways when he encountered a stupid looking rustic; but, being in doubt as to his direction, he decided to question the fellow.

"Am I on the right road to Stratford, Shakespeare's town, you know? You've heard of him?"

"Ha. Be you he?"

Irritable Children Often Need Kickapoo Worm Killer

There is a reason for the disagreeable and fretful nature of many children. Think of the unrest which the child's body is possessed by tiny worms sapping its vitality and clogging its functions. BOX COAT SUIT IN BLUE ZIBELINE.

As a change from the costumes in smooth-finished cloths this box coat suit in blue zibeline trimmed with silk braid is effective.

The new zibelines are very lovely and a great improvement over the zibelines of former years. They are used with excellent effect to design tailored costumes, the box coat being one of the newest of Winter models. As shown here the jacket is worn with a plain skirt, pleated at the sides and finished at the high waist-line with a pointed belt, stitched under the pleats at either side of the skirt. The coat is trimmed with braid, wide bands of the trimming outlining the front and lower edges and soutache ornamenting the wide pockets. Silk braid also forms the high collar and trims the sleeves. In medium size the suit requires 4¼ yards 54-inch material, with 3¼ yards wide and 1 yard narrow braid.

After folding the material in half place the back into position first, laying it on the lengthwise fold of the zibeline. Opposite the back place the upper sleeve section, on a lengthwise thread, and to the right of the upper sleeve section place the lower sleeve section. The collar and pocket are laid next to the back, on a lengthwise thread, and following the pocket is the front of the coat. The underfacing is placed along the selvage edge of the zibeline.

The collar, although it is shown in the fashionable high effect, may be turned down and the front rolled back. To do this cut off upper front edges of front and underfacing on double "oo" perforations.

The new zibelines show the same silky sheen found in so many of the new fabrics and will be liked by women desiring a change from the smooth finished materials almost invariably trimmed with fur.

Hats are large and hats are small, though the medium-sized hat is the one most generally seen. All depends upon the size hat that is becoming, showing that Fashion is more lenient in her decrees than those past years when every woman seemed but a reflection of her sisters.

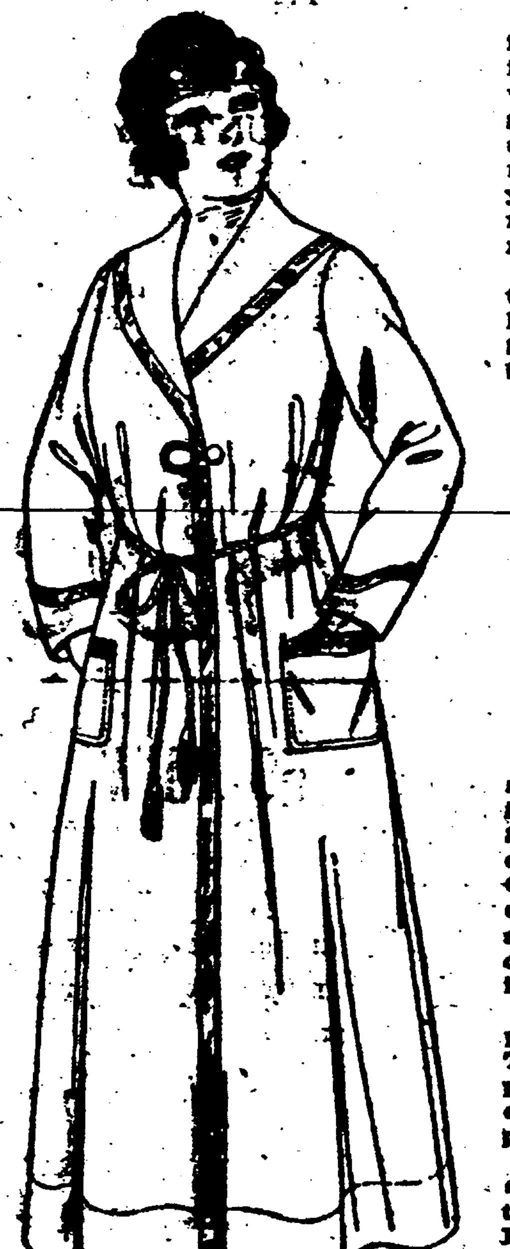
EASY TO MAKE IS THIS PRETTY BATH ROBE.



[illegible] of pink flannel which can [illegible] made and at small expense.

A comfortable, neat-looking bath robe is always a luxury, but here is one that is within the income of the woman with only a little to spend upon such a garment, and as she can make it herself the cost is further lessened. In medium size the design requires 6¾ yards 36-inch material. If bound with ribbon, 4 yards, 2 inches wide, will be required.

But a few hours are required to make the robe, which has a large square collar and is trimmed with large pockets. Shaped cuffs finish the sleeves. Begin by closing the under-arm and shoulder seams as notched, the center-front being indicated by large "O" perforations. Sew the collar to the neck edge, notches, front edges and center-backs even. Close back seam of underfacing (indicated by small "o" perforation) and adjust to position underneath front and on collar, center-backs and corresponding edges even.

The large "O" perforations in the pockets indicate the center-fronts. Turn the hem at the top and adjust to position on front, upper edge of pocket along crossline of single small "o" perforations.

Close the sleeve seam as notched, then sew up the cuff seam and attach the cuff to the sleeve, notches and seams even. Place the small "o" perforations of the sleeves at the shoulder of the robe and sew in sleeve, easing in any fullness. If desired, the elbow sleeve may be substituted, being finished simply with a hem.

SERVANTS MUST PASS TESTS.

Examinations Planned by Montclair Women—Wage Put at $25 a Month.

Montclair, N. J.—Work and wages for Montclair household servants are to be standardized. It is proposed by the local Housewives' league to have a central testing station, which will be conducted in co-operation with the board of education. Applicants for positions will be required to present themselves there and undergo tests in cooking, serving and other household accomplishments.

To those who pass the tests certificates will be awarded entitling them to employment at the rate of $25 a month where one servant is employed. The Housewives' league by a canvass of the women of the town has concluded that this is a fair wage. It is asserted that efficient help is available in Montclair, but because a system has not been maintained in the past many residents have gone out of town in search of servants.

Influence of the Jitney.

It is singular, says the Town Development Magazine, that the capabilities of the gasoline motorcar have not been more seriously considered with relation to cheap general city transportation and the inventive mind directed to the construction of an engine, chassis and body along lines as scientific as those of a touring car for the purpose of building the lightest, most comfortable and attractive transportation car that could be constructed for the public carriage of passengers over the well paved streets and gentle grades which characterise most of our cities.

What the ordinary cheap touring car can accomplish as a public passenger carrier and to what extent it could furnish a public transportation service were first demonstrated by the jitney movement. This movement has been so widespread that its significance cannot be ignored. No one can consider the subject of motor passenger vehicles without pondering the lessons the jitney has taught. Whether the movement lives, changes its form or dies, it has demonstrated the essential fact that it is possible to use the ordinary cheap touring car as a commercial passenger vehicle and to carry a passenger from one to three miles for 5 cents at a profit. This fact stands out. It has been demonstrated. All the theories in the world will not overturn it, and what transportation structure may finally be built upon this fact remains yet to be determined.

Hitching Post Suspected.

There is one spot in Riverhead, N. Y., which is being given a wide berth by the friends of the late George F. Stackpole, who recently died of anthrax. It is the hitching post in front of the Riverhead Savings bank. Mr. Stackpole's office was in the bank building. It was his habit all his life to eat several oranges, apples or other fruit each day. Usually in the lulls of his work he would come out on the street in fine weather, get the fruit that was in season, and then go to the hitching post, lean against it and eat. About him would gather his friends, and for periods of from an hour to two hours he would be the center of a laughing, chatting group.

Medical authorities voice the belief that it was while leaning against the post, perhaps fingering it with a hand that had a break in the skin, that Mr. Stackpole became inoculated with the cattle disease of which he died. Horses from all the country come to that post and lie there while their drivers transact business in the bank or about the vicinity.

Back Yard Gardening.

Four reasons are given by the city of Toronto for encouraging back yard gardening: (1) Hygienic—it helps to make the city more wholesome; (2) physiological—it is the best exercise a man, woman or boy could indulge in; (3) it enhances the beauty of the city; (4) utility—it increases the productiveness of the city, state and nation.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.

ITALIAN TOMATOES.—Remove thin slices from the stem end of six large hothouse or southern tomatoes and scoop out most of the pulp; then cook two-thirds of a cupful of macaroni, broken in small pieces, in boiling salted water until soft. Drain off the water and add the tomato pulp, drained of extra juice, and one-half cupful of grated cheese. Season highly with paprika and add salt to taste. Fill the tomato cases with the mixture, sprinkle tops with breadcrumbs, add a nut of butter to each and bake half an hour.

Fried Sweet Peppers.—Fried sweet peppers make an attractive garnish to serve with mutton chops, lamb chops, pork chops, ham or veal cutlet. Clean the peppers as usual, cut in three or four pieces and saute until tender and lightly browned, using butter or other fat enough to keep them from burning. If canned peppers are used drain carefully and allow them to stand until they have dried a little.

Stuffed Eggplant.—Wash and wipe a large eggplant and parboil it in boiling salted water for ten minutes. Let it get perfectly cold, cut in half lengthwise and scrape out the center, leaving the walls about three-quarters of an inch thick. Chop the pulp fine and add to it a small cupful of minced chicken, one-half cupful of minced ham, one-quarter cupful of breadcrumbs, a tablespoonful of melted butter, salt and pepper to taste. Mix well, add enough stock to make a stiff paste and fill with this. Bake, basting frequently with soup stock, for one hour. Serve with thickened gravy poured on.

Broiled Eggplant.—Peel and cut an eggplant in slices about a quarter of an inch thick. Over each slice rub a little olive oil and dust salt and pepper. Arrange them on a wire broiler and brown for three minutes on each side over a hot fire.

Mrs. George M. Coles is in receipt of a telegram announcing the death of her only sister, Mrs. Sarah Gloyd Bushnell, in Toledo, Ohio.

Mrs. Bushnell was in her 77th year and had but recently returned to her home, after spending the summer and earliy fall in this city. She was born in the town of Granby but left this section about 50 years ago to make her home in Toledo. She was educated at the Mrs. Cadwell school for young ladies, which was a landmark of former days in Fulton.

Arrangements for the funeral are not known, more than that interment will take place in Toledo, where Mrs. Bushnell is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Nellie McBride. Mrs. Coles is the only immediate survivor here.

Boys' Army Beseiges Rochester; Three Thousand Parade

Headed by the Y. M. C. A. Band of thirty pieces and under the command of Colonel Samuel P. Moulthrop, nearly 2,900 boys and young men will march from Covengton Hall this afternoon at 5:30 o'clock to Exposition Park, where a feast will be laid in Building 5. The army will begin its mobilization at an early hour today when all the incoming trains will unload tens and hundreds of youth, who have been selected as the most fitting representatives of their respective Sunday-Schools, churches or Young Men's Christian Associations at the New York State Older Boys' Conference.

Buffalo will send a delegation of 300 young men and a fife and drum corps, the party arriving on a special at 12:30 o'clock this afternoon over the New York Central. The New City detachment of 175 members left last evening on one of the Hudson river boats for Albany. They are scheduled to reach Rochester also on a special. Other specials to arrive at practically the same time are one with delegations from Albany, Schenectady, Amsterdam, Gloversville and neighboring towns, and another with Cortland county delegates to the number of 125. Forty boys are coming from the extreme northern end of the state.

The assembling will mark the largest oldest boys' conference ever held in the United States and will be one of the thirteen like conventions held in various parts of the country. The idea of these older boys gatherings is of many years' standing. The first convention, however, that alowed Sunday Schools and churches to send delegates, as well as Young Men's Christian Associations, under whose auspices [illegible] conferences are held, was held in Rochester four [illegible] years ago, about [illegible] boys attending.

The objects of such conferences are to stimulate the growth of the organizations which are laboring to build good character in young men and to arouse enthusiaism among the delegates for the greatness of the Christian life by the inspiration of numbers and talks by the great educators and Christian workers of the country. When it is remembered that each one of the army of young men has been chosen as the leading spirit of his organization, one realizes that these visitors of the next three days must be fine, strong, manly types of boys. They are from 15 to 21 years of age, most of them being of the midway station.

Convention Hall will be opened at 9 o'clock this morning for the reception of delegates and asignment to their quarters. Exhibits will be displayed in the annex throughout the day. During the choir rehearsal at 2 o'clock this afternoon in the main auditorium, the general Executive Committee will be in session to perfect arrangements for the convention. The conference will formally open at 3:30 o'clock at Convention Hall, William Gilman Low, Jr., a banker, of New York, presiding.

Following a religious service led by I. H. Meredith, of New York, there will be an addres on "The Challenge of this Conference" by State Boys' Work Secretary W. H. Burger, and an address by Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of Union Theological Seminary. The convention will be formally organized and delegations will hold private meetings to prepare for the march to Exposition Park.

The long line of marchers will form in South street, with its right resting on Court street. The Buffalo Central Fife and Drum Corps and Link's Martial Band, of this city, will assist the Y. M. C. A. Band in providing music for the parade. Adjutant F. E. Gugelman and Chief-of-Staff Henry D. Shedd will transmit the order of Colonel Moulthrop and promptly at $5:30 o'clock, the line will move toward the park in the manner prescribed by Commissioner Hamilton.

The banquet at Exposition Park will be as rousing an affair as it is possible for the great army of enthusiastic young men under President Charles W. Carson can make it. The tables have been placed and tonight will see the room decorated with flags and bunting and flowers. A sounding board will throw out the words of the speakers so that all may hear. "We're glad you're here," will toast Tarrance F. Ogden, of Rochester. "We're glad we came," will reply Gordon K. Greenhill, of Troy. Fletcher S. Brockman, associate general secretary of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., will be the speaker. He is an understudy of John R. Mott and said to be an orator of great attractiveness and power.

Monroe county expects to have four hundred delegates seated at the banquet. Local ministers will be seated with their delegates and the General Committee will be seated at the speakers' table. On the General Committee are Henry D. Shedd, chairman; Miss Laura E. Aldridge, James G. Cutler, Edgar F. Edwards, J. Allen Farley, Joseph Farley, Alfred P. Fletcher, Louis S. Foulkes, Herbert W. Gates, Frank E. Gugelman, Edward Harris, Mrs. Thomas L. Ingmire, L. H. Koehler, Herbet P. Lansdale, Wm. McFarlane, Albert E. May, Samuel P. Moulthrop, Herman J. Norton, F. Harper Sibley, Edwin Allen Stebbins and Frank M. Weston.

Sectional conferences will begin tomorrow and the general meetings will be featured in the evening with an address by Secretary of Labor William E. Wilson. The conference will close Sunday afternoon.

STATE DEPARTMENT MEN WILL WATCH FARMERS TO SEE EGGS ARE FRESH

Here is some pretty good news for the housewives and also for that bunch of us who have been the come-on for the confidence egg at the boarding houses. They aren't going to be any more cold storage eggs masquerading around as the strictly fresh article and the boarding house, restaurant and hotel proprietors won't have any alibis any more for historic bacon companions at the breakfast table.

The State Department of Foods and Markets has taken up the matter of cold storage eggs and henceforth and hereafter the Department says that cold storage eggs will [illegible] be sold as such and not [illegible] to be prosecuted, for the inspectors are to keep an eye on the markets and seeto it that the ancient hen fruit is sold as such and that the good name of the American hen and her product is not smirched by a perfectly nice appearing egg with a past. The law doesn't simply apply to the eggs that have been kept in cold storage, but also to the farmers who have a hoard of eggs laid away in the flush season which they are holding until the time comes when the prices go soaring and the hens moulting. Farmers as well as merchants are to be watched and cold storage eggs must be marked as such with conspicuous signs.

This week there will be a meeting at Albany at which State Commissioner of Agriculture Wilson and his deputies will discuss the cold storage egg problem. Another matter that will receive the attention of the Satte Department in connection with the dark past of eggs, will be a practice among some unscrupulous farmers of buying cold storage eggs and selling them as the fresh article.

Local eggs have been scarce for the past month or more, due to the fact that the hens are moulting and prices have advanced accordingly.

It is said that there is a good supply of storage eggs on hand, but that there is liable to be a scarcity of fresh eggs for some little time to come and this will mean high prices for the fresh laid ones. It is predicted that they will go well above 50 cents a dozen. In fact, many farmers who have white eggs have been shipping them to New York and receiving about that price for them where the quality was "fancy."

LONDON HEARS KAISER HAS ABANDONED PLAN.

London.—Convinced that the Germans are engaged in a general retirement all along the Dvina, military men are interested today concerning the Kaiser's probable choice of a line of defense for the winter on the norther section of his Russian front.

That the retrograde movement marks definite abandonment of all thought of the capture of Riga before Spring is considered certain. The Russians announced some time ago that they deemed the city safe for the present. The latest development is the first sign that the Germans have come to the same conclusion.

The German offensive's breakdown is attributed to three things—the increase in the Russian ammunition supply; a German shortage of munitions, and the weakening of the German line for the Balkan campaign.

WAR-WASTED COUNTRIES ASK FOR U. S. HELP.

Monastir, Servia.—Servia is starving. Men, women, children and even animals, fleeing before the advance of hostile armies, are dying of hunger by the roadsides and mountain paths.

In large areas of war-racked country there has been no food for many days. Packs of dogs prowl the breadless land like wild animals, searching for food.

Nondescript Mascot Was the Goose That Laid Visitors' Egg

The All-Canastota football team made its appearance at the Fair Grounds yesterday afternoon before a crowd of more than 500 persons. Appearances indicated that the weight of the visitors would be a material factor in deciding the game, but the Nondescripts outplayed the visitors, rolling up a score of 45-0. Nothing in the work of the visitors showed they were entitled to their reputation, as they repeatedly fumbled the pass made to them by center, and the generalship of the quarterback was poor. On two occasions when he could have staved off touchdowns by punting out of danger, the Canastota quarter chose to make a fourth down on straight line bucking with the result that the ball when to the Nons. However, it can be said to the credit of several of the visiting players that the individual work of some of the men was good.

The Canastota ends performed their work well, very few plays being made around them. Time and again when the Fulton backs ran toward the the visitor's ends, the man carrying the ball was obliged to sweep in between tackle and end. It was here that Fulton made most of the gains.

The trio holding down the center of the Canastota line put up a good game. Realizing the impossibility of breaking through center, most of the line plays of the Nondescripts were aimed at the tackle and ends.

LaVere, right halfback of the Canastota team was the star for the visitors, he being the only man on the team able to advance the ball. His running back of punts with poor interference was good.

As usual, George and John Ward were the individual stars of the local team, but the team as a unit is [illegible] for the excellent work.

Before play began, the Nondescript mascot, a goose marched across the field, the team following. Manager LeRoy held the ends of two ribbons of yellow and black, the club's colors, the other ends of the ribbons being attached to the mascot.

The game in detail was as follows:

The Nondescripts kicked off. The Canastota team was unable to gain and punted. John Ward made 10 yards through a hole in right tackle. A forward pass to Johnson netted thirty yards. The Nondescripts were unable to gain on four attempts in midfield and punted. A fumble resulted in the Nons securing the ball. By a series of plays through tackle and end the ball was taken to the 10 yard line, where it was lost on downs. At this point the quarterback of the Canastota team showed his poor generalship when in the shadow of his own goal posts he essayed to advance the ball rather than punt out of danger. The local team then took the ball on downs and Beavey carried it over. Score:—Nondescripts 6, Canastota 0. The goal was not kicked.

First Quarter

Canastota kicked off and after two line plunges Blake made 30 yards on a forward pass. G. Ward followed this up with a run of forty yards after receiving a forward pass. After three attempts, Blake carried the ball over for the second touchdown, which was not kicked. Score:—Nondescripts 12, Canastota 0.

The ball was kicked off to Canastota and on the first play George Ward broke through and scooping up the ball ran forty yards to the 10 yard line. John Ward hit the line hard for 10 yards and a touchdown. Score:—Nondescripts 18, Canastota 0.

Nondescripts kicked off. Canastota was unable to gain. On an attempt at a punt, the ball was missed by the Canastota back and a Nondescript man fell on it. The half ended here.

Second Quarter

Canastota kicked off. Blake made thirty yards around left end after the Canastota line had held. Ward received a forward pass and ran forty yards for a touchdown. Score:—Nondescripts 25, Canastota 0.

The Nondescripts received the kickoff and were unable to gain.

Opinions

THE ALLIES REORGANIZE.

The succes of German diplomacy in Bulgaria and Greece and the failure of the Allied army to check the invasion of Serbia were followed so closely by a reorganization of the executive arm in France and England that the two occurrances must be regarded as cause and effect. In each case an effort has been made to strengthen the dministration and to fit it more perfectly to carry on the struggle, both diplomatic and military. Whether the effort is to succeed time alone will tell; it is only possible now to say that neither England, nor France, nor Russia for that matter, shows any disposition to abandon the war.

In France the Viviani cabinet resigned, and a new ministry, headed by M. Aristide Briand, who is perhaps the most energetic and striking personality in French politics, has taken its place. The new ministry is made up of the ablest men from every group in the legislature. It contains no less than seven former premiers. During Monsieur Briand's former administration he won great praise by his firmness on the occasion of a dangerous strike; he is a moderate socialist, but he has given a seat at the council board to a representative of the clerical and royalist factions.

In recent months the world has learned to honor and respect the French people more than ever before. No one has ever doubted their bravery or their love of country; but the moral strength and steadfastness, the rugged determination and self-sacrifice that they have shown since the war broke out, both on the battle line and at home, have been a constant cause for wander and admiration. The willingness of all their foremost statesmen to serve in subordinate positions in this hour of peril to France is another manifestation of the true French spirit.

At the same time the new ministry is an experiment, the summess of which is not clearly certain. The ultimate aim of all the ministers is the same, but their former differences of opinion, which were not acidental, still exist. Coalition cabinets are not always successful, but this oneup romises well.

In England the actual direction of the war has been taken away from the cabinet, which is a large and, as experience has proved, a somewhat unwieldy body, and put into the hands of a war council of five men, who are, however, the leading members of the ministry, and who represent both Liberal and Conservative sentiment. England has learned much since the oBer War, but its self-confidence, its belief in its ability to "muddle through somehow," has been severely shaken in this war. It will be the task of the new war council to introduce more system and efficiency into the conduct of British affairs.

The visit of General Joffre to London and that of Lord Kitchener to Paris and to the seat of war in the Balkans are both evidences that the Allies are trying to bring about a more perfect co-ordination of their efforts in the field, as well as an improved administration at home. It is a military weakness of the Quadruple Entente that its members are equal in authority, whereas Germany directs the armies of its allies. But so far, at least, the Entente powers have not added to that inevitable weakness the folly of jealousy or faction.—Youth's Companion.

SPANKING IS GOOD PUNISHMENT

More than one aid to the education of boys has been recommended by authorities, but spanking is looked upon by Professor William Howard Taft as most essential to their bringing up. It is good to know that Mr. Taft is not tied to the more modern theories of ridding the rising generation of its foolishness; that he still believes in the use of the rod of correction to drive foolishness from the heart and mind of young America.

It is a pity that spanking and other forms of bodily punishment are now barred from educational systems, both at home and at school—and business—poltical and otherwise. The rod is forbidden in schools; is rejected by parents who allow themselves to believe it to be a relic of barbarism, and moral suasion takes its place.

Reasoning with a culprit is beautiful theoretically, but it is not convincing. Inasmuch as men are removed just a little whit beyond the stage of boyhood, of what use is there to waste time in reasoning with them in some matters? How much better it would be for us to take men of our acquaintance to one side and chastise them according to the good old fashioned plans and specifications. There is evidence before the people of Fulton right now of an instance where "to spare the rod is to spoil the child," but the specific case happens to be a child grown to man's proportions. If a small Myron or a Phillip were running amuck with a butcher knife, terrorizing everybody within sight of the weapon, the chances are that no one would attempt to use moral suasion to prevent further trouble. Spanking would no doubt find its place in educational economy, and a firm hand would do more to subdue the naughty boy than all the theories of the sympathetic souls combined.

There are persons who would have peace at any price; they are the ones who will condone offences committed by boys and men who are neither "niggers nor white men." It is therefore good to learn that Professor Taft is one of the noble men who does not encourage peace at any price, in school, in the home, in poltics and in business.

THE MAN WHO MADE GOOD

A moral might easily be pointed from the career of the Harvard halfback who by his touchdown made more than half of the score against Princeton on Saturday last. It is another instance of the stone rejected by the builders. "Dick" King failed to make the freshman team in 1912; in 1913 he tried for the varsity and was again rejected as a hopeless misfit. In 1914 he managed to hover about in the outskirts of a small horde supernumeraries, and the cup of his joy was full to overflowing when he was employed for a few minutes against Yale. Like Brickley, he has earned his resolute way through college; but he has given what Bacon would call "hostages to fortune," for he is married, and has two children. The glory that comes to him is the crown of persistence. Undoubtedly it was a glad surprise to him, as to the Harvard contingent, when he found himself with the ball in his arms behind the enemy's line. But his joyful consummation only came about after years of toil and obedience. Few who claim a feat on the playing field or in life's broader arena think of the long struggle that went before it. They cheer what they now see; they cannot know of the long, hard battle that preceded the triumph.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

WHAT'S A BILLION

What is a billion? A billion is a thousand millions, or a million thousands; it is ten times one hundred millions, or one hundred times ten millions. Our population is one-tenth of a billion, and in a hundred years from now it should be almost half a billion.

A generation ago only the astronomers thought in billions. Now almost everybody is thinking in billions—at least, everybody is trying to think in billions, although it is a good deal of a strain on our thinking apparatus. A few years ago it began costing a billion dollars a year to run our Federal Government. That started all the politicians talking billions. The organization of trusts brought dizzy totals of dollars to our attention.

The gentlemen who give us our crop figures had been totting up into the billions for some time, beginning with the corn crop, but nobody paid much attention to them. Now our wheat crop has got up into the billion-bushel level.

But it was the Great War that really brought the billion as a billion flocking to us and steeped us in higher multiplications. The Allies reached out their hands and said: "Lend us a billion." We lent them half a billion and they blew it in overnight. The war will cost one hundred billions, some say. A while ago we should have been staggered by such an announcement. Now we only shrug our shoulders and say: "Oh, very well; a billion's only a billion. Why worry when we grow billions of bushels of this and billions of bushels of that, and Wall Street trades in billions of dollars' worth of shares, and Congress spends a billion a year to keep the national machine oiled up?"

Yet, as a matter of fact, none of us quite realizes what a billion is. Whenever we try to put a tape-measure on it it gets away from us, and if we think very hard about it it gives us a headache.—Country Gentleman.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington. — The first conspicuous volunteer to report to Mr. Bryan's camp for the fight on the President's proposals for preparedness is Congressman Kitchin of North Carolina.

Mr. Kitchin is the ranking member of the House committee on ways and means. He will be chairman of that committee in the next Congress and as such will succeed Mr. Underwood as floor leader of the Democrats. He has never been an ultra-enthusiastic supporter of the President's policies. He was one of the nineteen Democratic representatives whov oted against the ship purchase bill; and his relations with the little coterie of Cabinet officers who have assumed to speak for the Administration have never been unduly intimate, His brother, ex-Governor Kitchin, wants to be Senator from North Carolina in succession to Senator Simmons, but the White House favors Simmons—and this does not contribute greatly to Congressman Kitchin's zeal for Wilsonism.

In addition, Mr. Kitchin will have to father the revenue bills which will pay for preparedness. He is radical in his views of protection; he is, in fact, about as close to a free-trader as we have in public life. And he is by no means enamored of the talk favorable to a continnance of the duty on sugar. Naturally, too, he dislikes to have his name linked up with a measure providing for an issue of bonds. Yet he sees these necessities staring him in the face and inevitable if any considerable measure of preparedness is adopted.

Consequently—by conviction, through political alignment, and because of personal pride of opinion—Mr. Kitchin's opposition to enlarged expenditures for defence is logical and natural. His refusal to join the President is a serious matter.

Both Mr. Kitchin and the Administration will seek to soften the force of the blow by declaring that the North Carolinian is acting on his individual responsibility and not as the Democratic leader of the House. This may be true; but it is intimated here that the President must be weakened indeed before Congress if he cannot carry his floor leader with him on a policy which has such nation-wide support as preparedness has.

This, in fact, is the case. The President will not dominate the situation this winter as he has hitherto done. In 1914 the Democrats in Congress were all candidates for re-election, while the President had two clear years ahead of him. The representatives then needed him, while he was measurably independent of them. Now they are all in the same boat together. They ar eall trying to hold their places. The President must play the game of Congressmen instead of asking Congressmen to play his game only.

So far as the defence programme is concerned, nothing can be done by the President and his party alone. Republican votes will be necessary. Republican votes will be supplied, but it is most unlikely that they will be forthcoming merely to ratify a plan which has been devised by the President and his Democratic political counsellors.

Mr. Kitchin, for instance, objects especially to the naval side of the President's plan. It is probable that Republicans also will object to it. Mr. Kitchin objects because he is a consistent "little-navy" advocate. Republicans will object because the plan, as now outlined, lacks the support of the naval experts whose opinion is entitled to the greatest consideration.

The Republicans in Congress do not regard Josephus Daniel's views as entitled to larger weight than those of the General Board of the Navy, and they will probably decline to follow Mr. Daniels in preference to Admiral Dewey.

In short, if the defence programme must be put through by Republican votes, it is only fair that Republicans should be permitted to say what the programmes should be. Heretofore Mr. Wilson has been impatient of suggestions arising from Republican sources. Now, if he is sincere, he must deal with Republicans on a patriotic, not a partisan, basis. Otherwise, he must face defeat in Congress for [illegible] defeat at the polls for himself.

MAKING PULP OUT OF HOPS

In the quest that is being made for new materials to take thep lace of wood for pulp from which to make paper, the Paper Trade Journal is in receipt of a communication from Consul Talbot J. Albert at Brunswick, Germany, showing that successful experiments have been made there with hop vines, Reports also received from India and South America show that a swamp weed in the former country and a species of pine tree in Argentina are being employed. Thef ollowing is the report made by Consul Albert regarding hops, which might be procured in sufficient quantities in certain sections of this country;

Annoucement has been made of the results of experiments undertaken by the Institute of Chemical Technology at Brunswick looking toward the discovery of new and cheaper methods of manufacturing paper from vegetable fibres Willow-tree bakr and broom fibre did not give satisfactory results. Experiments were then madew ith the fibre of hop vines, of which there is a plentiful supply in Germany.

It was found that when the fibres are treated with lye their separation is difficult. They are more easily separated by soaking in a 0.5 per cent solution of an inorganic acid. The same result can be obtained by a steam pressure of half an atmosphere. Separation of the fibre is easier when working with old hop vines that have been stored for a long time in the open air, or better still, artificial storage in a warm moist storehouse, is the best method of furthering separation. In this way a return of 20 per cent of good fibres was obtained.

The remaining wood, when treated with a soda lye under a pressure of three atmospheres, produced an excellent paper pulp, and the roots of the vines yield an especially long fibre.

TO AVOID DIVORCE.

Judge Charles J. Estep, of the Court of Common Pleas in Cleveland, after trying more than 425 divorce cases since September 1, has drafted six rules which he lays down to prevent divorce. His conclusions are not in the frivolous vein which so many remarks made on the subject have taken in recent years, but are sincere definite conclusions reached after study of the complaints made and testimony brought out in many cases in which he has presided. His rules are:

"1.—Husband, kiss your wife goodbye in the morning and say how do you do at night.

"2.—Wife, don't interrupt your husband while he is reading the paper or enjoying some hobby.

"3.—Husband and wife, teach your eyes to see fewer faults and more virtues.

"4.—Husband, don't tell your wife you are going to lodge when you expect to play poker.

"5.—Wife, don't nag your husband.

"6.—Finally, prospective husbands and wives, dont' get married until you have known each other a year."

JUDGE CONDEMNS USE OF HYPHEN

Justice Devendorf and Justice Crouch held terms of naturalization court recently and both took occasion to speak to the new citizens in the ligth of recent experiences in this country. Justice Crouch spoke particularly against the hyphen and referring to the oath the successful candidates had taken, he declared:

> That means that from this day forth you are to be American—not British-Americans notGerman Americans, not Italian-Americans. It means that if your native land is at war with another nation, so long as the United States is neutral, you may not, by an overt act against the rules of neutrality, give aid or assistance to your native land. It means that if the United States declares war on your native land, no matter for what reason, it will be your duty to fight against those of your own race or blood—and it will be treason punishble by death, if you give them aid or comfort.

Justice Devendorf pointed out to the men in his court that while native born Americans has to wait for 21 yeasr before they have a voice in the affairs of the country, some of the new citizens have had to wait but five years before they hav ea voice in the told them that they might be called upon to defend the flag, and finally he urged them not to sell their votes.

Talks such as these probably could not be more impressive than upon such an occasion. It requires some study to become a citizen, and to men who are not used to reading or studying it requires hard mental work, if the Justice of the Supreme Court holds strictly to the law and is not too easily satisfied that the candidates understand our government and institutions

Naturalized citizens have a reputation for selling their votes, but it might easily be unfair to say they are worse than the native born. A local lawyer who investigated political corruption of the sort is authority for the statement that it is an American institution. Certainly, in this business of selling votes, the new citizens are less to be blamed than native-born citizens. The purchasers are almost always natives, and between the purchaser and the seller, the one who buys is more damaging to society, and deserves thew orst punishment.

But the hyphenate American cannot say that America put the hyphen in his name. That is an exclusively imported institution. There is an exclusively imported institution. There are Americans who will ask a naturalized citizen to give support and comfort, either physical or moral, to a foreign government when such support is contrary to the welfare of America.

N. Y. RESIDENTS SAVE CASH FOR RAINY DAY

Washington, D. C.—Postal savings deposits during October increased $2,150,000 over the preceding month.

Savings on deposit on October 31 amounted to $71,500,000, and the individual depositors numbered 552,000. New York city, excluding Brooklyn, had $14,822,020 of this total.

MAY STERILIZE CITY GARBAGE

Watertown—Members of the board of health are considering plans new to Watertown for the disposal of the city's garbage and it is expected that these will be brought to a head Friday night at 8, when a meting of the board will be held in the council chamber of the city hall. The present contract expires December 31.

At the present time it costs the city $2,700 a year to have the garbage collected and removed. Under the methods being considered it is hoped tha a plan will be adopted which will turn the collection of garbage from al iability to an asset for the city and that it will receive a consideration for thep rivilege, instead of being compelled to pay money out.

According to the present system the garbage is thrown on the land outside the city and plowed under.

"Methods in vogue in other cities, are various," said Commissioner P. M. Willmott today. "Some cities commercialize it by extracting the oil and using the solids for fertilizer. This method requires a large investment. Another plan requiring capital expenditure, but on a smaller scale, is to install incinerators for the conbustion of garbage and rubbish. This is unquestionably sanitary, but there being no returns is wasteful and expensive.

"A fourth method which seems best adapted to cities of the size of Watertown is to fed the garbage to hogs after it is sterlized. Some cities conduct municipal piggeries, but most cities let it to private contractors. Colorado Springs, which formerly paid $1,200 to have its garbage colected, now receives $1,440 from its contractor for the privilege.

"The United States department of agriculture after making tests has approved the use of pork from garbage fed hogs."

At Friday night's meeting it is expected that suggestions will be made concerning the length and the terms of contract that will make the proposition attractive to contract bidders, and these will be welcomed.

LIQUOR CONTROL IN ENGLAND.

The first report of the Central Control oBard, appointed six months ago for the regulation of the liquor traffic in the United Kingdom, shows that the scheme has proven successful.

The original aim was to increase the efficiency of workers in the factories, and for a while the various regulations were confined to areas given over mainly to the making of munitions. Gradually, however, the regulations have been made to govern a great part of the entire population. Two months ago the large area of Greater London was subjected to several restrictions, including a no treating order and a reduction in the strength of spirituous liquors to from 25 to 35 degrees below proof.

The liquor control scheme has resulted in a reduction of 40 per cent. in the number of prosecutions in England and Wales. The suppression of treating doubtless had more to do with this than the reduction of hours during which intoxicating drinks could be sold. The watering of spirits may also have proved beneficial by lessening the amount of alcohol actually contained. While in some of the munitions areas there has been trouble with chronic drinkers, drunkenness among soilors, dockers and firemen has diminished considerably and the generally efficiency of workers everywhere is manifestly increased.—Utica Dispatch.

MASSAO CASE AGAIN NOV. 30

Sub Contractor Sues to Recover Sum Deducted by Pathfinder Company for Shacks That Were Built.

The civil action of Frank Massaro vs. the Pathfinder Construction company was adjourned late Wednesday afternoon, after an all-day trial. The case will be reopened November 30.

The folowing witnesses were on the stand: Jerome Meyers, carpenter, residing at Philadelphia, N. Y., who is employed on the road construction work which figures in the suit; Louis Longley, of this city, foreman of the job, and John Hartnett, one of the members of the Pathfinder Construction company.

The suit is the result of a contract which was awarded to Mr. Massaro by Mr. W. J. Hartnett, representing the construction company, to manage the commissaary department of the construction gang engaged in laying a state road between Antwerp and Philadelphia, N. Y.

As Mr. Massaro was unable to supply the funds necessary to construct shacks and provide other incidentals in construction with his contract, Mr. Hartnett had the necessary equipment put in place. Later, when the scene of the road operations was to be shifted and another lot of shacks constructed near the new operations, Mr. Hartnett assumed to rebuild the equipment.

When settlement of the contract price was made the Pathfinder company deducted the cost of the work provided for Massaro in connection with the commissary supplies. Massako now requests payment of the money deducted. Mr. Massaro was granted a bonus of $100 in addition to payments made on the contract.

The courtroom spectators found the case interesting and when the trial is reopened Nov. 30, it is likely that the courtroom will be well filled.

A man giving the name of G. Howard Gray, of 224 Oak Park ave., Chicago, was stricken with heart disease in front of the City Hall last night. He staggered toa pole on the curb and would have fallen to the pavement if a paserby had not caught him.

Several policeman who were in the central station carried the man into City Hall. Dr. C. L. Fessenden administered first aid and he experienced some difficulty in restoring heart action.

When Mr. Gray had revived sufficiently to talk, he said he had no near relatives, his wife and child having perished in the Eastland disaster at Chicago.

He had stopped off at Fulton on his way from Oswego, where he had been transacting business for a Chicago steel concern.

After being treated by Dr. Fessenden, Mr Gray was removed to the hospital, where he suffered a second attack.

A young boy, aparently about five years of age, had a narrow escape from death beneath the wheels of an interurban car at Oneida and 1st sts., yesterday afternoon.

FRENCH REPULSE STRONG OFFENSIVE MOVEMENT BY TURKS; 3 ATTACKS

Paris.—Heavy fighting has been in progress the last few days in Gallipoli, where the Turks undertook a strong offensive movement, but were repulsed by the combined fire of the British and French guns. Allied aeroplanes have bombarded the railway between Constantinople and Dedeagatch, damaging the bridges, and warships have bombarded the coast of Asia Minor.

This information is contained in the official communication issued tonight by the French war office, which also reports quiet on the Eastern front. The text of the statement follows

"There is no important occurance (in the Western theatre) to report.

"The Belgian official communication reads: 'Except for a sharp bombardment of Noordschoote, the calm along the front has been almost complete. Our batteries dispersed enemy groups to the southeast of Drei Grachten and towards Luchen.'

"Army of the East: On November 23rd our troops had en engagement near Brusnik, to the east of Krivolak, with the Bulgarian forces. These were repulsed.

"Expeditionary corps of the Dardanelles: The enemy has displayed during the last few days an increasing activity. On the 21st after a vilent bombardment, he attempted three successive attacks against the British front for the purpose of recapturing the renches lost on the 15th. His efforts were everywhere checked and cut down by the fire of the British infantry and artillery, to which had been joined the artillery and machine guns of the French forces. He retired, leaving on the field numbers of dead.

"On both sides the subterranean warfare continues with the same activity. On the 21st we successful exploded a camouflet. On the 22nd our sappers came upon a Turkish branch tunnel, and put to flight the enemy workers. We immediately prepared and exploded a mine, which shattered the enemy work.

"The entire day of the 23rd was marked by rifle firing, an intense bombardment and a stream of grenades from the side of the Turks, who, although replenished with munitions, displayed nervousness, harassed as they are by our aeroplanes, which bombarded the railway between Constantinople and Dedeaghatch and damaged the engineering works, and by the monitors and small war craft which frequently bombard the coast of Ssia. They are without cease kept on the alert and are obliged to oppose against us important forces."

ITALIANS TAKE AND HOLD SECTION OF TRENCHES

Rome.—An important victory for the Italians was scored yesterday when Austrian trenches between the fourth summit of Monte San Michele and the Church of San Martino was taken by storm and held in spite of desperate counter-attacks, says an afficial statement issued tonight by the war office. The communication follows:

"During the night of November 22nd-23rd and the following, the enemy sought by surprise and force to recapture some of the important positions taken by us. These actions, always were preceded by an intense artillery fire, occurred on Col di Lana, in the Zangora sectiion and on a height northeast of Oslavia. All these attacks were repulsed with very heavy losses for the enemy who left more than 300 bodies on hill No. 188.

"Our relentless offensive on the Carso Plateau, was crowned by a brilliant succes yesterday. Long, deep trenches between the fourth summit of Monte San Michele and the church of San Martino were stormed, the defenders surrounded and a large part of them taken prisoner. The enemy immediately deluged the lost positions wtih shells of all calibers and behind a curtain of fire massed important forces for a counterattack east of San Marino.

"While our infantry held firmly their positions, exposed on all sides, our batteries with rapidity and precision con.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG IN "MARRYING MONEY."

World Film Corporation presents the comedy, "Marrying Money," with Clara Kimball Young in the star part of Mildred Niles, at the Quirk tonight.

The story relates how a girl is deputed by her family to marry a rich Count who, however, turns out to be the possessor of nothing more valuable than his title. Marrying to order is not really the girl's own conception of her mission in life, and she falls in love with a young fellow, Ted, impersonated in the photoplay by Chester Barnett, who hasn't a cent to his name. The young couple are perfectly happy with ecah other, however, and an agreeable surprise awaits them in the news that after all Ted comes into a rich inheritance, so that Mildred finally succeeds in "marrying money," and love as well.

The part gives Clara Kimball Young an opportunity of displaying her rich comedy gifts to perfection. The picture has been produced by James Young, who has provided an adequate cast and beautiful settings for it.

"PROFITABLE STOREKEEPING"

In addressing the small town merchant says among other things:

"The small town merchant should be thankful that he is doing business where the opportunities are great, where the conditions are favorable, where he is something more than a number on a street several miles long.

"The small town merchant is a recognized factor in the community and if he is willing to do his duty by his fellow citizens, he may easily become a recognized power for good.

"He can reach out as far as the arm of Uncle Sam extends for more business.

"He can make his own personality the prime factor in developing more trade and he can be the best known merchant in his section if he will spend a fair share of his receipts for publicity."

A WORRIER

Thanksgiving Day Brought Her a Respite

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

When the great war broke out in Europe my little girl, Fredrica, was in Munich studying art. I at once became uneasy about her, and when I heard of the great number of Americans detained in Europe I lost my head entirely. I wanted John to go abroad at once and bring our daughter home.

He endeavored to quiet me, reminding me that Fredrica was not the child she had been; that it would be difficult for him to get across, still more difficult to find her and much more difficult still to get back to America. He was worried himself, though he did not admit it to me, well knowing that we had been able only to keep our child supplied with sufficient funds to pay her way from month to month without providing anything ahead, and she had no means to bring her home.

Week after week passed, and we heard nothing from our chick. Worrying told on me bodily, and I was reduced to skin and bone. At last I told John that if he did not do something to end my suspense he would lose me as well as Fredrica. He went out at once to learn if he could get across the ocean, and, finding that a ship would sail next day, he took passage on her and, procuring by loan what money he would need, bade me goodby. "I have no doubt," he said, "that Fred will be here with you before I return. Nevertheless there is no help for it; I must go after her."

As soon as he had gone I was half sorry I had let him go. Now I had the two of them to worry about instead of one. Besides, by this time ships began to come in loaded with returning Americans, and the stories of their discomforts were harrowing. John went over in an English ship, and I worried lest he should be captured by one of the German war vessels at that time roving the sea.

When, true enough, I took up a newspaper and saw that this had really happened I was in despair. It was all I could bear to think of my only child detained without means in Germany, and now I had the additional worriment of her father carried about on the ocean with no prospect of being landed anywhere, for he might be captured by a German cruiser, and they were running the gantlet of the enemy's cruisers and often did not put into port for months at a time.

John started abroad about the 1st of September. Of course he could not communicate with me unless put ashore, and even then he might be landed on the other side of the world, in which case, the mails being interrupted, it might take a letter months to reach me. At that time I had only our daughter to worry about, and now the causes of worriment were tripled. I worried about Fredrica, I worried about John, and I worried because I knew that John would worry about me. I believed that if I could have thought of anything else to worry about I would have included it. The only thing else there was to worry about was myself, but that didn't trouble me a bit. And yet there was apparently more cause to worry about myself than either of the others, for I had lost twenty pounds and was gradually sinking into the grave.

November came and not a word from either of my absent ones. I had intimate friends, of course, who tried in every way to bolster me up. My cousin, Ellen Thompson, asked me about a week before Thanksgiving to promise that I would spend the day with her and her large family. She said that with so many of them I would forget my troubles. I told her that I would be more miserable in the midst of a happy family than alone; I would spend Thanksgiving in my own home, enduring my loneliness as best I could.

The day before Thanksgiving I went around to Ellen Thompson's to ask if she had seen in any of the papers a notice of the landing of the persons that the German cruiser had captured.

"Why, Ellen, what in the world are you going to do with two turkeys?" I exclaimed, noticing a pair of gobblers just delivered from the market.

"Oh, we've so many mouths to fill," she said, "that one turkey won't do."

It seemed to me that she had ordered provisions enough to last her a fortnight. But I said no more about it, and since Ellen said that she hadn't seen anything to comfort me in the papers I went home. I carried more worry with me, for before I left Ellen she put her arms about me and smiled at me. I reckoned that she was concealing some bad news from me.

The next morning, Thanksgiving day, I had scarcely finished dressing when, hearing a vehicle stop before the house, I looked out through the window, and who should I see but John alighting from a cab! And the next thing I saw was John handing out Fredrica. I ran downstairs at the risk of my neck, and, meeting them at the front door, together they kept me from falling on the floor in a faint.

Soon after their arrival Ellen brought us an extra Thanksgiving dinner she had provided for us, for John had sent her a message from quarantine to let her know that he and Fredrica were coming. We had a glorious Thanksgiving, John and Fredrica narrating their adventures. John had been put ashore from a cruiser that had captured him in an out of the way place and had gone to Munich, where he found Fredrica quietly pursuing her studies, waiting her next remittance.

I tell John that I will never worry again. He adds, "Till the next time."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

AMBLER TRADE BOARD PLANS INDUSTRIAL BOOM.

Small Pennsylvania Town Has Campaign For Community Betterment.

The borough of Ambler, Pa., will witness a distinct boom if the plans of the recently formed Ambler board of trade are carried to completion. Backed by more than fifty of the town's most active business and professional men, residents say there is every reason to believe the new organization will not, like so many similar ones in the smaller boroughs, be active for a time and then quietly die.

Comprehensive plans have been outlined by the board of trade for community betterment and advancement. Movements to be developed immediately include the erection of booster signs for Ambler at the approaches to the borough. Also there will be designating signs on borough highways, as well as the obtaining of additional industries, at least two of which now are being considered.

J. Howard Dayer, president of the Ambler board of trade, had this to say concerning the recently inaugurated movement:

"Ambler business men have organized for the purpose of fostering, encouraging and developing the mercantile and manufacturing interests of the borough, for the purpose of studying the workings of all transportation lines operating in and through the borough and for the remedying of defects and abuses of transportation methods, telephone and telegraph facilities, gas and electric lighting and all other public service corporations operating in the town, and to promote integrity, fair dealing and good faith among our business people and their patrons.

"It is our intention, further, to obtain as many local conventions as possible. And, while Ambler has 'been on the map' for a good many years as a leading industrial and manufacturing community in the district immediately north of Philadelphia, we are going to 'make that map dot much larger.' We hope to accomplish this end largely by co-operating and urging the improvement of all county, state and township roads leading into the borough, to the end that motorists will appreciate our efforts. Summarized, the work of the Ambler board of trade will be absolutely constructive, the betterment of moral, social, commercial, civic and industrial conditions in Ambler. We are at this time negotiating with one manufacturing plant desirous of locating a branch here."

Modern Street Cleaning Appliances.

The illustrations show a tractor and trailer such as are used by the department of street cleaning of New York city. These tractors and trailers are of ten ton capacity and are so constructed that a trailer carrying garbage and ash cans may be hooked to the tractor, or the tractor may be used for supplying locomotive power to a sweeper trailer or a flusher trailer or a snowplow. Twelve of these machines are part of the equipment installed in the model district in New York city. This district was established in response to the suggestion of Street Commissioner Fetherston that one of the districts of the city be selected in which modern appliances and apparatus should be used.

A TRACTOR AND TRAILER.

Slow Burning Moving Picture Films.

An important activity of the New York bureau of fire prevention has been the attention given to the subject of moving picture films. Recognizing the danger to the public from the use of the nitrocellulose film, the New York fire department has endeavored to encourage the manufacture and general use of films made of safe substances. A number of experiments have been conducted, and the department has made, for its special use in educational propaganda, a series of films on slow burning material, which so far have proved satisfactory.

GARDEN CITY MOVEMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Idea Should Receive Greater Industrial Encouragement.

The time has never been more opportune than the present for American manufacturers to give serious thought to the advancement of the garden city movement, according to W. J. Hoggson. The congestion in our large cities, he says, contrary to all natural laws, has about reached its limit. We can no longer excuse ourselves for past errors in town planning on the theory that this is a young country. New towns are being laid out today with the same pitiful lack of constructive imagination as heretofore, paralleled streets giving the aspect of a great ugly checkerboard, with no civic center, no playgrounds and insufficient parks.

The garden cities that are destined to bloom in America and that are to be the result of a movement fathered by American industrial institutions should be lacking in no respect and should be equal, if not superior, to any like developments anywhere in the world.

The garden city and town planning movement has reached the highest point of effectiveness in England. The model villages of Letchworth, Port Sunlight and Bourneville, which provide homes, real homes, for working people, are artistic creations of men possessed of splendid imagination and sympathetic understanding.

TREES FOR CITY PLANTING.

Elm Has Been a Failure In New England.

The love and veneration of the New England mind for the elm is so great that it is hard to acknowledge that this tree is almost a total failure in city planting, says the Boston Transcript. As a matter of fact, the liability of the elms and maples to insect attacks, the brittleness of some of the maples and the sensitiveness of both trees to dust and gas conditions unfit them for the test of a strong gale.

On the long path of the common a sturdy English elm, not old nor decrepit, was reft in twain by the wind. Near it stands a red oak which lost not a single twig or leaf. The young oaks planted in recent years in the Arnold arboretum, in the parkway near the Forest Hills section, in the Back Bay Fens, in Brookline and elsewhere, are a joy to the eye and a solid assurance of arboreal beauty in the future. Not only do these young oaks withstand the storms and the insect pests, but they appear quite indifferent to dust, to gases, to excavation and to all the city conditions which prove so disturbing to the elms and American maples. Oaks, planes, Norway maples indicate themselves through every test of storm and insect plague to be the best trees for city planting. It is certainly a sad thing to bid farewell to a single elm or sugar maple, for no trees are more deeply loved by any people or with better reason in long association and the record of noble sheltering service, but it is apparently a farewell which is ordained by the powers of nature.

Epidemics and Schools.

Doubt as to the wisdom of closing schools during epidemics of contagious diseases is expressed by Dr. Francis George Curtis of Newton, Mass., in a bulletin on the "Health of School Children," which has been issued by the United States bureau of education. Dr. Curtis says:

"If the schools are closed when an outbreak occurs the children are turned loose from supervision. They mingle freely with one another in the streets, on playgrounds and in one another's houses. They are having an extra vacation and enjoying themselves thoroughly and are unwilling to admit that they feel ill, lest they be kept at home and prevented from having a good time. For this reason they will not say they feel ill until the disease is well advanced, and there may be active sources of infection for some time before it is discovered that they are ill.

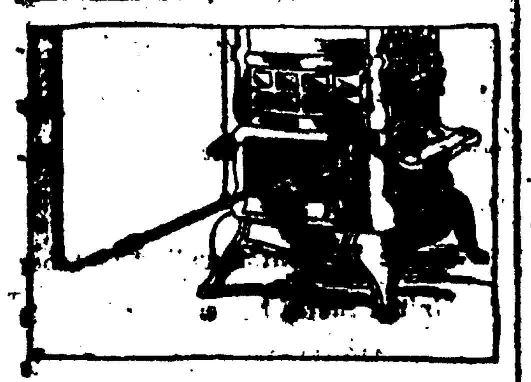
"If the schools are kept open and the children continue in the classrooms as usual, they are under strict observation and examined daily by the school physician, suspicious and infected cases being sent home for observation or treatment."

New Idea For Playgrounds.

Oakland, Cal., has a system of playground government that might well be adopted in many cities of the country. According to an announcement made by the Oakland chamber of commerce and Commercial Club Consolidated, the children of the Bella Vista playgrounds in Oakland are put under the management of a committee of boys. This committee is called "little citizens' committee" and consists of ten youngsters from different neighborhoods near the playgrounds. The committee draws up the rules and regulations governing the playgrounds, and if a member of the committee detects a violation of the laws he promptly hales the offender before his brother committeemen and a trial takes place. The work of the committee has been closely watched by the board of playground directors, and if it is the success it promises to be the system will be recommended for adoption at all thirty-nine playgrounds in Oakland.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Fire Lighting Device For Coal Stoves.



Designed to be used in stoves, furnaces and other heating apparatus, a fire kindling device has been invented which eliminates much of the trouble of rebuilding a fire which has burned out during the night, says Popular Mechanics. The lighter is arranged much in the style of a gas torch. It consists of a pipe of convenient length, at one end of which is a gas burner and at the other end a nipple to which a rubber hose may be connected. When it is desired to start a fire or prevent one from dying out this burner is lighted and the torch placed beneath the furnace grate in such a position that the gas flame comes in contact with the coal and ignites it.

Roasting a Turkey.

Select a young one, not to weigh more than twelve pounds; dress, pull the pin feathers, then singe and cut off the ends of the wings. Draw without making too large an opening and remove crop by cutting a lengthwise slit in the back of the neck. Wash inside very carefully and be careful to remove every particle of the lungs. Next remove tendons; then, lastly, draw the skin over the bones and tie, using broad muslin strips. Fill cavity at neck with dressing; sew with twine or use wooden skewers. Fill the body of turkey and fasten likewise. Fasten wings close to body. Rub thoroughly with drippings, dredge with flour, seasoning well with salt and pepper. Place in roasting pan, cover bottom of roaster with hot water, baste frequently and bake rather slowly about four hours or until tender.

Care of the Stove.

Heat a new stove slowly the first few times and do not pile coal above the firebox nor allow the top of the range to get red hot. It will often warp and crack the top. Keep the grate unclogged by shaking often. Do not rush the range with oven draft open. This wastes fuel and burns out the range too fast. Do not allow the smoke draft to stand open except when putting in fuel. Keep the oven scrupulously clean; wash it at least once a week. Remove shelves and doors before beginning the washing and scrape off all burnt substances. Leave the oven door open until dry and all smell of soap is gone.

Smothered Steak.

Sirloin steak, about two pounds; one-half cupful chopped onion, one-half cupful chopped green peppers, three-quarters cupful chopped tomatoes, one tablespoonful butter, salt and pepper to taste. The steak should be cut about three-fourths of an inch thick. Heat a heavy frying pan till very hot, put in the steak and cook it, turning continuously, about seven minutes. Salt when nearly done. In the meantime the butter should be melted, the vegetables added and cooked slowly till tender, about twenty minutes. Season to taste with salt and pepper and serve spread over the meat.

Maple Charlotte.

Melt one cupful of grated maple sugar in half a cupful of boiling water; dissolve a half ounce of powdered gelatin in one pint of cold milk, then bring it to boiling point; add to this the yolks of two eggs beaten with two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar and stir until it begins to thicken. Remove from the fire and add the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs, the dissolved maple sugar, half a cupful of chopped English walnuts and a teaspoonful of vanilla extract. Stir all together well, then pour into a wet mold and set away to harden.

Keep the Cruets Clean.

Everybody knows how difficult it is to clean cruets and decanters that become discolored and stained. This is a good way to clean them: Roll up in small pieces soft brown or blotting paper, wet them and soap them well. Put them into the decanters about one-quarter full of warm water, shake them well for a few moments, then rinse with clear cold water; wipe the outside with a clean dry cloth, put the decanters to drain, and when dry they will be almost as bright as new [illegible].

Soft Gingerbread.

One-fourth cupful of sugar, one-half cupful molasses, one-fourth cupful of butter, one teaspoonful ginger, one teaspoonful soda dissolved in one-half cupful of boiling water. Add one and one-fourth cupfuls flour and one egg. Beat well and bake in a slow oven. Cover with a frosting made with one cupful sugar and the white of one egg, to which add grated or stewed apple.

A Laundry Hint.

When washing colored goods add vinegar in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a quart of water. It will brighten [illegible] goods [illegible] and prevent [illegible] from running.

A FETCHING NOVELTY.

A Checkboard Suit of Black and White Mixture.

A DAPPER EFFECT.

Trimness is the first word about this suit, and the snug military collar and metal buttons are its points of interest. Black velvet is used to re-enforce the cuffs and collar, which are outlined by [illegible] bands, as is the front. The irregular skirt of the coat hangs in a graceful flare, and the skirt itself is a good walking length.

A Subtle Expression of the One Piece Frock.

Dressy in effect, yet simple in design, is this princess costume of mole colored broadcloth trimmed with beaver and having an embroidered self-belt.

This adorable frock of princess design is fashioned of mole colored broadcloth. The skirt and cuffs are trimmed with bands of beaver and the high collar is of the same fur. The frock is self-belted, the ends of the belt being ornamented with embroidered motifs.

The dress is cut in six gores and does not require a lining. It would be equally smart in serge, voile or taffeta trimmed with bands of velvet or satin instead of fur. In medium size the model requires 4½ yards of 54-inch material, with 5 yards of fur for trimming. About ⅝ yard silk will be needed to line the belt.

The material is divided into two parts for cutting. The first section is folded in half and the second in quarters, with the selvages meeting, as shown in the cutting guide. On the first half the side front section is placed first, and, although it rests along the fold of the cloth, it is cut on a lengthwise thread. If desired there may be an applied back; this is particularly useful for winter wear and, if used, should be laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods.

The back is laid opposite the side front, and about this are placed the shield and belt; to the right of it are placed the collar and cuff.

On the quarter fold of the goods the front is laid, with the collar to the right. Opposite these are the sleeves, with the back gore to the right of sleeve. After all of the sections are laid on the cloth it will be seen that the space has been covered to the best possible advantage. The smaller pieces may be used for buttons, if desired.

If carried out in taffeta the applied back would be effective in serge or cloth, as these materials are combined very effectively this season.

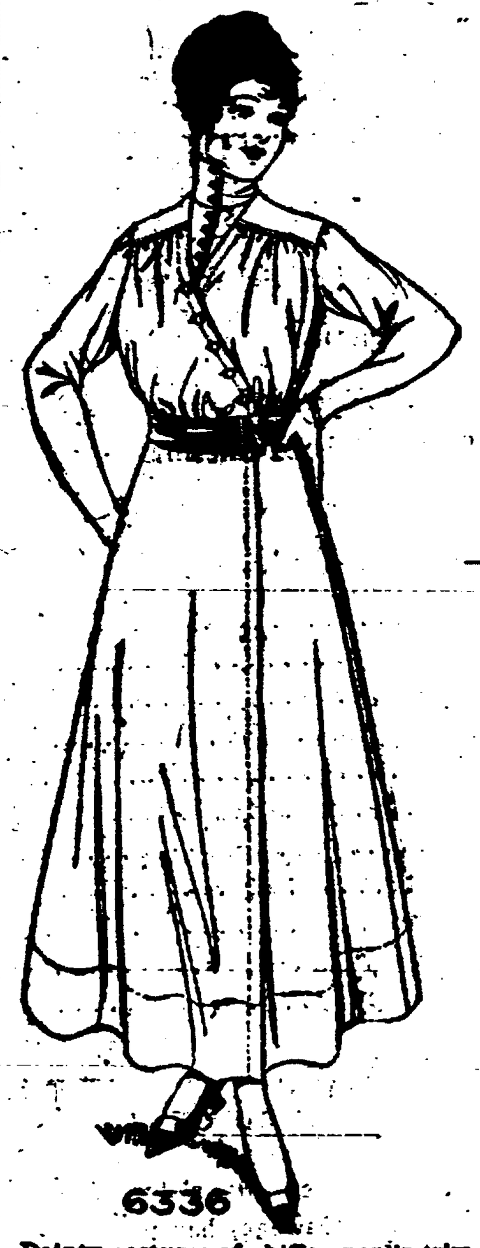
Simplicity With Undeniable Style.



Dainty costume of chiffon poplin trimmed with satin. A note of novelty is struck in the method of fastening the waist.

Fashioned of chiffon poplin and trimmed with collar and cuffs of satin, this would make a charming dress to be worn on all informal occasions. There is a note of novelty about the adjustment which extends across the front in fichu effect, and the belt may be contrasting material to match the collar, if desired.

In medium size the costume requires 5½ yards 36-inch material, with 1 yard of satin for the collar, cuffs and belt. With two exceptions, all of the sections of the dress are cut from an open width of material. The home dressmaker understands, of course, that two open widths are laid together so that the sections will be cut out in duplicate. Two "rights" or two "wrongs," as the sides are popularly called, must be placed together so that both sides will not be alike after the sections are cut.

The back gore is placed into position first. Where it is sloped toward the waist-line there is left a space which accommodates the front of the waist. To the right of this section is placed the front gore of the skirt and opposite the skirt gore is the sleeve.

Now, on the quarter fold of material (so folded that the selvages meet) are laid the back on the lower fold and the collar on the upper fold.

The skirt may be shortened, if desired, by cutting off lower edges of gores on single or double "oo" perforations.

The back of the waist extends over the shoulders to form a yoke effect, and here a piping or bit of fancy beading may be added, if further elaboration is desired. The costume is an ideal foundation for the addition of the little details that go for smartness, though taken just as it is it expresses the acme of chic simplicity.

HIGH MAY APPEAR IN NEW TOGS AGAINST FIRST WARD

The High School basketball squad practiced last night in preparation for the game with the Madison Club of Colgate tonight.

The game has been extensively advertised and it is expected that the City Hall gym will be packed with an enthusiastic lot of followers of the team. A large advance sale of tickets has been made. A ticket purchased in advance can be secured at a cheaper price than one at the door.

It is likely that Coach Merrill will start the game with the following five men in the lineup: Thompson and Webb, guards; Wallace, center; O'Brien and Martin, forwards.

Several of the second string men, especially Chadwick, Frawley and Johnson, are making strong bids for positions on the team.

When the local players appear on the floor tonight, it is likely they will be dresed in new togs.

Tonight's game will in reality be a special attraction, the Madison Club not having been booked on the regular schedule of the high school team. Manager O'Brien was able to book this college team, which is reputed to be of high class. The game will commence promptly at 8 o'clock.

"THE BOHEMIAN GIRL."

The big spectacular presentation of Balfe's masterpiece, "The Bohemian Girl," is announced for Wednesday, Dec. 1, at the Quirk is the same mammoth production with a few additions, that the Aborn Opera Company has presented in all the large cities of the United States and Canada for the past several seasons and which is credited with having been an immense success. By many this production is considered the crowning effort of the career of the Messrs. Aborn as producers of Grand Opera in English. To the lovers of "Music worth while" the melodious quality of Balfe's score which contains such gems as "The Heart Bowed Down," "Fair Land of Poland," "Bliss Forever Past," "I Dreamt I Dwell in Marble Halls" and "Then You'll Remember Me" will ever fascinate, but in the present spectacular form "The Bohemian Girl" takes on new life and makes a strong appeal to all classes for in addition to the charm of its music the Messrs. Aborn in their effort for realism, it is said, now gives us some of the thrills of melodrama, some of the best circus acts ever seen besides a [illegible] and various other animals and the wonderful Tzigani Troupe of Acrobats. Particular care has been exercised in the selection of the cast and the big chorus of this seasons organization. A special orchestra will lend much to the rendition of Balfe's beautiful music. Among the Grand Opera soloists with this company are Edith Allan, Henry Taylor, Mildred Rogers, George Dunstan, Francis Tyler and Ralph Nicholls. Balcony, 25-35-50. Main floor, 75-1.00-1.50.

MACCABEES DREW FIRST BLOOD FROM WESTENERS.

Shuttitng out the First Ward team in the first half without a score, the Maccabees had no difficulty in winning an easy game at the Maccabee Hall last night.

All available seating space in the hall was occupied by a large crowd of spectators, who notwithstanding the onesidedness of the game, heartily applauded the plays of the teams.

At the end of the 1st half, the score was 14-0 in favor of the Maccabees and the final score was 22-6. The Maccabee players all played a consistent game, the shooting of Crockett and Snow standing out particularly well. For the First Ward team, Rugg was the star at scoring two of the three baskets made by his team. Painter, although closely guarded in an attempt at the basket, made a difficult one-handed shot which went true.

Manager Snow of the Maccabee team is arranging a schedule of games to be played in Church's Hall weekly.

The Onyx A. C. and Nondescripts will meet tonight in the City Bowling League.

Nondescript Mascot the Real Goose

The Nondescripts punted and the Canastota man fumbled but recovered. He was tackled by Ward on the Canastota 10 yard line. A poor attempt at a punt which only went 10 yards resulted in a Nondescript man catching the ball and going over for a touchdown, but Referee Frawley brought the ball back. Canastota punted safely and George Ward brought it back to the 20 yard line, from which point LaGrue on a criscross play carried the ball around right end for a touchdown. Score:—Nondescripts 31, Canastota 0.

The goal was kicked making the score 32-0.

Third Quarter

LeRoy went in for Yarwood. The Nondescripts kicked off and LaVere brought the ball back to midfield. Several times the Canastota backs fumbled only to recover the ball again. The Nondescripts took the ball on downs. The Canastota quarterback would have fared better had he chosen to punt. The local team was unable to gain and the ball went to the visitors. A punt was caught by George Ward. Several forward passes after Canastota had again fumbled the ball resulted in a touchdown for the Nondescripts, Roy taking the ball over. The goal was not kicked. Score:—Nondescripts 38, Canastota 0.

Baker, a colored boy, went in for Brennan, and he showed his ability by breaking through on the first play and spilling Ward for a loss. George Ward broke through the line on the following play and ran fifty yards for a touchdown, making the score 44-0. The goal was kicked. Score:—Nondescripts 45, Canastota 0. The ball changed twice after the kickoff. LaGrue after making forty yards on a forward pass, placed the ball on the thirty yard line. Before the next play, time was called.

The lineup of the teams was as follows:

OSWEGO MAN WANTED; ACCUSED OF THEFT.

Richard Halleck, proprietor of the Park Livery, Oswego, has posted in public places in this city a card offering a reward for the apprehension of Byron Salisbury, accused of being implicated in the disappearance of a horse and buggy from the Oswego livery. Salisbury resides in the country just outside of Fulton, but the local police have been unable to locate him.

The card bears the following description: Bay mare, 9 years old; weight about 900 pounds; spike tail; roached mane; white stripe on face; long scar on right hip. Hitched to rubber tire wagon with black body; wine colored running gear; upholstered in gray. Lap robe with one side yellow.

Description of man: Byron Salisbury; 5 feet, 7 inches tall; weight 160 or 165 pounds; 30 years old; smooth face; large mouth; dressed in working colthes; black soft hat. Stutters when speaking.

The administration has a year in which to clean up Mexico, so that the next administration can be devoted to United States home affairs.

Nothing startling about that new odd stocking fad, because stockings have long been an odd sort of get up.

FOREIGN TRADE FOR 1915 WILL SET NEW MARK.

Washington.—By the end of the year the United States probably will have broken all records for all nations in foreign trade. It will have surpassed Great Britain's greatest year of Export business. American exports probably will reach $4,000,000,000.

For the 12 months ending October the United States has exported goods worth $3,3[illegible],634,636. This figure sets a new American record for exports—the greatest foreign trade in American history.

On the other side of the ledger the imports for October alone—$334,638,572 were also a new high record.

It was in speculating on the possibility of thus breaking all records that Secretary of Commerce Redfield today scouted the idea of any big slump in American foreign trade at the close of the war, due to the cutting off of the trade in munitions of war.

"In considering the state of business there is too much of a tendency," he said, "to view 'the preponderance of the visible'—to coin an ungrammatical phrase. We should look beyond immediate causes and immediate effects into the future. Foreign nations after the war will come to us for their machinery, their steel, their railroad stocks and other supplies. In the meantime, if I am not mistaken, the United States will set a new world's record for foreign business."

The Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce today pointed out that for the year ending with October, American imports totaled $1,691,738,013, compared with $1,880,414,501 in the preceding period. The total of all American foreign trade, therefore, achieved a new high record of $5,010,382,649 in the 12 months ending with October.

FRANCE ASKS FOR BILLIONS MORE.

Paris.—A credit of 8,172,817,000 francs ($1,634,560,000) for the first quarter of 1916 was urged by Finance Minister Ribot in the Chamber of Deputies today.

"The French financial situation," the minister told the chamber, "is not at all disquieting. I regard the future with absolute confidence.

"The constant increase in the government's financial demands since 1914 has been due to increasing purchases of military supplies, to requirements for social benefits and to other causes incidental to the war.'"

Bulgars Stop French Rush; Monastir Is Deserted; Fighting

London.—The Serbian main army having been driven back to the borders of Albania and Montenegro, where they are being attacked by the Austro-Germans, the Bulgarians with the assistance of General Von Gallwitz's forces are now giving their attention to the Anglo-French troops. Important military development may therefore be looked for on the Varda river. The Bulgars appear to have definitely decided to abandon for the time being their advance on Monastir in favor of attacking the French positions on the Cerna, where fighting already has been reported. So far, the French have held their positions, but dispatches from Salonifia hint that it may be necessary to withdraw from Krivolak to the southeast, where British-French reinforcements are being concentrated. While the results of these movements are being watched with some anxiety, better news from the Allies viewpoint comes from the Northern frontier of Bulgaria, where a big Russian army is massing.

It is reported that General Alexai Kuropatkin is to command this Russian army of invasion, which will either be sent up the Danube or allowed passage through Rumania to attack Varna from the landside. Other Russian forces are being organized at Odessa and Sebastopol and will doubtless be sent either to the Bulgarian or the Turkish coast.

It is reported from Switzerland that the Austro-Germans are sending reinforcements into the Balkans to meet this new Russian offensive, but other sources state that these reinforcements are en route to the wesetrn front beause of th fact that the Balkan campaign is having a direct effect on all fronts.

In Galicia the Austro-Germans are attacking in the hope of compelling the Russians to divert a part of the Bessarabian army thence. While the Austrians opposing the Italian offensive on the Isonzo are unable to get assistance, they are counter attacking with terriffic fury and have far prevented the Italians from capturing Gorizia, which has been hard pressed for nearly a week.

Late reports from Mesopotamia show that the British hold the battlefield of Ctesphon and that the Turks are retiring to Dialah, within ten miles of Bagdad. Prisonres taken by the British have been increased to 1,300 while the British wounded alone number 2,500. Troops engaged in this region are undergoing hardships unknown in other campaigns, there being a shortage of both food and awter.

"Serbia Will Live for All Time," Says General

Paris.—A prediction tha no matter what happens, Serbia will be "born again," was made by War Minister Bokovitch to the Matin's Monastir correspondent, who quotes the Serb general as saying:

"We are ready to hold out to the last. If fortune abandoned us altogether, so much the worse, but we still shall hope. Serbia knew ho wto win liberty after five centuries under the Turkish yoke. It will be the same tomorrow. Serbia will live forever. You cannot kill Serbs and Serbia will be born again to grow greater in the future."

When the dispatch to the Matin was filed on the 19th the situation at Monastir was reported unchanged. Serb advanced posts were no longer in contact with the Bulgarians, who were believed to have detached troops to reinforce the army attacking the French. The Serbians then occupied the village of Brod, north of Krushevo, although the twon had changed hands several times, being occupied several hours the day before by Bulgarian irregulars.

DISTRICT SCHOOLS SEND CORN AND HANDCRAFT FOR NEXT WEEK'S SHOW

Monday is the date set by Warren S. Gardner, district superintendent of schools when he will have for publication entries for next week's Corn Show, which is to be held in the Lewis Arcade, Cayuga st. It is Mr. Gardner's hope to be able to land a number of prizes at the show for the boys and girls whose efforts toraisegood corn for the school exhibits which closed only recently.

Much of the corn exhibited in the school contests is stored in Mr. Gardner's office, where may be found various specimens of handcraft and produce which figured in the "Home Project Idea."

Prize-winning corn from the following schools will be exhibited at the show next week.

No. 4 Granby, No. 5 Granby; No. 5 Oswego Town, No. 12 Oswego Town, No. 4 Oswego Town, No. 9 Oswego Town; No. 10 Hannibal, No. 10 Oswego Town, No. 6 Granby, No. 8 Volney, No. 13 Volney, No. 11 Volney, No. 5 Hannibal, No. 3 Hannibal, No. 2 Hannibal.

It is the intention of the Retail Trades Division of the Chamber of Commerce to throw wide open the town's throttle to hospitality, leaving nothing undone that can be seen in advance for the comfort and convenience of the visiting farmers who are expected here from all over this and parts of the neighboring counties. The Division has made the announcement on postal cards already mailed to prospective guests. These cards anounce that rest rooms will b e established in the Chamber of Commerce quarters and that packages may be checked free of charge.

Turks Renew Activities at Gallipoli; No Gains

London.—The Turks are showing more activity in the Gallipoli, where with new supplies of ammunition, they attacked the Allies' positions without, however, making any gains.

The Pall Mall Gazette, recalling the assurances given by Eleutherios Venizelos, the Grecian ex-premier, and the way that they were nullified by King oCnstantine's actions, regards the present Greek assurances with skeptism and declares that the promises of Premier Skouloudis and his colleagues, whatever shape they may assume, are not to be taken too seriously.

"What has been secured apparently by the gentle pinch of four days' arrest of Greek shipping," the newspaper says, "is the assurance that Greece will not be so treacherous as words which certain of her ministers might have implied. That the Greek army is to remain mobilized will prevent sure sense of safety on the part of the (Entente) Allies."

Paris.—Telegraphing from Athens yesterday, a correspondent of the Havas agency says that another popular ovation was accorded Denys Cochin, French minister without portfolio, on the ocassion of a recpeiton given him on that day by the municipality. M. Cochin was made an honorary citizen of Athens by official proclamation at a meeting of the Municipal Council.

An immense crowd gathered outside the municipal building and gave the French minister the most enthusiastic greeting he has yet received during his stay here for the purpose of bringing about an understanding with Greece concerning her attitude toward the Entente Allies. After the reception M. Cochin was escorted to his hotel by a long column of citizens.

Sappers' War Continues Each Day and Night

Behind the lines, near Arras, France via Paris.—The intense and continu- grenade, mine and heavy gun can be, only vaguely understood from the laconic chronicle of the official bulletins. The underground warfare,t about which only dry allusions are made, is carried on steadily day and night. The mines, excploding at irregular intervals along the lines, give place to singular incidents which rarely become public. Near here in Artois, where sapers largely replace the infantry, is told the story of Sappers Manduit and Cadoret, who have previously been mentioned as recipients of the military medal. This is how they won it:

They had dug their way under and beyond German trenches when the explosion of a German mine between the lines cut their gallery, leaving them imprisoned in a space eight feet long. This was at $:55 o'clock in the morning. They determined to dig towards the surface. They encouraged each other by singing Breton songs in low tones while they dug. The air became bad and they were almost suffocated. Their candles went out leaving them to work in darkness.

Madison Proved to Be Superior Basket Tossers; Score 52-20

The Madison Club basketball team of Colgate easily defeated the local High School team on the City Hall court last night in a fast and interesting game. The score was 52-20. O'Brien, as usual, was the highest scoring man on the Fulton team.

The defeat can be ascribed to one fact, that the Madison team was uperior to high. Their team work was developed to a high degree, and with the advantage of a center standing 6 foot 3, or thereabout, who invariably got the jump on Wallace, the local boys were plainly out of the running.

Thompson, of the Fulton team, really put up the best game of any of the men on his team. His guarding was close and he also made a brilliant shot from the center of the floor.

Headquist, the tall center of the visitors outshone any man on the floor. Not only was he fast but his ranginess resulted in several baskets being scored when a group would gather under the basket. Headquist, by his long reach, was able to intercept the ball and push it into the basket over the heads of the rest of the players.

The baskets scored were as follows: Weise, captain of the visitors, started off with a running shot and Siegel, a teammate, closely folowed with another of the same kind. A foul called Headquist brought the local high school one point, Webb shooting the foul.

Seigel on another running shot scored two more points and Headquist brought the total to 9 when he shot a foul. Wallace was the first man on the local team to make a basket from the field and he was followed by Webb with another. This brought the score to 9 for Calgate and 5 for the Fulton team. Settle of the visitors dropped an easy one into the basket. Weisse, [illegible] the side of the court unnoticed, received a pass at the right moment and dropped the ball through the net. Thompson of the locals made a brilliant shot from the center of the floor and Headquist scored another. At this point the game became rough and it was necessary to call several fouls. None of the men seemed to be able to make the fouls good. The half ended after Seigel and Settle each made two baskets and Weisse one, while the Fulton team was unable to get any. At the end of the half the score stood Colgate 27, Fulton 9.

The second half opened with two fouls being called on Colgate, but the try at the basket was not successful. Following a short period of brilliant passing, the best work which the Fulton team did at any time in the game, O'Brien caged the ball.

The visitors following O'Brien's shot made 12 baskets consecutively, each member of the team scoring. During this run a number of fouls were called on the local team for holding and other offences, which wer not made good. O'Brien broke the procession of baskets by scoring a difficult shot back over his head. Thompson made good a foul and Wallace followed with a basket from the field. Miles of the Colgate team, scored next and O'Brien followed. Headquist closed the game with another basket, making the total score: Madison Club 52, Fulton High 20.

The lineup of the local team was as follows: Forwards: Martin and O'Biren; Center: Wallace. Guards: Thompson and Webb. Substitution, Frawley for Webb. Colgate: Forwards: Seager and Miles. Center: Headquist. Guards: Settle and Weisse.

Referee: Morin. Scorekeeper: Lynch. Timer: Freedman.

Time of halves: 20 minutes.

SOLDIERS GUARANTEE TO APPEAR TOMORROW.

After twice cancelling a football match with the Nondescripts during the present season, the Soldiers of Oswego have posted a guarantee to make their appearance on the gridiron at the Fair Grounds tomorrow in a game with the Nons, which will decide the championship of Northern New York.

The Soldiers have defeated the strong Sacketts Harbor team, which is coached by Merrit, former star end of the West oPint team, and the All-Watertown aggregation.

The large goose which the Nondescripts are using as a mascot will appear on the field, the bird having survived Thanksgiving Day.

Several of the Nondescript players were injured in the Canastota game, but they will be in the lineup tomorrow. A new series of signals has been rehearsed by the players which will, if carried out successfully, result in several long gains. George Ward, may play quaterback.

READING MARKS THE MAN.

You can tell a man ont by the clothes he wears, but by the company he keeps. You can tell him not only by thef riends he has among men and women, but above all by the books and current publications he buys. This is the period when subscriptions to popular publications are being entered. How much time is wasted, says Leslie's, on cheap literature, idiotic comics, salacious fiction, sensational discussions or forbidden topics, and denunciation of the evisting order of things in church, society and the home circle. Homes are defiled by tolerating publications full of impure suggestions and without the slightest claim to educational value. It is surprising that depravity increases and the churches are losing their hold on the thoughtless masses? Plenty of god reading can be had. The best books are available in free public libraries in every community and attractive publications of the day will be found in the reading rooms of the Y. M. C. A. These helpful influences are being felt, but they need encouragement from the parents, the teachers and the preachers.

THE MILITANT CLERGYMAN.

Every now and then in old-fashioned novels or newfangled moving pictures, we observe a militant clergyman. A preacher who goes out into the Wooly West and trashes the drunkards; a minister who appears among the unregenerate and when he leaves them they have black eyes and the faith of God in their hearts; the kind whose forefathers wore glistening coats of mail under the demure garb of the friar and whose hands could grip a sword as firmly as they could be folded in fervent prayer. And now there has come among us the Rev. John Naab, late of Manorvile, but now i charge of St. Mary's Roman Catholic church, at Winfield, L. I.

"I take things as they come," he told his parishioners when they came to greet him. "If any of you has anything against me at any time let him come out and say so. If need be, I'll put on the gloves."

And this is the right spirit. Too many of our clergymen are given to too much talk and to too little action. If anything is said that displeases them they talk back; or write letters. Of course, Father Naab doesn't really mean that he'll fight his way to the love and esteem of his flock, because he will not have to. But his spirit is that of a man who does not shrink from solving problems in a radical way that cannot be solved otherwise.—Brooklyn Times.

A MUNICIPAL CHRISTMAS TREE

Throughout the country hundreds of cities are planning for a municipal Christmas tree. Is there any particular reason why Fulton should not have a municipal Christmas tree? The expense part would be a very small part to be reckoned in the undertaking. The singers are here, it was proven last summer at the Chautauqua, and the enthusiasm could easily be created. By the aid of a cornet or two, the various groups of singers could easily be led.

As to its being worth while it has become evident that in cities where it has been tried that the municipal Christmas tree is one of the most delightful innovations of the century. To hear hundreds of voices mingling in the old Christmas carols on Christmas eve is indeed a manifestation of a fine spirit of community helpfulness and aspiration.

The newly paved street section at First and Oneida streets would make an ideal spot for such a gathering. A huge tree, electrically lighted and surrounded by masses of people would surely be a gladsome sight in our little city where the community spirit is seemingly so little in evidence. The description detailed after Syracuse held its first municipal tree was in the following words:

The actual results of such a celebration are hard to estimate. The most obvious are suggested, however, in the following newspaper commment:

"It was the first concrete demonstration Syracuse has had of the new civic consciousness, of the application to an entire community of the spirit of Christmas, hitherto confined to the home and the church."

To those who watched the working out of the plans, this first municipal Christmas tree seems but the beginning of what may come to pass. Its greatest possibilities appear to lie in developing the already deep interest of the foreigners within our gates. Their pleased surprise when asked to take part was noteworthy, even though their lack of musical organization and the fact that Christmas Eve was a working night for many, prevented acceptance this year. "It's the first time we Italians were ever asked to be in anything for the city, and we thank you." Such words, coupled with the promise to collect and train Polish, Italian and German churches for next year, go far to encourage the belief that next Christmas members of all races within our city shall hear carols sung in their own tongue and feel themselves truly citizens of a new fatherland.

The ideal municipal Christmas tree should draw to it all classes and kinds of citizens, whether rich or poor, native or foreign-born. It should symbolize to them the spirit of brotherhood, while they voice, together with the message of peace and good will, renewed loyalty to their common city, state and country.

AN INNOVATION IN BANKING

A department for placing the farmer on the same basis as the business man in the city, as regards the rate of interest and borrowing conveniences on both long and short time loans, has recently been established by the First National Bank of Stillwater, Minn. In addition, the bank offers the service of an experienced and trained man to aid farmers in the solution of problems which they may meet on the farm.

This is, perhaps the first department of this kind ever established by a bank, and we will await with interest its report as to results. Other banks have employed men to take charge of educational campaigns and promote more profitable agriculture. But the purpose of this new department is more than educational, it seeks to give a service to the individual farmer that he has long needed,—the same sort of bank seervice that is received by the business man in the city. Individual banks may have given such service in some measure, but so far as we know this is the first organized effort.

In their published announcement the bank states its officers realize that they must have in charge of the department a man who understands farm business in all its details, and with this purpose in mind have chosen Mr. Glen E. Rogers, who has successfully served the community as county agent for over two years. In the practical working out of the loan feature the manager of the new department will visit farmers applying for loans, look over their property and discuss with them, at their suggestion, any problem pertaining to the management of the farm, the use of more capital for its successful operation, and any details of the farm business, such as kinds of live stock best to carry, the best methods of feeding, any disease of crops, or any other details that the owner may care to discuss.

The bank states that it will be ready to give aid and to take part in all cative and progressive agricultural movements and specifically mentions the purchase and sale of cattle. We appreciate this service, that is in a measure gratuitous, yet what challenges our attention in the above scheme is that of offering the farmer the same conveniences of banking service that are now enjoyed by the manufacturer and merchant. We trust the new department may succeed and be of service to both the bank and the farmer, and upon the latter problem of service depends the success of the effort.—Hoard's Dairyman.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

"Teach economy, that is one of the first and highest virtues. It begins with saving money."

This was one of the trite sayings of Abraham Lincoln. It was uttered in a day when extravagance was rare in this country, but it was the advice of an an who knew the most rigid economy in youth, and was addressed to parents and instructors of future Americans.

Children frequently have a greater sense of responsibility than they are given credit for. They often are not allowed to exercise it through the mistaken kindness of parents who desire them to have a care-free childhood. It is through being acquainted with all and hearing them talked of that lessons of great value often are learned.

Children like to have money to spend for birthday and holiday presents, and they will enjoy buying the gifts much more with money earned by themselves than if the money is given to them. Let the children make out their own lists and do their own planning and reckoning. They will thus learn to be careful of money, to keep within their savings amount and will spend it less recklessly during the year.

It has been found that poor children in Chicago spend from ten to twenty-five cents a week on candy, cakes and chewing gum. How much better it would be if these children were taught to save this money for something useful, or something from which they would get real pleasure for days and weeks instead of something that is likely to be injurious to their health.

Children who are permitted to spend every cent seldom will amount to anything, although there is still room at the top for those who are thrifty, industrious and ambitious. Years ago an humble gardener in Germany, scraped and saved in order to come to America, but he could not manage it. Then he determined that his son should have the great chance in the wonderful new world.

When the son was fourteen years old, the father gave the boy the money and bade him, "God Speed."

With his few articles of clothing in a bundle, the son set out for America in the steerage of a slow ship. He secured work on a farm in Illinois and later began to learn the English language from a priest who gave him employment in Kansas. Having mastered the language he went to work in a drug store and soon saved enough money to buy out his employer. All this time he had been studying the principles of banking and when the opportunity came he was able to put his theories into practice.

He organized and helped to organize several banks in Kansas. This man is Peter W. Goebel, president to the Commercial National Bank of Kansas City, who has just been elected vice president of the American Bankers Association at Seattle.

It is quite evident that Mr. Goebel would not be an official of the above mentioned organization and heading several banks besides if he had spent every cent as he earned it when a youth.

BAD HOUSING AND ITS EFFECTS

Cause of Much Disease, Poverty and Crime.

IT RAISES TAX BURDENS.

John J. Murphy, Tenement House Commissioner of New York City, Traces Evil Results of Bad Housing on Family Life and on Workers.

The three great scourges of mankind, disease, poverty and crime, are largely due to bad housing, according to John J. Murphy, New York city's tenement house commissioner, whose official task it is to study and remedy as far as possible improper housing conditions. Mr. Murphy, who is the only tenement house commissioner in the United States, attended the recent national housing conference in Minneapolis and read a paper on housing conditions, based on his investigations in several large centers of population, in which he said:

"There can be no question that the three great scourges of mankind, disease, poverty and crime, are in a large measure due to bad housing in its broadest sense. Intemperance in many of its most repugnant forms, may be traced to the fact that so many citizens are obliged to live in homes in which they can take neither pride nor comfort and which make the saloon seem desirable by contrast.

"Bad housing is especially detrimental in its consequences to the children reared under its influence. In many cases the evil influences of environment can never be eradicated. The need for the erection of institutions for the blind and hospitals for the child victims of tuberculosis, spinal meningitis and other diseases of like character is greatly intensified by bad home conditions. The employee living in a house inadequately lighted and ventilated is unable to perform his task with proper energy and intelligence. Women compelled to live in such houses develop tendencies to irritability, which frequently lead to family disruption.

"Bad housing tends to increase the tax burdens of a community by requiring larger expenditures for remedial service, which might otherwise be eliminated. The lack of proper cleanliness and decency in the exterior and interior of houses tends to reduce the self respect of the occupants. Note how eagerly the family which has even slightly improved its financial standing seeks buildings with more attractive exteriors and better decorated rooms. It will also be found that as families descend in the social scale one of the pangs most keenly felt is the necessity for the occupancy of quarters in buildings whose general appearance indicates that they are occupied by the miserably poor.

"It may be said, therefore, that there is no plane of human existence in society which the housing question does not touch. There is no form of vice, crime, debility or shiftlessness which bad housing does not tend to nurture. 'Keeping up appearances' is often decried and deserves much of the reproach cast upon it when it simply means unwarranted extravagance to maintain a position which one's income does not justify, but among the poor it is an ever present aid to the maintenance of self respect and is to be encouraged rather than decried.

"Sanitary research shows how important is the reaction of adequate light and ventilation on the health, stamina and moral character of individuals. Bad housing furnishes the fruitful nurseries of disease germs of all kinds, while at the same time creating conditions which prevent the building up of resistance to their inroads."

A SHINING EXAMPLE.

A casual observation of the street paving in Breslau as well as of street repair operations reveals, among other evidences of systematic efficiency, the distinguishing characteristic that it is "put to stay," says Consul Harry G. Setzler, Breslau, Germany, in Commerce Reports. Torn up streets are such rare occurrences as to be events of noteworthy importance. This is all the more remarkable when the natural features of the city and its surroundings are considered.

TOWNS MORE HEALTHFUL.

Dr. T. D. Wood Ascribes the Cause to Inferior Rural Schools.

In a recent address before the Illinois state charities conference at Danville Dr. Thomas D. Wood, chairman of the committee on health problems in education of the National Education association, declared that there is more ill health among children and adults in rural America today than in our cities. Among other things, he said:

It is apparent that within the past decade the actual and vaunted physical superiority of country people and children over those living in the city has been reversed, and now it is confidently affirmed that for the entire population city dwellers are more healthy than those who dwell in rural districts. City life is more healthful than that of the country.

It is just as true, however, and startlingly significant, in view of the preceding statements, that most of our best human material for the cities and for the nation must still come from the country. If rural America is still to be a satisfactory nursery for human life it must be made healthful and attractive. It must furnish a generous fraction of the best of the population, and it must provide conditions favorable for the cultivation of the best, at least so far as the biologic and fundamental qualities of life are concerned.

The problem, then, for bringing about sufficient improvement in the healthfulness of rural life, to provide a worthy birthplace and nursery for the best human stock is not simply a problem of the rural school, of the farm or of rural life in general, but it is a great, pressing problem of the nation affecting national safety, national prosperity and national perpetuity.

Rural schools are, on the average less adequate for their use than prisons, asylums, almshouses, stables, dairy barns, pigpens, chicken houses and dog kennels are for their uses. Healthful and attractive rural schools are absolutely essential to the physical, mental, social, economic and moral well being of the children themselves and to the life and welfare of the nation as a whole. The health care of rural school children should include at least the following:

Schoolhouses sanitary and attractive, well ventilated, lighted, cleaned and equipped within and without with the health essentials.

Teachers better trained and better paid to do their logical and full share in carrying out a health program.

Health examinations, including dental inspection, once a year.

Follow-up health work by district and school nurses.

Health care in the school, including health instructions, warm school lunches, toothbrush drills and inculcation of all health habits.

Provision for removal of injurious physical defects by dental clinics, health clinics, etc.

Co-operation of all available individuals and organizations for the promotion of health and welfare of country school children.

England's Roman Amphitheater.

Dorchester possesses the best preserved Roman amphitheater in England, in which over 10,000 people gathered in 1705 to witness the burning of a woman who had murdered her husband. Dorchester was a place of importance as early as the Roman occupation, and at a later date it had an unenviable association with Judge Jeffreys and his bloody assize.

Scene From Aborn Opera Company's Spectacular Revival of "The Bohemian Girl" at the Quirk, December 1.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS.

The National Women Suffrage Association has established a Data Department with Mary Sumner Boyd, formerly o the editorial staff of the Survey, in charge. She helps clear up the mist that the anti-suffrage speaker leaves in her trail.

When the local suffragist writes and asks, Is it true that woman suffrage will double the cost of elections? Mrs. Boyd sends back a quotation from Senator Keating of Colorado, to the effect that whereas the last election cost Albany (men alone voting) $24.60 per thousand of the poulation, the last election at Denver (both sexes voting) cost $12.25 per thousand—just about half. Then the local editor gets the editor to print it, and for a time that mooted question is closed in that community. Mrs. Boyd bids fair to be a very busy woman.

A mooted point in Illinois concerns the right of women voters to vote for delegates to the National Conventions. Under the existing statute, since women in that state can vote for President, they would be entitled to vote for the delegates elected at the Presidential primaries.

Governor Dunne has called a special session of the Legislature, which is to consider, among other things, the primary law. Anti-suffragists hope to get the law changed so that the delegates to the national convention shall be elected by the Congressional Convention, which would exclude the women. Suffragists will not relinquish this right without a struggle, as it gives to the women voters an increased prestige at National Conventions and is expected to aid substantially in creating a demand for suffrage in other states, as well as softening the hearts of all presidential candidates towards votes for women.

The election returns which added no star to the woman suffrage flag, at least showed a great increase of public enthusiasm for democracy since Rhode Island in 1887 voted down a woman suffrage amendment over three to one, and Massachusetts in 1895 furnished only 87,000 votes in favor of giving women even municipal suffrage.

Miss Ruth McNeeley, of Ocean Grove, has received a silver medal and two thousand dollars from the Carnegie Hero Commission for her bravery in rescuing two women from drowning.

All the men in New Jersey who voted "no on the woman suffrage amendment, because they considered women as tender, clinging creatures, not strong enough to bear the burdens of self-government, are asked "to sit up and take notice."

In discussing the new constitution before the convention, the Director of the Bureau of Municipal Research said that our constitution makers had always assumed that public officers belonged to the criminal classes. What confuses women is the way men run down their own government, and in the next breath say that woman suffrage would be unsafe because of the bad woman vote.

DEATHS BY CANCER CONTINUE TO INCREASE.

Cancer was the third most important cause of death of men holders of life insurance policies past the age of forty-four years and first in the death of insured women of those years in 1914. It killed 500,000 human beings last year and 80,000 of them were residents of the United States. While the general death ratet has been declining the mortality from cancer is increasing at the rate of 2.5 per cent annually.

These facts led the Prudential Insurance Company to authorize publication of the results of two years of investigation by the American Society for the Control of Cancer. Frederick L. Hoffman, statistician of the Prudential, is chairman of its Committee on Statistics, and the other members are Dr. James Ewing, of the Cornell Medical School, and Dr. Joseph C. Bloodgood, of the Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore. The publication will be distributed without cost, the insurance company anonunces, to medical libraries and on request to medical men.

THIS CLOCK STILL TICKS.

Wheels Are Made of Wood, and It Is a General Guide.

Asheville, N. C.—Charles Bolick of this city is the possessor of an old clock, still running, although its wheels are made of wood, and its history can be traced back for over forty years. Besides giving the time, the clock has pasted in the back some statistics.

From this clock it is learned that in the year 1812 the postage rate for a single letter for a distance not exceeding 30 miles was 6 cents; over 30 miles and not exceeding 80, 10 cents; over 80 miles and not exceeding 150 miles, 12½ cents, and for a distance of 400 miles, 25 cents.

North Carolina in 1812 contained 538,820 people and the United States 9,625,730. Judging from this record in the back of the clock it must be at least 100 years old.

Thirteen Popular In This Family.

South Bend, Ind.—The thirteenth baby of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Kyle of Mishawaka arrived at the Kyle home recently. The child is a daughter and is the third one of the children to be born on the thirteenth day of the month. Mr. and Mrs. Kyle were married on the 13th of the month.

Potato on Tomato Vine.

Maryaville, Pa.—George Zellers of this place has in his garden a plant bearing both tomatoes and potatoes. Last spring he grafted a tomato plant on to a potato stalk. Several fully developed tomatoes grew on the upper part and several large potatoes on the roots.

Neighborhood Co-operation.

"Get acquainted with your neighbor. You might like him."

That expresses the leading purpose back of many of the neighborhood clubs which have been and are being organized in various sections of the state, says a bulletin of the University of Wisconsin. Many of these organizations afford excellent examples of the value of community enterprise in Wisconsin country life. In some of these localities successful fall festivals are being held, and in others the regular late fall and winter activities have already been started. From all sections of the state the reports are the same—that the local clubs are doing much for their members.

Many of Wisconsin's rural communities have during the past few years met and co-operatively solved many of their problems. Some of the clubs which are doing effective work are: The Brush Creek Temperance club, Vernon county; Nashotah Men's club, Waukesha county; Pigeon Creek Young People's society, Trempealeau county; River Falls Home Culture club, St. Croix county; Interstate Park Farmers' club, Polk county; Spring Valley Town and Country club, Pierce county, and the well known Sauk county group, including the Klover klub, Fairfield; Choral club, Excelsior; Sauk Prairie Farmers' club, Skillet Creek Farmers' club, Narrow's Prairie Country club and the Kirkwood Agricultural society.

TO MAKE "SPOTLESS TOWNS"

The New York city department of street cleaning, through its recently established bureau of education, is making a campaign to secure the co-operation of the citizens to make a cleaner city. It has sent out the following suggestions, which may well be repeated for the benefit of the denizens of all communities, big or small:

Refrain from littering the streets.

Join the "loose paper haters."

See that ash and garbage cans are always covered.

Treat the streets as you treat the hallways of your home.

Give your children instruction in these matters.

Observe the rules of the department.

Obey the laws and ordinances.

Exhort others to do likewise.

Remember the three deadly D's—dirt, disease, death.

BRAIN SURGERY CURES TWELVE

Exhibition Shows Wonders of Modern Operations.

PARALYTIC BOY ATHLETE.

Lad Goes Through Feats to Delight of New York Doctors—Some of the Victims Resorted to Use of Faculties When Cysts Were Removed From the Brain—Symptoms Puzzled.

New York.—A dozen children were exhibited recently as wonders of modern brain surgery at the Academy of Medicine at a joint session with the New York Neurological society.

The heads of most of them had been cut open, some on one side only, some on both sides, by Dr. William Sharpe and his assistants at Polyclinic hospital.

The children, who ranged in age from two to twelve years, had suffered from spasmodic paralysis, due to hemorrhage inside the skull. In many cases they had been seized with convulsions soon after birth. In a number of instances the paralysis was not much noticeable until eight months or so after birth.

In cutting into the heads of a large proportion of the cases the surgeon found cysts, which had to be removed. Sometimes the symptoms had been puzzling, and in every case where a hemorrhage was suspected as the cause of the symptoms the eye signs were investigated, and an examination was made of the spinal fluid to corroborate the diagnosis.

Little ones who before the knife explored their skulls were incapable of speech or even of locomotion or movements of the arms were able to talk and laugh and run backward and forward and hold their arms up above their heads like normal children.

One of the children, a boy, who before the operation couldn't walk or talk intelligibly, now goes seven blocks to school twice a day.

One little child that formerly was always huddled up, with its head bent down almost to its feet, trotted proudly before the surgeons, some of whom stood on chairs in order to get a better view.

In none of the cases shown at the meeting had there been any convulsions or backward symptoms since the use of the knife. Out of over 170 operations, according to the Polyclinic professor, there were only twelve deaths, and there were special reasons to account for them, including extreme emaciation in a number of instances when the skull was cut open.

One of the children was a boy of twelve, who, from being a helpless paralytic, had been taught by Dr. Bess M. Mensendieck to use one muscle after another until he has finally got almost as much control over himself as a professional athlete. The process of teaching him went on daily for more than six months.

The boy was stripped, and then on a mat he went through practically all the contortions of a wrestler, bending his body backward, forward, sideways, twisting his trunk, raising his arms, flexing his legs and rising from the mat by the use only of his leg muscles.

Dr. Alfred S. Taylor showed two young men who had been restored to health by opening their backs and removing spinal cord tumors.

Dr. C. Burns Craig, who served with the American ambulance service in Paris, told of the injuries to the peripheral nerves produced by modern warfare.

Few soldiers survive bayonet wounds, added Dr. Craig. They die either from shock or loss of blood.

Some People Won't Pay Cost.

"Politeness costs nothing," remarked the ready made philosopher.

"That's not always true," replied Miss Cayenne. "I have seen it cost people a terrible struggle."—Washington Star.

LEAGUE URGES WOMEN TO SHOP AT ONCE.

"Shop Early' appeals are being sent out by mail to householders in New York city by the Consumers' League, begging them to finish shopping by December 15. and relieve the burden of overworked clerks and other store employes.

A postal card, surmounted by a picture of a Christmas tree, bears the slogan, "A Christmas Paradox:—The most liberal Christmas givers are generally the most selfish Christmas givers. They have so many things to buy that their shopping often is not finished before the very end of the season."

The Consumers' League says:—

"Every gift bought in Christmas week entails hardship upon the army of bundle wrappers, cash clerks and delivery men, as well as upon the sales people behind the counter.

"To these people Christmas represents a season of fearful overwork, put upon them by thoughtless buyers who, in their generous gift giving, forget the real spirit of "Peace on Earth; Good Will toward Men."

GREAT OPERATIC SUCCESS, "THE BOHEMIAN GIRL."

Following the immense success that has everywhere attended the Aborn Opera company's presentations of its lavishly spectacular production of "The Bohemian Girl," the Messrs. Aborn received enough requests from managers of theatres in various parts of the United States and Canada to warrant the formation of at least six compnies. This, however, they refused to do as they found that it would be impossible to give such a number of additional organizations the close personal care and attention that has ever been their rule and to which is doubtless due the substantial success that is now and has been theirs for sometime in the operatic field. There will be only one company presenting "The Bohemian Girl" this season and it will be seen at the Quirk, on Wednesday, December 1. Its cast of grand opera soloists includes Edith Allan, Henry Taylor, Mildred Rogers, Geo. Dunstan, Francis Tyler and Ralph Nichols.

WATERTOWN TO HAVE SCHOOL SAVINGS BANK.

When the next regular meeting of the board of directors occurs on Dec. 20, the commissioner will consider the proposition of establishing a system of school savings banks in the public schools of Watertown. The board considered this matter two or three years ago, but never took any definite action.

"The plan then under consideration three too much work upon the teachers, who already have about all of the burdens they can stand," said Supt. of Schools Tisdale today. "I have just received a new plan involving a simplified form of blanks and simplified bookkeeping, which I think will make it feasible."

The idea is to teach the school children the necessity of saving money and what it means to them in after-life.

THE TEST THAT TELLS

Is the Test of Time. Many Fulton People Have Made This Test

Years ago this Fulton citizen told in a public statement, the benefit derived from Doan's Kidney Pills. The statement is now confirmed—the testimony complete. Instances like this are numerous. They doubly prove the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills. Can any Futon reader demand more convincing proof? It's Fulton testimony—it may be investigated.

Mrs. P. Coleman, 204 Pratt st., Fulton, says: Doan's Kidney Pills are most beneficial in relieving lameness across the back." They also remove headaches, dizzy spells and that feeling of languor and weariness so common when the kidneys are inactive. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they promptly benefited me. I cheerfully renew the public endorsement I gave Doan's Kidney Pills some time ago."

SAPPERS' WAR CONTINUES DAILY

appearance of a glow worm told them that they were near the surface. Then a fissure of the earth opened up and admitted air. The miners pushed out into the clear starlight. Within arm's reach they saw the loophole of a German trench and could hear German voices. The thought seems never to have occurred to them to give themselves up. They drew back and began to dig in another direction, enduring still longer the distress which they had undergone. They had neither food nor drink.

After digging for another day, they came out in the crater of a mine. The night was again clear and it impossible for them to show themselves without being shot by one side of the other, and so they decided to hold out until another night. They lay inside the crater exposed to shells, bombs and grenades from both sides, eating roots and drinking rain water.

The Great Eastern.

The dimensions of the one time world famous Great Eastern were as follows: Length, 692 feet; width, 83 feet; depth, 60 feet; tonnage, 24,000 tons; draft when unloaded, 20 feet; when loaded, 30 feet. She had paddle wheels fifty-six feet in diameter and was also provided with a four bladed screw propeller of twenty-four feet diameter. She had accommodations for 800 first class, 2,000 second class and 1,200 third class passengers, 4,000 in all. Her speed was about eighteen miles an hour. The Great Eastern was finally broken up for old iron in the year 1889 after a checkered career of some thirty-one years.

Hen Trickery.

Since Australia is at the antipodes from us the hens there naturally lay best from May to November, contrary to the habit of hens here. It is now suggested that if a hen after her annual laying period in the southern hemisphere were rushed across the equator to the United States she might lay during the rest of the year at the same rate and thus establish a new "record" for a year's production. Still, it looks like a mean trick to play on a poor hen. —Youth's Companion.

"PROFITABLE STOREKEEPING"

In addressing the small town merchant says among other things:

"The small town merchant should be thankful that he is doing business where the opportunities are great, where the conditions are favorable, where he is something more than a number on a street several miles long.

"The small town merchant is a recognized factor in the community and if he is willing to do his duty by his fellow citizens, he may easily become a recognized power for good.

"He can reach out as far as the arm of Uncle Sam extends for more business.

"He can make his own personality the prime factor in developing more trade and he can be the best known merchant in his section if he will spend a fair share of his receipts for publicity."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

GARDEN CITY MOVEMENT AND COPARTNERSHIP.

Both Have Proved Great Aids to Housing Problem In England.

The contributions of the Garden City and co-operation movements to the construction side of England's housing problem are the most important and significant that have been made since attention was first turned to the need for building better types of dwellings, says a contributor to the American City. They have shown that it is possible to interest large amounts of capital on the basis of good security with a limited but fair return. They have shown that not only the wealthy, but the wage earner, can afford to live in an attractive single family house amid delightful surroundings. They have in a measurable degree reduced the pressure of population in the centers of the cities by removing thousands of people to the outskirts. In this way they have made it possible for those on a lower economic level to secure better houses so vacated, and they have strengthened the hands of the authorities who would impose higher standards for all dwellings by showing that low standards are not necessary.

The business is still to a considerable degree experimental. Ealing was started as late as 1901, Hampstead Garden suburb in 1907. But the promise certainly is good. There were in 1914 fifty-eight garden villages and suburbs. The copartnership societies, counting only those affiliated with Copartnership Tenants, limited, numbered fourteen. The theories of the founders have been modified as experience showed was necessary, but the basic principles remain. The evidence is all to the effect that not only better housing, but very good housing, can be provided for the well paid wage earner on a sound business basis.

KNOW YOUR CITY.

Movement Growing In South For New Orleans Plan.

The plan of New Orleans of adopting "The New Orleans Book" as a textbook in the public schools of the city is being favorably considered by a number of southern cities and probably will be adopted by many of them. "The New Orleans Book," which was made a part of the curriculum of the public schools is an intimate, picturesque story of the city designed to familiarize the children with the life of the place in which they live, giving them an understanding of its government, institutions and traditions. During the months in which the book has been in use it has proved a real worth and of absorbing interest. The idea has been commented upon editorially very widely throughout the south and in many cities, including Louisville, Chattanooga and Atlanta. It has been suggested that a similar book be introduced in their respective public schools.

An interesting aspect of this idea is the manner in which the information to be derived in this study has been connected with the Dixie and other highways which have been built or are now under course of construction in the south. The sections and cities through which every one of the principal highways, the Dixie, the Jackson, the General Forrest, passes are rich in history and legend.

There is in the south much anticipation of increase in tourist travel from other sections of the country when these highways are completed. The view which a Louisville paper takes of this situation is typical and is as follows:

"Why not a Louisville book? The history of Louisville is not without interest, its present not without achievement in many fields and promise of greater and better things to come. Within a year or two at most Louisville will be on two or more traveled highways from north to south. The strangers within our gates will find here much that is worth the learning. It is betraying no secret that the number who can teach is small. Louisville needs to know itself even more than others need to know of it.

"The Louisville book should have a place not only in the libraries, but in the homes and schools."

To Encourage Dairying.

The Commercial club of Centralia, Ill., is bent upon encouraging dairying in southern Illinois. In order that this may be done the club is going to sell Guernsey dairy cows to the farmers at cost.

MAKING FOR THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

Municipal Art Jury of Philadelphia Decreasing the Street Signs.

It is gratifying to read in the fourth annual report of the municipal art jury of Philadelphia what that body has done in the past year to decrease the number and multiplicity of garish signs and street fixtures which are a disgrace to our American cities, says the Philadelphia Press. Such things as overhanging electric signs, fire escapes, awnings, lamp standards, private bridges, etc., do not appear to have much to do with what is usually comprehended in the term art, but their presence or absence in various forms makes a great deal of difference in the appearance of the streets upon which they are placed.

There are, indeed, altogether too many of these signs in the city. In some places one can walk for squares with a sign overhead every few feet. As the art jury says, they "are, to a greater or less extent, an interference with the public's use and enjoyment of the street." The art jury does not wish to wipe out entirely these advertising signs and suggests that they be attached parallel to the wall.

Overhead awnings are also condemned by the art jury. It states that they should be permitted only in front of hotels, railroads and theaters. In many parts of the city, such as the minor shopping and market districts, they darken the streets. A general plan should be evolved which would in time wipe out all these ugly obstructions from our streets.

WIDER USE FOR SCHOOLS.

Increasing Tolerant Spirit In Letting the Buildings For Various Purposes.

The federal bureau of education has been making a study of the wider use of school buildings. The bureau finds an increasingly tolerant spirit manifested in the school letting regulations and cites as an illustration a rule adopted by the school board in Long Branch, N. J., after the opening of the new building, as follows:

"It shall be open to all meetings of citizens for the discussion of public questions intended to benefit the city, for meetings of civic clubs, for meetings of associations of unrestricted membership, whose object is improvement or public welfare, as women's clubs, choral societies, etc.; for entertainments and lectures to which the public is admitted free or of which, if admission is charged, the proceeds are for the benefit of the general public."

Commenting on the difficulties which may result from such a wide grant of privileges, the report says:

"The difficulty inherent in applying such a hospitable rule is that of making certain that public motives predominate over private motives in the purposes of the group desiring to use the buildings. A solution of this problem which is widely favored is the requirement of unrestricted membership already mentioned in the Long Branch rule. Wisconsin, California, Indiana and Maryland have made it obligatory by legislative enactment upon school boards to grant the privileges of school edifices to all nonpartisan, nonsectarian and nonexclusive organizations without cost."

Summing up the great advantages to be gained by using the vast equipment of school accommodations during periods of popular leisure, outside of school hours, the bureau points to the following possible results:

First.—Purveying beneficial amusements to those who are prevented by fatigue from engaging in active play and who otherwise might receive their satisfaction at the hands of unscrupulous venders.

Second.—Stimulating the growth of those groups which are capable of self organization and government by furnishing them with meeting places.

Third.—Promoting the formation and vigor of groups which might be incited to self expression by furnishing both quarters and leadership.

"In these ways," concludes the report, "public education is extending its distinctive function of improving human society. That this work will undergo still greater and more systematic extension is clearly foreshadowed by the trend of present developments and the persistency of the forces behind them."

Screening the Billboards.

Now the steam railroads are taking up the work of reducing the number of billboards erected along their rights of way on private property, says the Providence Journal. In Indiana the plan is to plant shrubbery at the terminals where big signs are erected and to let the bushes grow so high that passengers cannot see the billboards.

Shrubbery higher than a car window is more pleasing to look at than billboards, and when advertisers find that passengers cannot see their announcements made in two foot letters of various colors they will be less inclined to pay money for this kind of publicity. Division superintendents throughout the country should be encouraged to set out shrubs wherever it is practicable to screen a billboard, and co-operation on the part of civic improvement associations will do much toward bringing about the abolition of an outdoor nuisance.

SEVEN YEARS TO SERVE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

One day in June, 1860, I was ordered by a circuit judge to stand up and hear my sentence, and when I sat down again it was with the knowledge that I had seven years to serve in prison. The crime? Well, let that go. I was only twenty-three years old then, and a young man is more easily led off than an old one.

I expected from seven to ten years. I made up my mind to obey carefully every rule and regulation of the prison. No "good time" was allowed in those days, but if I conducted myself to the satisfaction of the warden for five years he would be quite willing to ask the governor to shorten my sentence. I had not been in prison more than an hour, however, when I made a change in my program. Such a loneliness came over me—I felt such a horror at being shut out from the world—that I determined to escape at the first opportunity.

I was a fine machinist, and after awhile I was placed in charge of all the machinery in the prison—that is, I kept everything in repair, and it was an occupation in which I delighted. I had a little shop in the engine room, and I looked after my work so well that I soon had the confidence of the prison officials. The man who ran the big stationary engine was a "free man" or an outsider hired by the month, as was also the fireman. While both treated me kindly and well, they no doubt felt it their duty to watch me and report anything suspicious. My little shop had no door to it, and while working in it I was under the eye of the engineer—that is, if he sat on his chair in the usual place he could see my every movement. My room had a window looking out on the garden of the prison. From the first day I entered the little shop I determined to escape by that window.

The engineer came on duty fifteen minutes before I did and remained fifteen minutes later, while the fireman slept at the prison and was aroused about half past 5 o'clock. I had to leave the shop at 5:55 to march in to supper with my gang. To attempt to leave by daylight would be foolishness, as I would be seen by the guards stationed on the walls. I must have some excuse for lingering in my room until after dark, and I had just planned it when an unforeseen circumstance knocked me out. I was going to disable the donkey engine just before 6 o'clock, knowing that I would be called back to help repair it after supper, when the prison authorities gave the wagon contractor leave to occupy a portion of the garden with his lumber. A great lot of it was hauled in and piled up directly before my window, obliging me to use a lamp to work by and cutting off my chance to escape. I made some cautious inquiries and found that it was all green stuff and might be left there four or five years to season.

It was a bitter disappointment.

The prison had been overcrowded, and a new wing was being built. This took thirteen months, and I was one of the men transferred to it. I was put in cell No. 7, which was the last on the left hand side and at the corner of the building. I knew all about this wing before we occupied it. The east wall, which contained the windows, was still in the prison yard, while the north wall ran along a public street. Under the window nearest my cell was piled a lot of wornout machinery and refuse lumber.

I had no sooner entered my cell than I determined to make it the basis of operations.

As the cement was not fully hardened, as I knew, I decided to tunnel out.

That week I spent in raising one of the flagstones in my cell, which was about three feet square, and then started the hole. I went down perpendicularly two feet and then drifted down toward the north wall at a slant so as to strike the foundation. I was, however, greatly troubled to get fresh air down in my tunnel, and the cramped position in which I worked kept me sore and lame. While working at night I had to be in bed regularly every hour as the guard came around and every morning the stone had to be replaced and the crevices filled in with breadcrumbs.

I knocked off work the next week, and it was well I did, as the guard came creeping along to the different cells at odd times during the night, and I should certainly have been caught. It got so at last that I couldn't work in the tunnel over fifteen minutes before the want of air drove me out, and along toward the end my health failed me and I lost strength. I dug under the stones and upward about a foot on either side and then I was sick for five weeks. Before I got to work again June had come, and it was a dark and rainy night on the 22d of that month that I took a farewell leave of my cell and crawled into my tunnel. I had three or four feet of earth to dig away, and I was almost perishing for want of air as I got to the crust.

It was about half past 12 when I crawled out of the tunnel into the storm and luckily no one was abroad to catch sight of me.

I lost no time in getting away from the neighborhood of the prison, and long before my cell was unlocked in the morning I was safe with friends. Yes, I was hunted and a reward was offered for my capture, but they never got me.

Woman's World

A Feminine Expert In Railroad Rates.

MRS. GEORGE ALEXANDER MOSSHART.

Railroad rates, it might be readily assumed, are not in the sphere of woman's comprehension, but there is at least one suffragist who has proved her capacity to master that dry and technical subject.

She is Mrs. George Alexander Mosshart, president of the Washington Woman Suffrage council and treasurer of the committee of influential Washington women who are in charge of the arrangements which are being made for the forty-seventh annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage association, to be held in Washington, Dec. 14 to 19, inclusive.

In her unmarried days Mrs. Mosshart was secretary of the Nebraska state railway commission and one of the foremost women rate experts in America. Over initials which did not betray her sex she is said to have contributed many an article to the railway journals of the country on the field which she has made her own. Naturally enough, she believes that there are no phases of government which women cannot study and master.

Since her marriage to a well known Washington correspondent, however, Mrs. Mosshart has given up her profession and contented herself with suffrage work. She is an ardent admirer of Dr. Shaw and a strong advocate of the broad nonpartisan policy of the National American Woman Suffrage association.

Menu For a Christmas Supper.

Bouillon in Cups.
Creamed Mushrooms.
Alligator Pear and Grapefruit Salad.
Wine Jelly. Nut Cake.
Coffee.

Alligator Pear and Grapefruit Salad.—Peel, cut in quarters and remove the seeds and pith from two good sized alligator pears and cut them in slices. Cut a grapefruit in half across the sections. Remove the seed pockets and seeds. Loosen the fruit from the rind by running a sharp knife all along the inside, then lift out the sections with a spoon. Mix the grape pulp and slices of the pears lightly in a salad bowl. Pour over the whole a French salad dressing with less than the usual amount of vinegar and use paprika. Serve with cream cheese and thin toasted wafers.

Creamed Mushrooms.—This recipe is particularly adapted to cooking in a chafing dish. Prepare the mushrooms by washing and peeling. Take two rounded tablespoonfuls of butter for each pound of mushrooms and melt in the blazer. Add the mushrooms and cook slowly for ten minutes. Add half a cupful of cream, simmer five minutes, season and serve on toast.

The Artistic Bedroom.

When a bedroom or small dressing room is papered with anything but a plain or neutral paper, bright colored or flowered chintz should never be used, but often a little color is needed to add tone to the room.

In a case of this kind one of the new bedspreads which are so pretty and easily made is just the thing to give the necessary color.

Select a plain white spread of good quality and rather heavy.

Cut from chintz a bunch of roses or a spray of gay colored flowers and baste one in each corner, with a larger one for the center.

Sew to the spread and finish the raw edges with a fine featherstitch or with a long and short buttonhole stitch.

This idea can be carried out for scarfs to cover the dressing table and bureau of the scarf of linen to fit the top of each and finish the edges with a scallop or a hem. Finish this with the stitch that was used on the spread. Cut out the flowers and applique to the edges of the scarf. Bunches of the same flowers can be added to the corners of the white curtains.

Condescension.

"What air them kitchenettes I hear tell of in the cities?" asked Deacon Hyperbole Medders, the somewhat honored agriculturist.

"They're the places, Uncle Hy," explained Upton Downs, his city nephew, "in which is molded or cast or [illegible] [illegible] pound of [illegible]."—Judge.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Tricks of No. 9.

All through the multiplication table the product of 9 comes to 9. No matter what you multiply with or how many times you repeat or change the figures, the result is always the same.

For instance, twice 9 is 18; add 8 and 1 and you have 9. Three times 9 equals 27; 2 and 7 make 9 again. So on until you had 11 times 9 equals 99. This seems to bring an exception. But add the digits; 9 and 9 make 18, and again 1 and 8 make 9. Go on to an indeterminable extent and the thing continues. Take any number at random. For example, 450 times 9 equals 4,050, and the digits added make 9 once more. Take 6,000 times 9, equals 54,000, and again you have 5 and 4.

Take any row of figures, reverse the order and subtract the less from the greater; the difference will certainly be always 9 or a multiple of 9. For example, 5,071 minus 1,705 equals 3,366. Add these digits and you have 18, and 1 and 8 make the familiar 9.

You have the same result, no matter how you take the numbers, by squares or cubes.

One more way is given by which No. 9 shows its strange powers. Write down any number you please. Add its digits and then subtract the sum of the said digits from the original number. No matter what number you start with, the sum of the digits in the answer will be 9 or its multiple.

Forfeits.

In many of the games which you play while with your friends, both in and out of doors, you are required to pay penalties by giving forfeits. There are a great many penalties which bring forth fun and laughter. Try some of these written here below the next time you are entertaining your friends and see what a good time you will have:

Put one hand where the other cannot touch it. (Put the right elbow in the left hand.)

Stand on six legs and hold up four. (Stand on one chair and hold up another.)

Cut an apple with ivory knives. (Bite it.)

Go out of the room with two legs and return with six. (Walk out of the room and return carrying a chair or stool.)

Put a pitcher in the room and crawl into it. (Crawl into the room.)

Concerning Nails.

All young people have heard of fourpenny nails, sixpenny nails, and so forth. The "penny" does not mean money, but is a corruption of the word pound.

When we speak of fourpenny nails we mean nails of such a size that 1,000 of them will weigh four pounds. An eightpenny nail weighs eight pounds a thousand, and so on. It is an old English term, and its original form was "four pound," "eight pound," "ten pound." Carpenters and other artisans got into the way of slurring over these terms and pronouncing them "four pen" and "six pen." This corruption, in turn, was modified by turning the shortened "pen" into "penny," and so it stands today, a clear case of turning a weight into a coin.

"Locating Cities."

"Locating cities" is a very interesting game. To play this game it is best to have ten or more children, who are divided into two sides. These sides should stand at least ten or eleven feet apart, in rows facing each other. The first girl or boy on side No. 1 names a city, such as Chicago or Berlin. The first player on the opposite side has to tell what state or country that city is in before the girl or boy on side No. 1 counts ten. If she fails she is out of the game; if she does not, she then names a city, and the next player in order on side No. 1 must answer in the same way. This is kept up until the end of the lines, and the side which has the most number of children standing wins.

Keep to the Right.

Before the day of traffic officers, who arrest you if you do not keep to the right of the road—in fact, before the day of roads themselves—two men meeting invariably kept to the right, says the American Boy. In those days, before the dawn of history, every traveler carried his life in his hands, and he never ventured from home without his shield and sword. Since the shield was carried on the left arm and the sword in the right hand they of necessity passed each other on the right, so as to bring shield to shield, thus being completely protected.

Jumping Letters.

Jump the first letter to the end of the word, making the first last.

1. Jump the implement of the poorest toilers and find where they are compelled to live.

2. Jump to break in pieces and find tradesmen.

3. Jump a luscious fruit and have a swelling.

4. Jump a halter and find snares.

Answers. — 1. Shovel. hovels. 2. Shatter, hatters. 3. Plum, lump. 4. Strap, traps.

A Spider's Web.

The gems no robber man would steal
Because they were but sparkling dew,

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

A Dress For Afternoon.

One of the prettiest of the season's one-piece frocks. It is made of figured taffeta and trimmed with hem-stitched batiste.

The center-front of the waist is indicated by small "o" perforations, and this is well to remember in making the waist. The first actual step toward construction, however, is to close the under-arm and sleeve seams as notched, then underface the front edge of the front. Close the back seam and face the square collar and sew to neck edge as notched. Gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations; sew stay to gathered edge, centers-backs even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam and bring front edge to center-front. Gather long sleeve on single small "o" perforations; draw gathers to the required size and adjust ribbon, or a bias strip of material about ½ inch wide, over gathers. Close cuff seam as notched, sew to short sleeve, single small "o" perforations and seams even.

For the outer front and back, pleat front, placing "T" on small "o" perforations and tack. Close seams on right side and finish left shoulder and side seams for opening. Arrange on front and back, with centers even, and tack neck edges of back together.

Now all is ready for the skirt. First, close the back seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finish edges above for placket. Stitch straight or bias bands (3 inches wide when finished) to position along crosslines of small "o" perforations. Gather upper edge of skirt between double "TT" perforations. Sew to lower edge of waist over stay (leaving lower edge of adjustable front and back free), center-fronts and back seams even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam. Stitch tape underneath upper edge of skirt (on left side) from center-front to center-back.

The skirt is slightly circular in shape, which gives it a pretty flare about the lower edge.

This charming frock of figured taffeta with collar and cuffs of hem-stitched batiste, is ideal for afternoon wear. The buttons may be of black velvet or satin, the principal point being that they should stand out prominently in contrast to the silk. The shaped front, which is a chic feature of the dress, can be easily removed, if desired, leaving a plain blouse of graceful design.

In medium size the dress requires to develop 5¼ yards 36-inch silk, with 1 yard of extra material if bands trim the skirt.

For the Bride And Groom

Here is a string of inexpensive recipes for two people:

Ma's Doughnuts.—One cupful milk (small cup), one cupful sugar, salt, cinnamon and teaspoonful of baking powder. Flour to make as soft as you can roll out. Fry in hot fat as usual. Makes twenty-four big doughnuts.

Meat Pudding.—One pound round steak. Cut up small one onion. Now rub one cupful of fine chopped suet into two cupfuls flour, salt and a little water to roll out as pie crust. Put meat and onion with salt and pepper in, and draw up crust around it. Boil in pudding cloth two hours (put a pail cover on bottom of kettle you boil it in to prevent it sticking).

Delicious Gingerbread.—Cupful molasses, salt, ginger, tablespoonful lard, cupful hot water, teaspoonful soda, flour to make real soft. Bake in moderate oven about half an hour.

Onion Soup.—Four onions cut up very small, boiled; one pint soup stock, cupful milk, salt and pepper. Serve with toasted crackers. Very easy to make.

Beef Stew.—Cut up a cupful of lean meat, one onion, one carrot, three potatoes, salt and pepper. Boil all together till tender.

Bean Soup.—Cupful cold baked beans, one onion, cupful soup stock, two potatoes cut up. Boil one hour.

Mock Roast Beef.—One cupful fine chopped meat, one egg, one cupful breadcrumbs, salt, pepper, a little soup stock. Form in a loaf and serve with mashed potatoes and spinach.

Mock Chicken Salad.—Put one can tuna fish (10 cents) on lettuce leaves and pour homemade dressing over it.

Rice Pudding For Two.—One spoonful washed rice, one big cupful milk, a small handful raisins, salt, spoonful sugar, dash nutmeg, teaspoonful butter. Bake till rice is nicely done.

Apple Pudding For Two.—Put two apples, pared and cut up, in dish, with a little sugar, salt and spice, one slice bread, one egg, one cupful milk. Sift a little sugar on top. Bake in moderate oven.

Boiled Fruit Pudding For Two.—One cupful raisins, one cupful flour, [illegible] small pudding pail or baking powder [illegible].

CHRISTMAS CHOCOLATES.

How to Make Delicious Bonbons That Will Keep.

Not often to be had in store chocolate creams is the flavoring of cordials or liqueurs that can be added to homemade ones from a well stocked sideboard. They make a delicious combination with the chocolate and keep the candy moist longer than any other filling. Knead a little piece of the fondant until it is warm and soft; make a little hollow in the center, pouring in the cordial from the top and kneading it over. Let it get cold and thoroughly hard before dipping. The coating will be more glossy if you thin the melted chocolate partly with butter instead of all water. It should be the consistency of good, thick cream, and the butter thins it as well as gives it gloss. It should be melted in a pan of water and kept standing in it while coating the bonbons, keeping it at that temperature where it feels warm to the touch. Use a silver butter pick for dipping and insert at the top, and as you take it out twist it so as to give the little curl of chocolate over the top.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Bracket [illegible] Window Shade [illegible]

With the old style of window shade bracket it frequently happens that in the manipulation of the window sash the roller is knocked out of its resting place and falls to the floor, often being seriously damaged as the result of the experience. At the best it is necessary to climb up on a chair and replace the shade and then readjust it. It will be observed from the drawing that the bracket is provided with a novel arrangement of receiving recess with relation to the opening of the bracket and a recess in alignment with the opening, whereby the pintle can be inserted in a predetermined manner, but is incapable of accidentally releasing if the roller is subject to jolts or any other disturbing influence.

Potato Yeast.

Potato yeast is made with less trouble than other kinds, the bread made with it keeps moist longer, and there is no danger of injuring the flavor by using too much. One pint of potato yeast, one-half pint (one teacupful) of hop yeast or a yeast cake is equal in strength. Potato yeast will keep for several weeks in a [illegible] either extreme heat or freezing will kill the germ. Never add soda to yeast. If it becomes sour it will do to start fresh yeast, but will never make good bread. Always stir yeast well before using. To four good sized potatoes peeled, boiled and mashed fine, add four tablespoonfuls of white sugar, one of ground ginger, one of salt and two cupfuls of flour (the flour and other dry ingredients should be well mixed together first, then thoroughly incorporated with the potato); pour over one pint of boiling hot potato water and beat until smooth. After it has cooled to only blood heat add one cupful of good yeast or one yeast cake dissolved in a cupful of warm water and set away to rise. When light, cover and put in a cold place.

Potato Pasty.

Fill a baking pan with any left over meat chopped fine and seasoned with onion or sweet peppers. Add enough water to make gravy and a bit of butter if the meat is not fat. Work together one large cupful of mashed potato, one cupful of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of shortening, two cupfuls flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls baking powder until it can be rolled into a thick sheet (the softer the better). Spread over the meat like a pie crust. Bake in a moderate oven till a golden brown.

Ham En Casserole.

Select a slice of ham about two inches thick, dredge with flour and saute brown in its own fat. Brown two sliced onions in this fat, also a carrot scraped and sliced. Place the ham in the casserole, cover with the vegetables, add one turnip pared and cut into small cubes. Add half a teaspoonful of pepper, then pour on a cupful of boiling water, cover and cook for three hours in a moderate oven. Half an hour before the cooking is finished add a cupful of strained tomatoes.

Mock Cream Pie.

One cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, yolks of two eggs, one pint of hot milk, pinch of salt, one teaspoonful of butter. Beat the yolks of the eggs, add the sugar and cornstarch (well mixed), stir in the hot milk slowly and add the salt and butter. Turn into a crust already baked. Grate nutmeg on the top. Bake till firm. Cover with meringue and brown.

Care of the Complexion.

Face masks are anything but helpful to the complexion. They create the evils they are supposed to cure and which beauty specialists endeavor so heroically to combat. The pores become constricted, and the poisonous deposits are shut in when they should come away freely. All heavy pastes are bad.

Escalloped Potatoes.

Peel and slice raw potatoes thin. Butter, salt, pepper, sprinkle with [illegible], then another layer of potatoes, and so on until the pan is filled. Just before putting into the oven fill the dish with cream or milk.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

The jumper frock is still one of the most liked models, which fact is easy to explain when one sees such a smart model as this one. The frock is made of chiffon broadcloth and the underbody, with sleeves cut in one, is of chiffon velvet. The short peplum is circular in effect and is topped by a soft pointed girdle. In medium size the dress requires 3 yards 54-inch broadcloth and 2¾ yards 36-inch velvet.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE SALAD BOWL.

SURPRISE SALAD.—A cupful of finely cut celery, two cupfuls of shredded lettuce, half a cupful of finely cut onion, half a cupful of grated or finely chopped raw carrot, two hard boiled eggs, six slices of tomato, a cupful of mustard dressing. Line shallow plate with shredded lettuce; cover with slices of tomato. Mix carrot, celery and onion together, put a spoonful on each piece of tomato and cover with mustard dressing. Garnish with hard boiled eggs which have been cut into quarters and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Stuffed Beet Salad.—Choose beets of uniform size, one for each person to be served. Cook in unsalted water until tender enough to pierce with a broom straw. Throw into cold water to slip the skins; then shape into cups. Sprinkle with salt, sugar, lemon juice or vinegar and set away to get ice cold. At serving time fill with a mixture of vegetables. Season the beets well with French dressing before filling the cups and serve on lettuce leaves or a bed of coleslaw.

Cucumber and Onion Salad.—Pare cucumbers and lay in ice water for an hour. Do the same with the onions, using another bowl. To serve, slice them in proportion of one onion to three large cucumbers. Arrange in a salad bowl and season with vinegar, pepper and salt.

Chestnut Salad.—Make a slight incision in the outer skin of thirty large chestnuts, put in a saucepan of hot water and boil twenty minutes. Drain, plunge into cold water and peel off the skins. Cut into quarters and dust with salt and pepper. Peel four sour apples and cut in pieces of similar size to nuts. Cut some of the dark meat off a large, cold, roasted turkey, making the pieces about the same size, and arrange on lettuce leaves in the salad bowl. Cover with a plain dressing and serve cold.

NOVEMBER CROP REPORT

Corn.—The estimated grand total of 9,091,000,000 bushels approaches with 34,000,000 bushels of the record crop of 1912, though the estimated yield per acre of 28.3 bushels has been three times surpassed in the last ten years. The yield in the northern portion of the corn belt was seriously reduced by frost damage. A large portion of the corn then failed to mature. Such corn, even where sufficiently advanced to have distinct feeding value, is very chaffy, and the yield in weighed bushels falls far below its early promise. The quality in the frosted acres is very low, but in the remainder of the corn belt it is generally fair and in most places better than last year. The average for the United States, 77.2 per cent. is the lowest since 1901.

Potatoes.—The estimates of potato yield show a decline of 2.3 bushels per acre from the promise of a month ago. The estimated yield of 96.3 bushels indicates a total crop of 359,000,000 bushels, 47,000,000 bushels less than the large crop of last year and 3,000,000 bushels greater than the 5-year average. The heavy damage from rot during September apparently ceased with the coming of favorable weather during October. While yields are seriously lowered in Maine, New York, Michigan, and Wisconsin, they are good in Virginia, Indiana, Illinois and in most of the important potato states west of the Mississippi. The western crop is average or above, except in Utah and Idaho. The quality of potatoes, 85.3 per cent. is the lowest since 1904, except for the crop of 1911, which was the same. Quality is particularly low in New York and Michigan, due to the blight and rot, and in the northern potato producing states generally they are undersized. In the middle and southern belts and in the Western states they are generally of good quality.

Sweet Potatoes.—Sweet potatoes have yielded well, the reported average of 101. bushels per acre being about 10 per cent. above the average and the highest record since 1880. The quality, 92.2, is about 4 per cent. over the average and the highest since 1898. The excessive moisture which in many sections injured white potatoes seems to have been favorable rather than otherwise to sweet potatoes. October weather was very favorable, so that the yield as shown is better than anticipated from conditions on October 1.

Tobacco.—The tobacco yield estimated at 797.3 pounds per acre, which is 26 pounds less than the 10-year average yield and 48 pounds below that of last year, indicates a crop of 1,050,000,000 pounds, 15,000,000,000 above last year's crop, and 54,000,000 greater than the 5-year average. Yields are below average in the New England belt, particularly in the northern section, near average in the New York and Pennsylvania fields, slightly above in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, slightly below in North Carolina and considerably below in South Carolina, somewhat above in Ohio and Illinois and below in Indiana, and markedly low in Wisconsin, the crop in the latter state having suffered severely from frost. The Kentucky and Tennessee crops are very nearly average. The quality of the crop throughout the United States is 82.6 per cent. compared with a 10-year average of 86.6 per cent. and the lowest since 1901. The low condition is particularly marked in New England, South Carolina and Wisconsin, as due principally to the lack of favoring weather and sunshine in New England, to shortage and low grade of fertilizer in South Carolina and to frost in Wisconsin.

Apples.—The apple production for local and farm as well as commercial consumption as reported November 1, 76,670,000 barrels, more than confirms the earlier promise of a large crop. The crop is approximately 8,000,000 barrels less than last year's bumper crop, but 18,000,000 barrels above the 5-year average. The production is particularly large in the North Central States, being more than double the 10-year average in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, and almost double in Wisconsin, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and Kentucky. The total production, however, is exceeded in recent years not only by that of last year but by the crops of 1912 and 1906. The crop is below average in New England, New York, Michigan, Montana, Colorado, Washington, Oregon and California. The quality, 84.8 per cent is high, being in comparison with 83.6 last year and an average of 76.1 per cent. for the past 6 years. It is better than the average in all important states except Michigan and the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States.—Weekly News Letter.

¶ Co-operation in Encouraging Song Birds

By Allen Stephens, Columbus, Ohio

I am glad to see that so many persons are co-operating in encouraging song birds to come back and remain with us again. I have recently seen numbers of robins, meadow larks, blackbirds, thrushes, bluejays and other birds.

Here is a suggestion: Kill all English sparrows, for they eat the eggs of song birds and tear up their nests. These sparrows eat nothing but the farmers' grain, while song birds earn their keep by the insects they destroy as well as the songs they sing for us.

While robins eat a few cherries, they more than earn their bread with the good they do elsewhere. If a cherry orchard is surrounded with a row of mulberry trees the robins will hardly touch the cherries.

Blackbirds are not such nuisances in the garden or in the orchard as people imagine.

Small boys should be encouraged to leave the birds alone. Hunters should spare song birds.

Cats are great enemies of birds, but I believe they can be taught to leave them alone.

Great War Council to Meet in Paris; British Lord Praises Italy

London.—Lord Kitchener, who is now in Milan, watched the shelling of Gorizoia by the Italians on Saturday in the company of King Victor Emmanuel and General Cadorna, and before leaving the fighting front he paid a moving tribute to the valor of the Italian troops and the efficiency of the Italian army. This was read to the various divisions of the army in the order of the day and was greeted with tremendous cheering for England and Lord Kitchener.

One result of Great Britain's War Secretary's sojourn in Italy is the agreement to send a big Italian force to the Balkans if the general war council soon to be held in Paris approves of this course of action. Moreover, I am informed the general war council, which is composed of high military experts of the four great allied Powers hereafter will decide al lthe great movements by land and sea.

General Cadorna feels, according to despatches from Rome, that his great push against the Austrians will tell effectually for the Allies in the end, but the King and General Cadorna told Lord Kitchener that as co-ordination spelled success they will abide by the decisions of what soon will be the supreme general staff.

The King of Italy, who is a splendid soldier, agreed with Lord Kitchener that the Franco-British forces have the Germans practically beaten on the western front and that a new Russian offensive foreshadows victory in the eastern theatre, but he and General Cadorna strongly impressed on Britain's War Secretary that the operations against the Austrians in the "irredentist" provinces were of

GERMAN CAMPAIGN AGAINST SERBIA AT AN END

London.—"With the flight of the 'scanty remains' of the Serbian army into the Albanian mountains Germany's operations against Serbia have been brought to a close."

This enigmatic statement in the official communication issued yesterday by Army Headquarters in Berlin has aroused keen interest in London military circles. No one knows just how to interpret the sentence—whether Berlin will permit Bulgaria to end the campaign in Southern Serbia while the Germanic forces are diverted to the Golden Horn or whether these forces will be hurled against the Anglo-French contingent as distinguished from the Serbs. One thing is regarded as certain. The next major operation from the Teutonic side will be organized to take full advantage of the successful drive from the Danube.

The Serbs, reduced to probably 75,000 effectives by death, illness and capture, are now fairly in Albanian and Montenegrin territory, whither Bulgarians and Austrians with a few German units are pursuing them. The virtual destruction of the army has not broken their morale, however, and the remaining columns are conducting a desperate series of engagements while they are strengthening their new mountain positions located at the end of roads and trails which give them access to the Adriatic. They hold a very small fringe of their own territory around the south and west, from Monastir to Plava.

Russian war ships, including new dreadnaughts, have been seen again off the Black Sea coast of Bulgaria, but there is no news of any landing or movement of troops.

German anxiety over Roumania is matched by that of the Allied Powers with regard to Greece. Last week it was believed all difficulties between Greece and the Allies had been surmounted, but it was found necessary to send another note to Greece, which was delivered two days ago, the reply to which is promised today. The Allies now demand not only asurance of the safety of their troops but adequate railway facilities for their transport, the withdrawal of Greek troops from the vicinity of Saloncia and the policing of Greek waters against German submarines.

ELECTRICAL PROSPERITY WEEK OBSERVED HERE BY ELECTRIC CO. WINDOW SHOW

This is electrical prosperity week throughout America, but beyond a spezial window exhibit at the storeroom and office of the Electric company, together with offering for sale a number of electrical household appliances at greatly reduced prices, the event will be ignored here. Syracuse and other cities in Northern and Central New York do not propose to allow the week to be neglected. Tonight the Syracuse Electric Show will open at 570 South Salina st. which will be the first exhibition of its kind ever held in the Salt City.

Mayor Louis Will has accepted an invitation to officiate at the opening, turning an electric switch which will put the machinery into operation and illuminate the elaborate decorations. After today the show will be open from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 11 at night each day during ther est of the week.

Wholesalers, contractors, retailers and the central station, representing the electric industry in Syracuse, join in giving the show, with "Buy Electrical Gods at Electrical Stores," the slogan for the week. Two electric signs, each fifty-five feet long and three feet wide, will blason that motto across opposite walls of the hall.

The show will occupy 4,500 square feet of floor space. There are sixteen exhibitors, who are to occupy thirty exhibition spaces.

Working exhibits, showing all kinds of electrical devices in operation, will be seen on every hand. Free lunches are to be cooked by electricity. Orchestra music and motion pictures will ad dto the entertainment of visitors.

In advance of its date, this week has achieved an unparalleled record in trade campaigns. It is said there will be no doubts of its wisdom, of its opportunity or of its benefits everywhere when the returns of the week, in courage and [illegible], are balanced. One big Chicago manufacturer announces [illegible]

Co-operation has ben its chief factor of success as it is the mainspring in the apeal of every campaign. The electrical industry, from the smallest shopkeeper to the presidents of the big companies, have joined hands in Syracuse.

In its assortments of local celebrations, varying in proportion to the enthusiasm and energy of the local committees, all of electricity's 614 uses in shortening the hours of the laborer, in helping the farmer to bigger crops and their transportation to the markets, in destroying the evils that decrease the years of man's life and in entering the home, factory, the city and the nation to ease the burdens of drudging men and women—all will be demonstrated in many effective ways.

Another pioint urged is the prospect of its lasting effectiveness in quickening more kindly feelings on the part of the public toward the electrical industry which helped start the swing back of true prosperity everywhere.

SOLDIER'S FAILED TO MEET NONDESCRIPTS

Instead of appearing on the Fair Grounds yesterday afternoon, as they had guaranteed to do, the soldiers' football team of Oswego, staged a game with the Antario A. C. of Syracuse, and the Nondescripts for the third time this season were left without an opponent.

On two previous, Manager LeRoy of the Nondescripts had a game booked with the soldiers and each time the gamc was cancelled by the Oswego team at the last moment.

It is likely that athletic relations with the Fort Ontario team will be entirely severed by local athletic clubs as a result of the treatment accorded the Nondescripts management.

N. Y. CITY HAS LOWEST RATES OF INSURANCE

New York.—New York's insurance rates are thel owest in the country. So a comparison of prevailing insurance rates in leading American cities by the Central Mercantile Association, No. 141 Fifth avenue, discloses. The study, a part of the association's industrial service, shows that manufacturers and merchants here have un equalled opportunities for the safe storing of goods and for the housing of industries undder a minimum fire insurance.

NEW GERMAN LOAN IN REICHSTAG TOMORROW

Rotterdam.—The German Reichstag reassembles on Tuesday and the Governmentw ill then submit a bill for a fourth war loan.

It is expected that the Socialist Liberals will force a debate on the censorship and the "state of siege" act. They will protest against the authorities use of this law to prohibit the sale of ab ook on Belgium by the famous Danish writer, Johannes Joergensen. This book is described in its title as "an indictment against Germany."

Dr. Joergensen was professor of literature at Louvain University before the war.

Lack of Vessels Ties Up 17,000 Carloads of Freight in Port

New York.—Seventeen thousand carloads of freight are jammed in and around the port of New York now, and transportation officials said last night that the only relief the embarrassed merchants and shippers could find at present would be for all the railroads to place an embargo upon foreign shipments, like that declared by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, which went into effect early yesterday morning.

The Pennsylvania Railroad now has 5,000 carloads which cannot be moved because of the lack of steamships in this port to take it out. The New York Central has 2,000 freight cars jammed; the West Shore 1,000; the Erie, 2,000, and the Baltimore and Ohio, 1,000. The Lackawanna has 6,000 loads which it cannot move for the dearth of vessels.

This situation confronts the shippers here, in spite of the fact that 546 vessels were loaded last month at this port, the greatest number in the history of the freight shipping of the city. The blockade of commerce, the destruction of merchantmen and the fear of other vessels to put to sea through the sixteen months of the European war have made it impossible for exporters to clear away the freight in anything like the quantity in which it comes to the port.

Enormous consigtments of war munitions and food supplies have been shipped here in quantities never before known for export to Europe, but there are not sufficient ships to take them away.

Complaint is made not only by exporters but by merchants and business men who have shipments to make to the interior of the country, but cannot move them because of the checking of the rail[illegible]

The city has added seven miles of pier facilities to the port, but still the congestion is so great as now to amount almost to a menace. The several railroads have under consideration the placing of an embargo upon all shipments for foreign countries, so that the roads may clear their terminals for them ovement of goods that must be spread to the various parts of this country.

Such a situation, it is shown, would mean a great handicap to the Allies, because it would call a temporary halt to the supplies that have been going across the Atlantic in endless quantities since the war began.

New Channel Opened to Waters of the River

The huge pit, adjoining the plant of the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper company plant, from which thousands of cubic feet of dirt and rock have been excavated, was flooded yesterday by releasing a portion of the cofferdam which allowed the water from the river bed to enter.

A large dredge is now engaged in excavating the remainder of the cofferdam, after which that portion of the work will be considered complete.

The new mill of the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper company is finished with the exception of the wiring within and some work remaining to be done on the power house.

The section flooded will form the new channel for the raceway to be operated in connection with the new mill and power house. The Bradley Construction company had the entire contract for the work and on several occasions it was feared that the operations would be halted and thousands of dollars worth of damage wrought to the cofffer dam.

About two months ago, a sudden rise in the river caused water to flow over the dam into the pit and the contractors were obliged to work night and day in strengthening the supports. To do this, thousands of bangs of sand were hurriedly brought to the scene and placed in position on the dam. The same contractors experienced a big loss when a cofferdam at Minetto broke and machinery and other property was flooded.

WHY THE INCREASE IN CRIME?

By reason of a widespread increase in crime of all kinds a National Committee for the Prevention of Crime has been organized in New York city to make a study of contributing causes and to take such other steps as will aid in bringing a check to these abnormal conditions.

We already have many societies that make studies of crime conditions. and others that through their activities as organized charity bodies are brought in contact with the conditions in the underworld to such a degree that very little than can be learned about crime is not already known.

Improved housing conditions, steady employment, better wages for many of those who are employed, are some of the reforms that must come if crime is to be checked.

Yet there are about as many theories on this subject as there are people who give it study. The Socialists say, and not without reason, that environment has much to do with the situation. They also lay stress on what they term the capitalist system, but which more properly speaking, is a bit of greed on the part of people generally in their dealings with their less fortunate employes.

Some contend that the lack of religious or ethical training in the schools and the indifference of a large part of the people to religion and the churches, are accountable, but there is less danger from those who go to school and learn the things that are now taught than from those who grow up in ignorance, knowing nothing of letters and still less of the attributes of good citizenship.

The method of dealing with crime comes into the case, and will be considered along with the other angles. Those who believe that light punishment and soft words are better than heavy punishment and harsh words to reform criminals, will have much to say on their respective sides and from their respective viewpoints. — Elmira Advertiser.

Communication

Editor Evening Times:

From time to time since last September I have read different articles in your paper concerning young men from Fulton attending institutions of higher learning. Their achievements or expected achievements have been commented upon. These young men have made, however, records along the line of athletic activities. Would you care to print a word of comment concerning a young man whose advancement, along a line more in accord with his direct purpose at an institution of higher learning, is worthy of such comment?

About a year ago, a young man left Fulton and went to New York city to work his way through one of New York's well-known institutions. As he lacked city experience he had to begin at the bottom and work up. He did it. Last week I called upon that young man. I am pleased to tell you that should you step into the office of The Montgomery and Ward Co., in Broklyn you would be greeted by one of their most successful business correspondents: Homer R. Smith, a Fulton boy attending an institution of higher learning.

Sincerely yours,
JOHN E. MOORE.

THE PEOPLE WANT A CHANGE

The proceedings of the Chamber of Commerce under the leadership of a new secretary will be followed with more than ordinary interest. The subject that will most intensely engage popular attention is best known as the acquisition of more industries. This is an issue uppermost in the minds of nine-tenths of the population of Fulton. The time was when the Chamber of Commerce was looked to as the medium for bringing to a successful issue a change of government, but with the failure of the campaign, that hope is relegated to the scrap heap where may be found many other desirable features of municipal progress.

Public opinion seems to be settled to the extent that more industries must be acquired, even forgetting that we are allowing to languish some that have been with us and are a part of us during sunshine and storm. It is a pity that this is true, but one has only to look about to see for himself. Any number of people in this city believe that if the money used by the Chamber of Commerce during the past year to carry on its propaganda had been judiciously expended in advertising the advantages of this city as a manufacturing center, or in "bolstering lame ducks," we would be in a position to boast of results worth while. On this subject the new secretary and the directorate of the Chamber of Commerce better acquaint themselves with the sentiment of the people. If they do not the next year in the history of the Chamber of Commerce may witness a reckoning that will result disastrously to the new organization. It is as certain as that the sun rises in the east the people of the city, especially the persons who subscribed to membership in the Chamber of Commerce, are in no mood for further evidence of the secretive methods of the past. What they want and should have is open and above board discussion of matters of vital importance to the city, and less of the "star chamber" methods of working out problems.

The Evening Times prefers to believe the lesson has been learned and that under the direction of Mr. Hellenga we shall witness a revival of "community spirit," the one and only factor that can bring about the desired changes in our social, industrial, educational, moral and political life.

PULP A SUGGESTION

Months ago when the city had its Development League, it was suggested that efforts should be made to locate here an industry that would utilize the products of the pulp and paper mills whose manufactures are sent elsewhere to be made into marketable goods. In order to show what is being done by the Germans, a reprint is made of an article which appeared in The Literary Digest a few weeks ago. Following is the translation:

"It is very doubtful whether another material so universally useful as paper-pulp is to be found. Car Wheels of paper made a great sensation years ago, but paper belting and cog-wheels are now well known, as are paper garments, which are now used in great quantities in the Chicago City Hospital, being burned afterward. Even paper stockings and towels have been used in America, and paper towels are used on the South German railway sleeping-cars. * * * In America, water-proof raincoats are made of paper that can be folded up and put in one pocket, while the Japanese coolie (Japan is the land where walls and windows are made of paper) can buy a paper waterproof for a few cents and wear it a year. Barrels, pails, bathtubs, cooking utensils, and washboards of paper are to be found in many houses. Floor coverings and wall hangings of paper are nothing new, while paper gaspipes are not seldom met. Paper insulating material, imitation leather, and threads and fabrics of the same material follow without number. Sails are something new in the way of paper articles, while hygenic paper drinking cups and bottles that can be thrown away as soon as used are employed in greater and greater numbers. Paper-pulp and paper of all kinds have won out as packing material, from the finest examples of the industrial carton to the coarse paper bag for weights of a hundred pounds or more. Lately paper pulp has appeared as a substitute for wood in carpentry, especially in ship-building, where lightness of all-important boards, laths, etc., of paper pulp which can easily be prest into shape, arem uch cheaper than those of wood, as are plastic ornaments of all kinds. Such imitation boards of paper pulp can easily be fastened together with paper screws—the newest things in paper-pulp. These short records seem to indicate the early use of paper pulp in almost universal field.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington.—The prospect of Underwoodism in the Senate is said to be worrying some of the older Democrats of that body. Senator Oscar Underwood is recognized as one of the wiliest politicians in public life today. His professed friendship for Champ Clark is well remembered, but when Clark finally achieved that which had been his boyhood ambition—the Speakership of the House—he found it but the shadow of former power, the substance having been lodged for safe keeping in the hands of Mr. Underwood, chairman of the ways and means committee and author of the present tariff law.

The prospect of dissension in the next Senate became apparent some months ago when it was known that a movement was on foot to provide a running mate other than Vice-president Marshall for President Wilson next year. aMrshall, it will be recalled, frowned on any attempt of the Democrats to throttle debate on Mr. Wilson's pet project, the ship purchase bill, and because a cloture could not be established that measure was lost. A committee was then named to draw up a plan looking to the adoption of a cloture rule for the coming Senate. Recently Senator Owen, chairman of this committee, announced that the question of cloture would be the first matter brought before the Senate when it convenes in December. A few days ago Senator Underwood declared that he would support the President's defense program, although this is squarely in opposition to his attitude while in the House. Following this announcement came another in which Mr. Underwood declared himself in favor of cloture rule. On the heels of this came the report that Mr. Underwood had been called into conference with the President to discuss the legislative program of the Senate and the reorganization of that body, indicating that Mr. Wilson looks upon him as a possible leader.

Senatorial wise-acres now have their mind's eyes on a sequence of events somewhat as follows:—The reorganization of the Senate will be postponed until the debate on cloture is concluded. In this debate, Mr. Underwood, who has been studying the subject from all angles, will take a part so important as to throw Senator Owen, its sponsor, into the blackground. The adoption of a cloture rule will create a committee on cloture, with Underwood as chairman. This will mean the over throw of Senator Overman, one of the old members, now chairman of the committee on rules. Parallel with this fight for the leadership of the Senate. Senator Clarke, of Arkansas, was President pro-tem in the last Senate, but his opposition to the ship purchase bill put him into White House disfavor. Several Senators wish to supersede Senator Clarke, among them Kern and Lewis being mentioned. Clarke is certain to be sent down.

But here is where students of the Senate chess-game see Underwood's pretty work: Once a committee on cloture is named, it will take over all the attributes of the present Rules committee of the House. That means that any legislation which comes up in the Senate will have to get the approval of the committee on cloture, which will put gag-rule into offect and otherwise control the legislative functions of the Upper House. Hence, if Underwood succeeds in having himself named as chairman of the cloture committee, he will be the real leader of the Senate, and the President pro-tem will be only titular leader.

This sudden elevation to power would not be unprecedented. Senator James and Hughes, who had put in two years as members of the House ways and means committee, on entering the Senate with that prestige, were immediately appointed to the Finance Committee, an assignment which, in the old days, required years of hard service to secure. Senatorial seniority no longer cuts as large a figure as formerly.

The older Democratic Senators watch the preliminaries with misgivings, and it is reported that they are getting their heads together preparatory to putting into effect every parliamentary tactic known to that body to head off these aspiring youngsters. The battle will be watched with interest by everyone.

Scene from Aborn Opera Company's Spectacular Revival of "The Bohemian Girl," at The Quirk Theatre, Wednesday, December 1.

COLOSSAL REVIVAL OF "THE BOHEMIAN GIRL"

The modernized version of "The Bohemian Girl" that comes to the Quirk on Wednesday, December 1, it is said is an exact duplication in every detail of the massive spectacular production of Balfe's masterpiece that the Aborn Opera company first presented at the Boston Opera House and which proved to be an exceedingly meritorious presentation of this charming opera given in fully adequate scenic suroundings and with a view to fully realizing the many highly dramatic possibilities offered by its book. In its new form it has been presented in all of the principal cities of this country and Canada and has everywhere scored an emphatic success. It is generally conceded that the Messrs. Aborn have in this, made the most pretentious production of "The Bohemian Girl" everw itnessed in America. The special features made necessary in this version include band of real Gypsies, wonderful whirlwind acrobats and the dazzling ballet "The Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda" the introduction of which is entirely consistent with the story and does not mar the opera from a musical standpoint but on the contrary through the atmosphere created lends much to the general effect. Lovers of good music never tire of ballads such as "Hearts Bowed Down," "Then You'll Remember Me," "Bliss Forever Past," "A Soldier's Life," "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls" and "When Other Lips and Other Hearts." The promise is made that great care has been given to the selection of the cast and the chorus as well and these with the ballet and the special orchestra number upwards of one hundred people. Among the noted singers in the cast are Edith Allan, America's youngest prima donna who will be heard in the role of "Arline," Mildred Rogers as the "Gypsy Queen," Henry Taylor as "Thaddeus," Francis Tyler as "Devilshoof," George W. Dunstan as "Count Arnheim" and Ralph Nicholls as "Florestein."

THE WILL TO CONQUER

A young man entered the University of Michigan this fall for the six-year medical course who had only 3 cents left after paying his matriculation and registration fees. Besides his lack of money, he had no books, nothing to eat, and no place to sleep. But he has managed to keep up with his classes. The first work that he secured was picking apples for 5 cents a bushel, in an orchard seven miles from Ann Arbor. This was his program: "After school each day he walked out, picked apples by moonlight until midnight, slept in a barn, was up before dawn, picked apples until it was time to start back to college, and lived on one meal a day. When the season for picking apples ended, he secured a place working around the home of a rich man, attending the furnace, the garage, the ... and sleeping in a stable." The ... man who has the pluck, endurance and industry to study medicine in the face of so many obstacles may not make a great physician, but he is certain to succeed in some sphere in life. His case demonstrates that the higher education still has devoted followers, despite all the allurements of the so-called vocational training, with its easy solution of the problem of poverty and its short cuts to self-support.—Rochester Chronicle and Democrat.

HOSPITAL WORK HELPS CZARINA

Care of Soldiers Cures Her of Melancholy.

JOY IN IMPERIAL HOME.

Fear Which Was Held In Close Intimacies of Court Circles That She Was Drifting Into Hopeless Insanity Now Dispelled—Her Two Daughters Also Are Actively Engaged.

Petrograd.—If the war has brought unspeakable horror to the Russian people it has also brought comfort to the imperial household of the czar. Prior to the war it was no secret that the czarina suffered from a marked form of melancholia with other mental peculiarities. The fear was held in the close intimacies of court circles that she was drifting into hopeless insanity.

But since the czarina and her two daughters, the Grand Duchess Olga and the Grand Duchess Tatiana, have entered actively into their work as Red Cross nurses the word has gone throughout all the Russias that the mental sickness of the czarina has been cured.

To her constant and self sacrificing labors in the court hospital at Tsarskoe Selo, the village where the famous summer palace of the czar is located, is credited the relief which has come to her mentally.

EMPRESS ALEXANDRA AS RED CROSS NURSE

The czarina and the grand duchesses took a thorough course in training in the care of the wounded soldiers. The czarina threw herself into the organization of the hospital with enthusiasm and had it equipped in the most perfect manner.

It was placed under the direction of the Princess Gedroyc, one of the highest nobility and who has won a national reputation in Russia as one of the foremost women doctors. The czarina, with her daughters, works at the hospital every day from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. and often later.

So impressed are they with the seriousness and the humanity of their services that they often return in the evenings, and when they have dangerously wounded patients they stay all night. The czarina has also equipped a bath train and presented it to the soldiers in the field.

The court hospital has accommodations for 200 soldiers and thirty officers. The regular nurse's uniform which the royal nurses wear is made of white with a red cross on the left arm. The example of the czarina and her daughters has induced many women of the Russian nobility to devote themselves to Red Cross work.

Some of them have turned over their residences in Petrograd as well as their estates in the country to the soldiers for hospitals. The Grand Duchess Olga is twenty years old and her sister, Tatiana, seventeen. Both of them have been gazetted colonels of two crack calvalery regiments in their father's service.

London.—Seven patients suffering from cancer have been completely cured "by assisting nature's efforts," according to Dr. Robert Bell, head of the cancer research department of the Battersea General hospital.

"We have," Dr. Bell recently said, "been able to demonstrate beyond doubt that the healing power of nature, if sufficiently assisted by regulating the diet, regimen of patients, together with the administration of therapeutic agents, has proved in many instances quite competent not only to overcome the disease, but to bring about complete recovery."

OFFSPRING OF ALIEN PARENTS HARDIEST

Figures Show More Deaths Among Native Population.

New York.—Children under five years old who are born in this city of native parents die more quickly than children whose parents are foreigners, according to figures for 1914 made public recently by the health department. The compilation, which was made under the direction of Dr. William H. Guilfoy, registrar of records, shows that out of every 1,000 children of native white parentage forty-four boys and thirty-five girls do not reach their fifth year, whereas on the same basis thirty-nine boys and thirty-two girls who are the offspring of foreigners die in early childhood.

The infant mortality figures for the native population are swelled to a greater disproportion when the records for negro children are considered. Among this class 112 male babies and ninety-five female die out of every 1,000. Added to the statistics for whites, these figures give an average of seventy-eight boys and sixty-five girls.

In the opinion of Dr. Charles F. Bolduan, director of the bureau of public health education, the foreign mother is more apt to remain at home and look after her child than the native mother, who is called away by a greater number of social duties. Although the native mother can read magazines which treat of the proper upbringing of children, Dr. Bolduan pointed out that the health authorities come into more personal contact with the foreign mothers.

The mortality among native white children, arranged according to the birthplace of the mother, gave the following results: Native mothers, 30 per 1,000; English, 26; German and Austro-Hungarian, 25; Swedish, 22; Russian and Polish, 20; Irish, 32; Italian, 33, and French, 35.

Among the babes of negro parents the only disease group that approximated the figures for white native children was that of the contagious diseases. All their causes of death, especially the respiratory, tuberculous and congenital, exhibited a mortality much higher than among the whites.

PLAN HOLIDAY FOR APRIL 30.

Would Commemorate Inauguration of Washington as President.

New York.—One of the last things done by the late constitutional convention was the approval of a number of recommendations for the enactment of measures by the legislature, and one of the things approved was the suggestion that April 30 be made a legal holiday in commemoration of the inauguration of George Washington as first president of the United States on April 30, 1789.

Delegate Peter Donovan, one of the members representing the Twenty-first senate district in the Bronx, submitted the proposition, doing so on the basis of a letter written him by George J. Clark, a journalist, who urged that just as July 4 was the holiday of American independence and Decoration day was the anniversary of the saving of the Union, so April 30 should be commemorative of national unity.

When the state legislature meets in January one of the two Bronx senators, either Senator James A. Hamilton or Senator John J. Dunnigan, in the upper house and Assemblyman Fertig in the lower, will introduce the necessary bills.

SQUASHES FROM ASH PILE.

Seeds Dropped Aimlessly, Receiving No Attention, Bring Large Harvest.

Franklin, Ind.—As a result of planting four squash seeds in an ash pile early in the summer H. C. Hoffman gathered more than sixty large squashes from the vines. The squashes have attracted the attention of half the people here, as Mr. Hoffman lives only two squares from the courthouse.

The seeds, thrown carelessly on the ash pile and receiving no attention whatever, except an occasional pan of dishwater, grew so rapidly that they soon left his yard, entered the neighbors' yard and then climbed a wire fence and covered it a half block from their planting place.

Mr. Hoffman delivered to all neighbors where his vines had trespassed a large squash. Most of the squashes were more than three feet long and of fine quality.

Old English Bribery.

Bribery, according to an expert on the subject, first became a recognized mode of securing votes in the reign of Charles I. It was afterward improved upon by George III., who lost no opportunity of enforcing its claims as a good vote getter. "If," he wrote to his chief adviser on one occasion, "the Duke of Northumberland requires some gold pills for the election it would be wrong not to satisfy him." The king was not altogether selfish in this matter of spending money, for the gold pills came out of his own medicine chest, the civil list, whereas his successors drew upon the secret service cash for the corruption of the voters.—London Chronicle.

"Chick" Meehan to Play Basketball in this City

Local sport fans are promised a treat in the near future when "Chick" Meehan, quarterback on the Syracuse University football team and candidate for Walter Camp's Second All-American eleven, will be seen in action at close range on the floor at Church's hall in a basketball game between the Gamma Eta Gamma Fraternity of Syracuse and thel ocal Maccabee five.

Manager Snow has almost closed arrangements for the game and as soon as the University squad returns from its western trip, George Ward, of this city, will bring the fast team here.

George Ward is a member of the Gamma Eta Gamma and is a roommate of Meehan. On the team which will come here will also be "Big Chief" Newbury, the heavy halfback of the Orange team and Brainey, end. Hayes and Jones, local boys and former members of Fulton High basketball teams, are also members of the same fraternity and they too will play.

In preparing a reception for the visitors, Manager Snow intends to have dancing after the game and to treat the spectators also to a fast preliminary.

DILLON APPEALS TO GOVERNOR

Members of the Cayuga County Patrons' Association and residents of this vicinity in general will be interested in a dispatch from New York which stated that John J. Dillion, State Commissioner of Foods and Markets, has appealed to Gov. Whitman and the Interstate Commerce Commission for aid to compel the railroads of New York State to transport hay from thef arms of Onondaga and Cayuga counties to New York city, this hay to be sold at public auction.

The appeal is expected to reach the governor today. In his appeal Mr. Dillion asked Governor Whitman to use his good offices through the Public Service Commission or otherwise in behalf of the farmers. The Interstate Commerce Commission was requested to issue a relief order on theg round that the shipment would pass through New Jersey.

Mr. Dillon said: "The present hold-up is the kind of treatment of the New York farmers by the railroads that causes New York State fruits and products to rot on the ground for lack of shipping facilities. It is an outrage," he continued.

"The tracks and terminals outside of New York city are crowded with hay from points outside of the state, and the farmers in New York are discriminated against and kept out of the market in the interest of the dealers."

E. T. Casler the [illegible] of the Cayuga County Patrons' Association, is out of the city today trying to find purchasers for the immense hay crop in the county and none of the men in the office of the association knew any thing of the move, which Mr. Dillon made.—Auburn Citizen.

MOTT HOPES FOR CROWD AT TONIGHT'S BOUTS

"Iron Neck" Mott, lately returned from a tour of the states as a wrestler, expresses the hope that enough fans may appear at Sullivan's hall tonight to warrant a continuation of the game in this city. Fulton has ever been a good supporter of wrestling, but so far this year the crowds have not exceeded the seating capacity of the quarters.

Tonight's attraction will be Frank Shattuck, of Batavia, who will endeavor to give Mr. Mott's shoulders a gentle rubbing on the downy matt. If he doesn't succeesd it is said that he proposes to count ties all the way back home. John Ward, Fulton's pride, will take on Del. Kimme, both young men feling assured of providing a little amusement for the crowd. The main feature will begin at 8:30 o'clock.

INCREASED PAYROLLS MARK CLOSE OF WEEK

Dun's Review of Saturday says:

Widely divergent lines in all sections reflect a sustained growth in business movements and volumes. Manufacturing operations still broaden, with overtime in force in many instances, while retail distribution steadily enlarges under the stimulus of increased pay rolls and continued low temperatures. As the season advances holiday goods become a more conspicuous feature and there is every indication that results in this particular branch will prove exceptionally gratifying. With money circulating more freely, collections show further improvement, and the commercial mortality diminishes, fewer failures occurring this month than in October. Other statistical records exhibit noteworthy gains. Though speculative activity has abated, the expansion in mercantile and industrial transactions keeps bank clearings at unusually high totals, exchanges at leading centers this week being 71.9 per cent in excess of a year ago and 34.5 per cent, greater than in 1913. Enhancement of the earning power of the railroads [illegible] gross revenues of systems reporting for thefi rst two weeks of November disclosing an increase of 15.9 per cent. over the preceding year —yet the heavy traffic movements cause an embarrassing accumulation of freight on the Atlantic seaboard. Inadequate ocean shipping facilities accentuate the congestion, not enough vessels being available to handle the unprecendented rush of merchandise for Europe. Exports were again of unmatched proportions in October, and the present development of oversea commerce is aided by the greater stability of sterling exchange, due to additional foreign credits in this market. Moreover, a further extension of American enterprise abroad is foreshadowed by the steps taken with that end in view by important financial interests. [illegible] exceptionally abundant supply of funds here, money rates rule at a phenomenally low level for the season and the investment demand for high grade securities continues a feature, bonds being notably strong and active. The rise in commodity prices is unchecked, 62 products gaining in value and 23 showing recessions this week in the list of 322 quotations regularly compiled by Dun's Review.

EXPORT FREIGHT HALTED BY L.&W.

According to this morning's Post-Standard, Frank H. Pyke, division freight agent for the Lackawanna Railroad in this territory, was notified Saturday of an embargo on all east-bound freight over this road intended for export. The embargo became effective at midnight yesterday and applies to every point on the system. This is the first time in the history of the road that so sweeping an embargo has been placed on the movement of freight, which serves to emphasize the seriousness of the situation.

Mr. Pyke said yesterday that the shipments to the New York port for transfer to Atlantic liners are greater than the ocean shipping capacity, and for this reason the loaded cars are held for days and weeks waiting to be emptied. Mr. Pyke said that the docks of the ocean freighters are congested and many freight boats are held up in the bay because there is no place to dock.

6,000 Cars Held Up

The Lackawanna estimates that it has 6,000 cars loaded with goods for foreign shipment in yards and side-tracked in the vicinity of the Hoboken terminal and along the line as far west as Buffalo. Officials of the road in New York would not attempt yesterday to make any prediction as to the time the embargo will be lifted. They said it depended entirely upon the number of ships available to carry the freight away. The company feared that by continuing to receive foreign shipments the local business would be seriously upset, and in order to avoid a congestion in this respect it was deemed advisable to stop accepting goods consigned to foreign ports.

Cars loaded with freight consigned to Atlantic liners can be held from thirty to sixty days pending the arrival of a ship to receive the goods, while local freight must be loaded in two or three days.

Embargo Only Solution

With this regulation prevailing and the amount of foreign business many times normal, it was the impression of the officials that nothing short of the embargo would relieve the situation. There is a move on to cut the free storage time on export freight, beginning January 1.

Mr. Pyke said yesterday that while there was not a great amount of export business out of Syracuse in car lots, there is a quantity of less than car loads and the embargo includes this as well as full cars. For some time there has been an embargo on hay because of the congestion in the New York market.

So far as is known, none of the other roads entering the New York ports are considering the declaration of an embargo. The New York Central has been taxed to its capacity for four weeks, but it is believed that the situation can be handled unless conditions [illegible]

PASTOR PLEADS FOR ADVERTISER

An Auburn pastor, Doctor Richards, in a recent address to the members of the "Ad" Club of that city, spoke in part as follows:

In a recent number of The Independent there is a thoughtful editorial comment on the value of the advertiser in newspaper and magazine as a public benefactor. Much is said and written today about advertising as a profitable investment for the individual or company having goods to place upon the market, but very little is heard of its value to the buyer. Mr. Hamilton Holt or whoever wrote the bright editorial on advertising, affirms that the common saying, "It pays to advertise," has a wider meaning than it is generally credited with. Advertising pays the advertiser, if the money is wisely expended, it pays the magazine, and it pays the purchaser.

Continuing the editor draws an interesting picture of the man who had the misfortune to live before the era of advertising. "He had first to discover the want of something. Naturally this discovery was not usually made until something he already had given out, and then he knew no better than to replace it with something of the same sort."

This relation of consumer and producer "put the burden of instigating innovation upon the one least capable of it." Now artists of ability lend their skill to the business of advertising and our papers and magazines come to our hand with every new idea of thep roducer set in most attractive form. Through the medium of the advertising pages we learn of new books and new breakfast foods, and are able to pass expert judgment upon the infinitely varied models of gas engines and kinds of pneumatic rubber tires. The advertiser is really a public educator.

Here is a housewife who has the problem of the daily menu for the family table. If there were no advertising, she would have to spend, perhaps, an hour of the morning, going from store to store, loking for supplies. Now, for the price of a postage stamp she may sit down in her own home, look over the advertisements of half a dozen trustworthy firms in any line, and either order by phone, or go directly to the place where she has already learned of the special article for sale, and the prices for the day. The same thing is true in the purchase of clothing or for the individual, and of furnishings for the house.

There are no more generally interesting, or practically valuable, columns in our daily papers or magazines than those that present the attractive suggestions and helpful information to be found in modern advertising.

In this connection a word of hearty commendation ought to be said for the service that is being rendered today by those who are insisting upon absolute truthfulness in the writing of advertisements. Nothing can so multiply the value of the ad, both for the producer and the consumer, as a knowledge of the trust worthiness of the statements about the goods.

"I think I may be permitted to add personal appreciation of the service of our newspapers in keeping the public informed concerning the religious activities in our churches and various benevolent organizations. I have never known a finer spirit of co-operation between the public press and the churches than we enjoy in Auburn, and this mutually helpful ministry is surely a cause for general gratitude on the part of all who are interested in thep ublic welfare.

Exhibits Arrive for Corn and Farm Products Show

The annual corn show and Farm product Exhibit of Oswego county will open tomorrow morning in the Lewis Arcade, in Cayuga st. The vacant store adjoining the Arcade will be used also for the show.

The entries will comprise various grades of corn, vegetables, poultry and other farm products.

An additional feature of the show will be the entries of the school pupils engaged in carrying out the Home Project Plan in the schools, under the supervision of Warren S. Gardner, District Superintendent.

Another interesting feature in connection with this year's show is the co-operative interest taken by the merchants of the city in an extensive advertising campaign. The merchants through the Chamber of Commerce have been instrumental in having advertising matter mailed to every farmer on the rural routes running out of this city. A postcard inviting thef armers to use their stores as they see fit, to use the telephone, and make themselves generally at home, was sent broadcoast.

A checking station will be maintained at the Chamber of Commerce rooms during the week and any articles can be left there free. Miss Clarice Bache will have charge of the checking.

CITY'S SALOON QUOTA NOW FULL

County Treasurer Opposes Transfer of Certificate from Kowalski Cafe to Thickly Settled Business Section.

Jacob Schilly made application before Justice Ross, sitting in Special Term of Supreme Court in Syracuse, Saturday, for a transfer of the liquor tax certificate held by Paul Kowalski. Schilly wants to use the license to open a place for dispensing thirst quenchers at 20 East 1st st., this city, but Judge Ross decided to hold his opinion in reserve, one reason being that H. W. Kandt, County Treasurer, was on hand with an answer. Mr. Kandt is in fact fighting the transfer on the ground that Fulton already has all the saloons it is entitled to under the law permitting only one for each 750 persons.

County Treasurer Kandt figures that 28 certificates have already been granted in Fulton, which has a population of 10,400. Another reason advanced for failing to issue the certificate is that the Haberle-Crystal Brewing company and the First National Bank of Fulton, both holding assignments of the certificate which Schilly wants transferred to him, did not sign the petition.

Paul Kowalski conducted a saloon at 201 W. Broadway and had a certificate entitling him to traffic in liquors for one year. On September 29, 1914 Kowalski assigned the certificate to the Haberle Crystal Springs Brewing company. Several months later he delivered another assignment to the First National Bank of Fulton, both assignments being collateral security for loans.

Recently Kowalski filed a notice of abandonment and on the same day Schilly's petition for the transfer of the certificate to his proposed place of business was also placed on file. County Treasurer Kandt refused to permit the transfer. When State Commissioner of Excise George E. Green was notified of the commencement of the proceeding he became a defendant in the present action.

ALCOHOL AND TOBACCO CAUSE TRUANCY

New York.—One-fourth of the truant schol children of New York are alcohol users. Three-fourths use tobacco.

These are some of the results of examinations just completed by Dr. I. H. Goldberger.

Dr. Goldberger examined eighty truant boys. Of these he found but seven free from physical defects. There were seventy-three with defective teeth, seventeen with defective vision, twenty-one suffering from lack of nutrition, twenty with orthopedic defects and sixty tobacco and nineteen alcoholic cases.

"Beer is the common drink with truant children," said Dr. Goldberger. "Probably because it is the cheapest. Then, too, these boys are always hanging around anxious to run errands. One of the most popular errands is running to the forner for a 'pint.' Not very many are whiskey drinkers, although there are a few. Wine is drunk to celebrate some particular occasion. Twenty-five per cent of these alcoholic cases acknowledged they were accustomed to becoming drunk, but only on the occasion of some celebration."

Dr. Goldberger found high blood pressure combined with low vitality of the truant.

DU PONT CO. LOSES IN PAYROLL FRAUD

Norfolk, Va.—Reports from Hopewell, Va., state that the du Pont Powder company will lose almost $250,000 by the padded pay roll swindle discovered last week.

Employes with the assistance of outsiders, kept the names of discharged employes on the pay roll, it is charged.

Ten persons are implicated and 4 are under arrest. Others will be arrested in New York and Wilmington, Del., the Hopewell authorities say.

The company declines to discuss the affair. Two men, named Hugh and Murphy, held by the Hopewell authorities, are accussed of being the leaders.

NEARING TO SOLDIERS: "DON'T SHOOT BACK"

Philadelphia.—"The soldier who stands up in the trenches and lets the enemy shoot him rather than fire a gun is the real Christian, as typified by the teachings of Christ."

"PROFITABLE STOREKEEPING"

In addressing the small town merchant says among other things:

"The small town merchant should be thankful that he is doing business where the opportunities are great, where the conditions are favorable, where he is something more than a number on a street several miles long.

"The small town merchant is a recognized factor in the community and if he is willing to do his duty by his fellow citizens, he may easily become a recognized power for good.

"He can reach out as far as the arm of Uncle Sam extends for more business.

"He can make his own personality the prime factor in developing more trade and he can be the best known merchant in his section if he will spend a fair share of his receipts for publicity."

Augustus O. Stanley, New Governor of Kentucky.

Augustus Owsley Stanley of Henderson, who has just been elected governor of Kentucky, has had an experience of twelve years as a representative in the United States congress. His plurality over the Republican candidate, Edwin P. Morrow, was very small, and for a time the result was in doubt. The new governor's platform promised better schools, good roads and a revision of the tax system. He takes his seat Dec. 13.

During his career in congress Mr. Stanley came to be recognized as one of the leading members on the Democratic side of the house. He is strong in debate, a finished speaker and always knew his subject to the last detail. For his fight against monopoly Mr. Stanley was sometimes called a "trust buster."

When the United States Steel corporation was investigated several years ago Stanley was chairman of the committee. His speech on the tobacco monopoly is still remembered by members of congress who sat with him at that time.

Governor Stanley is a native of the state of which he has been elected chief executive for the next four years. He was born at Shelbyville forty-eight years ago and was educated at the State college, Lexington, and at Center college, Danville, from which he was graduated in 1889. He entered the practice of law in 1894. Four years later he removed to Henderson, where he has since lived. The Henderson bar was the equal of any outside of Louisville, and young Stanley arrived there with little money and well nigh friendless and unknown. The presiding judge was John L. Dorsey, one of the greatest jurists of his time. In four years Stanley had the most lucrative practice at that bar, and Judge Dorsey resigned from the bench to become his partner. In 1902 he was elected to congress and was regularly elected until last year, when he decided to become a candidate for the governorship.

Maryland's New Governor.

The newly elected governor of Maryland, Emerson C. Harrington, is a Democrat, and he succeeds Philips L. Goldsborough, Republican, who for four years has been the chief executive of the state. The new governor faces a rather peculiar and difficult state of affairs. Owing to a bitterness evolved in the primary election for gubernatorial candidates, the Democratic party was split, and Mr. Harrington won by a much smaller vote than a united Democracy could have given him. Now it is up to the new governor to heal the breach by his appointments.

The office of chief executive carries with it a large amount of patronage. Here, the knowing ones say, he will find it difficult to unite and placate the warring factions.

Governor Harrington is a native of Maryland and was supported in the primaries and the gubernatorial campaigns by United States Senator John Walter Smith. His opponent in the primary election was United States Senator Blair Lee.

SCIENCE—INVENTION.

New Plating Process.

Attention has been attracted to some of the peculiar conditions met in the use of a new plating process, says Popular Mechanics, by which metal is shot in the form of spray from a small gun onto the surface to be coated. It has been noted that, while the temperature at the focus point of the spray sometimes reaches 2,000 degrees F., inflammable materials may nevertheless be placed from three to five inches from the apex of this cone and covered with the metal without being ignited. For instance, it is asserted that the head of a match as well as tissue paper has been treated in this manner without being burned. Silk also has been metal coated and its texture not injured.

Starting In Cold Weather.

To start the engine in cold weather fill an ordinary india rubber hot water bottle and apply it as far round the carburetor as possible, leaving it there for a sufficient period to enable the carburetor itself to draw some heat and thus assist vaporization. Another method is to wrap round the carburetor some absorbent material, such as a large sized lamp wick, which can be carried for the purpose, and to pour over this hot water, repeated application of which will raise the temperature of the carburetor even higher than will be obtained by the usual heating by a branch from the exhaust.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

An Aid to the Motorist.

Although the demountable rim now used on motorcars is split transversely and at first glance the tire would seem to be easily removed, such is not the case, says Popular Mechanics. In fact it is about as difficult to get the tire off the rim as it is to remove it from the old style clincher rim wheel. If the ends of the rim where it is transversely split could be lapped and the rim contracted the tire would fall off of its own accord.

The removing may be easily accomplished by means of a turnbuckle, as shown in the illustration. Two holes must be drilled in the rim, one close to the split and the other about ten inches from it. A turnbuckle twelve inches long can be purchased from any hardware dealer. The ends should be heated and turned at an angle to hold securely in the holes drilled in the rim. It will be found that the stiffest rim may be contracted and the old casing removed with little effort and replaced while the rim is contracted. New tires may be put on the rim in a like manner.

Sacks Made of Paper.

The warp and woof of the fabric of a sack that is now being used to some extent to ship ores from Antofagasta, Chile, are made of strips of paper, doubled or twisted, in combination with a small quantity of some short vegetable fiber. It is stated that these paper sacks will stand hard usage and be available for several shipments before wearing out. Their use is just beginning at Antofagasta.—Commerce Reports.

Babbitt Metal Casting.

In castings of babbitt metal it is often necessary to core out some part, and a good core has been discovered in the employment of a plastic mixture of salt and glue, says the Blacksmith and Wheelwright. A good mixture is made by throwing sufficient salt into the glue to form a stiff paste, which is molded to shape and allowed to harden. The core can be removed from the casting by warming in water.

Tempering a Drill.

A punch or drill may in certain cases require to have a very hard point and a tough shank or shaft. Having hardened the tool by quenching from a cherry red, the tool may be reheated from the shank end to a low temperature, closely watching the color as it approaches the cutting edge. Immediately the point assumes a light yellow quench in oil or water.

Speed Warning Signal.

A Seattle (Wash.) inventor has perfected a bell device for attachment to motorcars that can be set automatically to sound a warning when the vehicle exceeds the limit allowed by law. It is operated by a gear attached to the speedometer sprocket and can be regulated to ring at any speed.—Automobile Dealer.

Production of Coke.

Peat Production.

The annual statement of the geological survey on the production of peat in 1914, now available for distribution by the geological survey, reports the production at 47,093 short tons, having a value of $309,692.

A Tragedy.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

In a public park in Rio de Janeiro a lady handsomely dressed walked alone. The fact of her being unattended caused those who saw her to wonder, for it is not usual for one of the higher class to be out alone. When she deliberately took a seat at one end of a bench, at the other end of which sat a man, the surprise was even greater, for she appeared to be a lady. She had been sitting but a few minutes when two gentlemen walked by.

"Gentlemen," she said, "this man who is sitting near me has insulted me. May I ask you to get his address that my natural protector may demand satisfaction?"

The two men stopped, lifted their hats and offered their services. The accused man denied that he had offended the lady. She begged one of the others to call upon her at her hotel. He did so, sending up his card, bearing the name of Roger Stone, Denver, Colo.

"I am fortunate," she said, "in not only finding a countryman to assist me in this affair, but one from the chivalrous west. I am traveling with my twin brother. He is not with me this evening, but will be in later. Will you be the bearer for him of a challenge under the code for tomorrow morning?"

Mr. Stone's surprise at this singular proceeding was even greater than before. He asked the name of the man for whom he was to bear the challenge and was told that it was Harrison—Frank Harrison. He endeavored to learn something of the manner in which the lady had been ill treated, but she appeared to be so averse to going over the disagreeable details that he did not press the matter. What added to the mystery was that the man who had offended the lady was also an American named Mathews.

The next morning the two parties met on the ground chosen. Mr. Harrison, who was the image of his sister and looked equally feminine, was attended by Mr. Stone, the other principal's second being a Brazilian. His opponent protested against the proceeding, for which he said he was unable to account. He disclaimed any intention of interfering with Miss Harrison, and if he had unwittingly done so he would apologize. The lady's defender refused to accept an apology, and preparations were made for the encounter, which was to be fought with pistols.

When the two principals were placed face to face at thirty paces interval and the signal was about to be given to fire Harrison made a signal for delay. Then, addressing his opponent, he said:

"Jim Mathews, you don't know me, for you have never seen me before. I am not Frank Harrison. I am Eugenia Phillips, widow of the man you ruined and drove to suicide three months after our marriage. I have followed you all the way from Virginia City for the express purpose of killing you. I found you yesterday and took measures for this meeting."

A deathly pallor spread itself over the face of the man addressed. His enemy nodded to the man who was to give the signal. He hesitated. The woman raised her pistol, and her adversary followed her act. A white handkerchief fluttered to the ground. The man's hand trembled; the woman's was steady as a rock. Two shots rang out, and the man fell with a bullet in his heart.

The woman stood for a few moments looking at him who had blighted her life and on whom she had taken revenge, then sank in a swoon.

The finishing of this tragedy, occupying as it did but a minute or two, did not give the seconds any time to prevent it. Indeed, they were paralyzed with surprise. When the woman fell her second ran forward, took her up and bore her to the carriage in which she had come onto the ground. He took her to her hotel and called for a doctor, as she was hysterical.

Meanwhile Mr. Stone busied himself to prevent the affair from getting out, and by pledging the few persons involved to secrecy and bribing the police he succeeded. Had it not been for the burial of the slain man the bribe would not have been necessary.

As soon as the lady was able to travel she sailed for the United States, and on the same steamer was her second in the duel.

From the time of that episode Roger Stone was a changed man. The tragedy at which he had assisted, the wrecking of a woman's life, affected him materially. It's not easy for a man to witness a woman's sufferings without being strongly drawn to her. On reaching the United States Stone and the widow both sought the west, where they lived. Stone visited Mrs. Phillips frequently and in time begged her to permit him to devote the rest of his life to her. Though grateful for his sympathy and the service he had rendered her, she told him that it would not be right for one whose nerves had been shattered to burden one who seemed to have a pleasant career before him. Besides, she had a life on her conscience. To this latter statement he said that if he had had time to gain a correct understanding of the case the life would have been on his conscience instead of hers, but it would not have been a heavy load to bear. By dint of persuasion he finally gained his point. And now the tragedy is in the dim distance, and its keen edge has been worn away.

Winter Hats For The Kiddies

It isn't every little girl who has a father or mother with a Fortunatus purse, who can step into the smartest shop in town and order a bonnet or two to cover her golden curls. But a mother's clever fingers can do quite as much as the magic purse if the mother has good models to copy and the right bits of good material to work with.

One cap that may be made at home is much like a Russian Cossack's. It is developed from white velvet for the top and a wide band of white fur for the rest of the hat. A group of three white velvet gardenias with green satin leaves is the side trimming.

A little hat in Chinese effect showing a cord and tassel may be accomplished from beige velvet for the crown top and puffed section and dark blue for the close fitting band, which should be stiffened with buckram. Blue velvet ribbon is used for the crown top trimming, and dull gold tassels are attached at the ends.

In true poke effect is a fur trimmed bonnet of white corded silk. The fur is white, or beaver bands may be substituted. A raspberry colored flat rosette of velvet ribbon lies at the side of the buckram stiffened brim. A soft shade of raspberry georgette crape lines the poke brim.

A soft, high, accommodating crown marks a hat of two tones of blue velvet. The soft crown and soft shirred brim are of old blue velvet of a light shade, while the brim binding and velvet streamers are of midnight blue ribbon. Dull silver braid forms the three small ornaments at the side.

The ever becoming tam-o'-shanter takes a slightly different tilt in a black velvet hat trimmed solely with two narrow bands of ermine. The band that fits around the head should be stiffened with buckram, while the top is left soft, though cut with a lopsided effect.

Another poke bonnet shows how a bit of brocaded velvet can be put to good use in a child's hat. It is made from old rose velvet with brocading of dull gold. The fur band is skunk. A piece of mother's evening coat would come in very handy just here.

Striped velvet in brown and white makes a fetching little hat when trimmed with two pompons of brown and white. The velvet is gathered under the pompons, as none of the kiddies' hats, like mother's, is covered smoothly this season.

For a very little tot a soft bonnet of white corded silk has a facing ruffle of valenciennes lace. Cords of the silk hold the fullness in place and form the rosette at one side.

A deep white fur band is used with good effect on a bonnet of old blue velvet. A ruffle of the velvet softens the edge. Contrast is gained by the pink taffeta rose which nestles in the fur at the side.

An adorable little bonnet of black velvet shows a chin strap of velvet fastening at each side under tailored bows of ermine. The velvet is picoted on the edge and laid over a foundation bonnet of rows of val edging.

Taffeta and tassels are the main points about a green bonnet which is topped with a green velvet crown. The taffeta is folded about the crown, and two circular picoted ruffles of the taffeta fall softly from this. Green chenille tassels, four of them, dangle at front, back and sides.

A conservative model of white felt might be attempted by the home milliner. The crown is blocked rather high, and two circular brims are attached under a band of beaver fur. Ribbon velvet flowers in shades of rose, old blue, tan and mauve make an odd trimming. A large felt hat might be utilized by cutting off several inches, fitting this as a narrow brim.

Soggy Pie Crusts.

Even though she be an excellent cook nearly every housewife will occasionally have her pies ruined by a soggy bottom crust. To overcome this possibility rub the lower crust with the white of an egg. This prevents the juice from soaking through, leaving the crust crisp and tender.

BOARD OF CITY DEVELOPMENT.

First Municipal Commercial Organization Has Been Started In Amarillo.

Amarillo, Tex., has the distinction of having the first municipal commercial organization, says the Town Development Magazine. A board of city development, the name of the organization, is provided for by the new city charter and at the present taxation and assessed valuation has an annual income of $18,000. The new charter briefly provides, first, for a commission government by three commissioners, elected by the people; second, a city manager, elected by the commission; third, a board of city development, corresponding to a regular commercial organization, composed of fifteen members appointed by the mayor, who is also one of the commissioners. The fifteen directors appoint the secretary. He is a salaried official and not a member of the board.

The organization is supported by a two mill levy on $100 of valuation, which the city government must turn over to the board to be used as it sees fit. Neither the mayor nor the city commission has power of review of any kind over how and in what way the money is spent.

The assessed valuation of Amarillo this year is $9,145,000, netting a fund for the board of city development of slightly over $18,000.

Following its first meeting and organization the new board began its search for a secretary. Out of the 100 applications the board selected Porter A. Whaley, former secretary at Anderson, S. C.

Amarillo is the largest city in northwest Texas, having a population of nearly 20,000 people. The experiment of a community supported commercial organization will be watched with great interest by commercial organization members over the entire country.

City Feeds Farm Soil.

According to the Farm and Fireside, the city of Los Angeles, Cal., gathers up from 150 to 175 tons of garbage a day and converts it into twenty or twenty-five tons of fertilizer. That sells at from $14 to $18 per ton. It goes to the orchards, farms and vegetable gardens of the vicinity.

Experience with the Los Angeles plan is but a duplication of the experience of Toledo, O., and other American cities as well as many in Europe. Proper utilization of garbage represents the opportunity to dispose of the city's wastes without expense and in some cases at a profit to the city, while at the same time the resultant fertilizer goes back to the soil from which it came and to which it ought never be lost.

Nobody need think twice to realize that the incineration or other waste of the useful elements in a great city's garbage is worse than wicked. The land cannot be denuded always of its most valuable constituents and yet go on producing for the increasing millions of population. The modern method of handling fertilizers means economy to the city and also to the country. It represents the city for the first time in the business of feeding the soil.

City Hall Switchboard.

One of the innovations introduced by Fred M. Lockwood, manager of operation under the recent amendments to the charter of the city of San Diego, Cal., has been the installation of a central telephone switchboard in the city hall.

Prior to this installation there had been thirty individual telephones in the various offices, for which the city was paying $5 each per month.

Under the new arrangement six trunk lines are run into the switchboard, the total cost of which is $32.50. There are thirty stations on the switchboard, the cost of which is $1 each per month. There is an operator whose salary is $60 per month. Taking the monthly cost of the thirty stations and the salary of the operator together, the cost is $90 per month as against $150 per month under the old scheme.

Included in the service from the central switchboard are two outside lines, one running to police central station and one to headquarters of the chief of the fire department.

OPEN UP YOUR LIFE.

By cultivating our natural gifts we add to them; by neglect we lose them. Seed that is never put into the soil will never produce a plant. The life that remains closed will never produce a man.

His Maternal Grandma.

A devoted father after a day's absence was met by his two little sons.

"Have you been good boys?"

Silence.

"Have you been good boys?"

"No, papa. I called grandma a bad word," said the five-year-old, turning scarlet.

"Is it possible? What did you call your grandma?"

"I called her a human being."

The father, with a mighty effort, maintained his gravity and closed the scene decorously. "I must forgive you for once, but remember if you ever call your grandmother a human being again I shall have to spank you."—London Telegraph.

A Dress of Two-Fold Purpose.

This design may be used either for a nurse's costume or a morning dress. It is inexpensive and simple to make.

This design may be used as a nurse's costume or a morning frock. It is accompanied by a smart little cap of self-material and, though designed especially for service, has a style that is distinctly pleasing. In linen or percale the dress in medium size requires 6 yards 36-inch material.

Beginning with the waist, form a box-pleat in the right front of the dress, turning under front edge at notches and taking up a tuck on line of double "oo" perforations; stitch both sides of box-pleat ¾ inch from folded edges, catching front edge in with tuck. Center-front indicated by large "O" perforations in right front. Turn under front edge of left front 1¼ inch for a hem. Close shoulder seams as notched and form tuck, creasing on line of slot perforations in front and back; stitch 1½ inch from folded edge. Bring single "T" to corresponding small "o" perforation at lower edge of front and tack. Close under-arm seam as notched. Gather lower edge of front and back between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above lower edge. Adjust stay.

Next, turn under the edges of the front and back gores of the skirt on slot perforations and lap on side gores to small "o" perforations, corresponding notches even; stitch 1 inch from folded edges, leaving edges to left of center-front free above large "O" perforation in front gore for a placket; press pleats and close seams underneath. Close remaining seam as notched. Adjust skirt, stitching upper edge over upper row of gathers in waist, center-fronts and center-backs even. Adjust belt, upper edge along upper edge of skirt.

The sleeves may be made after the waist, if desired. Begin by gathering the sleeve along the edge between double "TT" perforations. Close seams as notched, leaving extensions at dart seam free, and graduate seam into nothing at large "O" perforation. Turn under extension on slot perforations, lap to small "o" perforations, and close with buttons and butonholes. Stitch underfacing to position underneath lower edge of sleeve, notches at lower edges even. Sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforations at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Minus the cap, to avoid the professional appearance of the costume, it could serve for morning wear even in inexpensive woolen materials.

A Subtle Expression of the One Piece Frock.

Dressy in effect, yet simple in design, is this princess costume of mole colored broadcloth trimmed with beaver and having an embroidered self-belt.

This adorable frock of princess design is fashioned of mole colored broadcloth. The skirt and cuffs are trimmed with bands of beaver and the high collar is of the same fur. The frock is self-belted, the ends of the belt being ornamented with embroidered motifs.

The dress is cut in six gores and does not require a lining. It would be equally smart in serge, voile or taffeta trimmed with bands of velvet or satin instead of fur. In medium size the model requires 4½ yards of 54-inch material, with 5 yards of fur for trimming. About ⅜ yard silk will be needed to line the belt.

The material is divided into two parts for cutting. The first section is folded in half and the second in quarters, with the selvages meeting, as shown in the cutting guide. On the first half the side front section is placed first, and, although it rests along the fold of the cloth, it is cut on a lengthwise thread. If desired there may be an applied back; this is particularly useful for winter wear and, if used, should be laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods.

The back is laid opposite the side front, and about this are placed the shield and belt; to the right of it are placed the collar and cuff.

On the quarter fold of the goods the front is laid, with the collar to the right. Opposite these are the sleeves, with the back gore to the right of sleeve. After all of the sections are laid on the cloth it will be seen that the space has been covered to the best possible advantage. The smaller pieces may be used for buttons, if desired.

If carried out in taffeta the applied back would be effective in serge or cloth, as these materials are combined very effectively this season.

A CHRISTMAS HINT.

Helpful Suggestions About Choosing a Plant For Your Friend.

The idea of sending plants to one's friends is not a new one, but it ought to be more popular than it is. They are not so expensive as many other things that we give, and they bring pleasure daily for weeks. A good plan is to send the plant to the family as a whole when you do not care to make a present to each individual member.

It is better to choose a plant that is peculiarly appropriate to Christmas rather than the sort that fits in just as well any time of year. The best ones to send are familiar to most of us.

English holly can be found at any florist's and is a very handsome and charming plant. Its only disadvantage is that it is likely to drop its leaves and berries in a few days unless properly cared for. It should be kept in a cool, damp place until a day or two before Christmas, when it may be brought out to decorate the house.

The Jerusalem cherry is the cheapest of Christmas plants and not at all spoiled by the fact that it is rather common. We all know its gay red berries and symmetrical form. It needs a warm room, but must not be kept where coal gas can reach it or it will drop both leaves and berries.

Growing peppers make a delightfully gay note in the house at Christmas. In some the peppers are long and narrow, while others show fruit like tiny scarlet tomatoes. These like a warm room, too, but gas will ruin them.

Poinsettia is the most effective and gorgeous plant we can buy and also is quite easy to care for. These facts account perhaps for its popularity. It must not be kept too damp and needs a warm room for its abiding place.

SASSY SAUCES.

CRUSHED FRUIT SAUCE.—Cream together two tablespoonfuls of butter and one cupful of powdered sugar; put the mixture over the fire and stir until it boils, adding to it at this stage a teaspoonful of arrowroot wet to a paste in cold water. Cook two minutes longer and stir in a cupful of any kind of crushed or chopped fresh fruit. Leave the sauce on the fire just long enough to become heated through and serve.

Fruit Juice Pudding Sauce.—Squeeze the juice from any kind of fruit and set it aside. Cream a tablespoonful of butter and a cupful of sugar together until they are creamy, beat in the fruit juice and set on ice until needed.

Egg Sauce.—Make a pint of white sauce; have ready a hard boiled egg chopped fine, stir it into the sauce; season to taste with salt and pepper. Good for baked, boiled or broiled fish.

Onion or Soubise Sauce.—To half a pint of white sauce add two medium sliced onions which have been boiled soft and then chopped. Stir well, add salt and pepper to taste.

Tomato Sauce.—Drain half a pint of the liquor from stewed tomatoes, either canned or fresh; put it over the fire with a slice of onion and simmer fifteen minutes; take out the onion and pour the liquor upon a tablespoonful each of butter and flour which have been cooked together until they bubble. Stir to smooth thickness, season with salt and pepper and serve. This is good to pour over poached or hard boiled and chopped eggs, to serve with fish, veal, lamb, mutton or hamburg steak.

Brown Sauce.—Cook together a tablespoonful each of butter and of browned flour, letting them cook until the color begins to darken; pour upon them half a pint of clear beef stock or consomme. Stir until thick, and if a darker tint is required add a few drops of caramel or of kitchen bouquet, as well as salt and pepper.

Jelly Sauce For Pudding.—Heat together in a saucepan a large tablespoonful of butter, half a glassful of currant or other tart jelly and a tablespoonful of sugar and stir until dissolved and blended. When smooth put in a saltspoonful of cornstarch moistened to a paste with the juice of a lemon. Cook for two minutes and keep hot over boiling water until needed. If wine is used put in a gill of sherry just before serving.

SING SING IN ANOTHER ASPECT

Saturday's New York Sun speaks editorially of Thomas Mott Osborne's administration at Sing Sing as follows:

Warden Osborne's experiment in prison management at Sing Sing, undertaken under the most discouraging circumstances and conducted in a building unfit for human habitation, has received at least as much attention in its more picturespue aspacts as it deserves. Self government. entertainment and congenial employment for convicts, with the consequent inevitable disputes, have obscured other details of the new management that are of equal importance to the reform which penologists hope may be achieved, and the personal weaknesses of convicts have been exploited with an enthusiasm that would indicate a previous childlike faith in the superior virtue of all who undergo penal sentence.

In his address at Cooper Union on Tuesday evening Mr. Osborne spoke of another part of his task, and in two sentences supplied material eminently worthy of consideration:

"The people behind the proceedings at White Plains know that I don't stand for graft.

"They know that I don't allow high charges for raw material, fancy prices for supplies and guess weight for coal deliveries."

Mr. Osborne might have added with exact truthfulnes that the persons to whom he gave credit for knowledge of his enforcement of contract specifications were fully aware of serious abuses in the past in provisioning and maintaining Sing Sing, from which various citizens of Westchester, among others, profited. The changed conditions which were designated to better the state of the inmates werel ikewise intended to cut off the miserable thievery that fed putrid meat to them, swindled the taxpayers in quantity and quality of coal delivered, and substituted faulty construction and poor material where first class workmanship and goods were paid for.

The state has for years been robbed in the business administration of Sing Sing until the institution has come to be regarded as a legitimate source of income for crooked contractors and petty politicians. When the lucrative practices that had long existed were disturbed by Mr. Osborne, their beneficiaries roared with anguish. Nor were they content with mere complaints; not a few of the exaggerated and false reports that have been circulated have originated with them, and the evidences of their attempt to discredit the present methods in Sing Sing have been obvious.

Mr. Osborne has erred in certain applications of his theories. He has not always exhibited that acuteness of judgment which a superwarden would show. But he has made a definite, intelligent attempt to cure the brazen abuses and ghastly defects of a prison which only abandonment can render tolerable, and he deserves support in a much greater degree than do the sinister influences that seek to destroy his whole experiment.

ANIMALS TRESPASS TODAY AS IN YEARS GONE BY

After spending fifty years [illegible] a locomotive, twenty years of which were in the service of the Buffalo, Rochester, & Pittsburgh railway as engineer, George H. Hitchcock was retired under the pension rules of this company, he having reached the age limit. Mr. Hitchcock has seen wonderful changes brought about in the operation of railroads since the days when, just at the close of the war, he first began work firing a "wood burner." There are some things however, which Mr. Hitchcock says are little changed. The "Safety First" movement, which has given to such wonderful proportions in the last few years, had no counterpart in the old days, but says Mr. Hitchcock, the problem of cattle trespassing on the tracks is just about as great today as it was then.

To show that the railroads back in '76 had their troubles along this line and that they appreciated that care on the part of an employee which would enable them to avoid killing stock, Mr. Hitchcock refers, with much pride, to a letter received early in 1876 from the President of the Evansville, Terre Haute & Chicago Railway, enclosing a $20 gold piece, presented as a token of their esteem of his faithful discharge of every duty and careful manner of running, which had seved the company much expense in the killing of stock.

EPISCOPALIANS WOULD STIR CHURCH ACTIVITY

Syracuse.—The campaign to arouse the members of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States to greater spiritual activity was begun in Syracuse yesterday, the first Sunday of Advent, when Rev. Dr. Richard H. Gesner of Christ church, Oswego, spoke to a large congregation at St. Pauls church.

Them ission will continue through Lent. Each Episcopal church in the city will have visiting clergymen from time to time and some of the churches are planning for [illegible] to last two or more weeks with a missionary having charge.

Dr. Gesner was heard yesterday morning by a congregation that filled St. Pauls. He preached a forceful sermon on the importance of advancing the kingdom and the powed of redemption. His sermon was based on these words from the Epistle of Paul to the Galations: "Are ye so foolish? Having begun in the spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?

Dr. Gesner referred to the present revival in Syracuse without any mention of names.

"The way of the preacher who is conducting meetings in your city at this time may not be our way," he said, "but we must remember that God never allows His work to be limited. The sincere person who is striving to advance the kingdom of God is a power of [illegible] infinite value [illegible]."

vital importance to Italy, which when the object there is attained would send armies to join the Russians and Franco-British forces in the tremendous struggle which all military experts agree will take place in Thrace before the winter is over.

While this news is encouraging, despatches from Athens indicate that the Serbian army, which has been fighting in the depths of winter against odds of five to one, with short munitions, is nearing the end of its resistance. This is why the Entente Powers are insisting on all the concessions demanded from Greece, and, though the despatches from Athens still are pessimistic in tone, there is an undercurrent of feeling that despite the Kaiser's threats, King Constantine, realizing that defiance of France and Britain will mean the end of his dynasty and making a virtue of necessity, will concede everything.

A despatch to the Daily Mail from Salonica states that Germany's announcement hat the Serbian army is beaten and the campaign against the Serbs closed masks a decision of the Austro-German-Turkish council to meet the menace of the great Russian army which is massed along the Roumanian frontier by the abandonment of the Serbian campaign, while two-thirds of the Serbian army, which, though retreating, still is effective, seems to spell failure for the grandiose campaign, which was to end with the little land desolated and the Kaiser and his victorious legions in Constantinople. The steadily growing Franco-British forces in Serbia are a profitable factor in forcing the decision to abandon the pursuit of the Serbians the latest report being that German cavalry is within twenty miles of the French lines.

ITALIANS ENTER GORIZIA, "PORT ARTHUR OF EUROPE"

Geneva, via Paris.—Reports received from Chiasso, on the Swiss-Italian border, say that Gorizia has fallen, the Italians having entered the town from then orth. There is no official confirmation of the reports.

Capture of the powerful stronghold of Gorizia was the first great objective of the Italian campaign. For six months it has been bombarded from then orth, west and south.

Thef ortress has been called the Port Arthur of Europe and the Italian artillery and infantry have rivalled the energy and spirit of sacrifice of the Japanese troops in their approach work for the purpose of bringing them ighty fortress into subjection.

The magnitude of the task was realized from the beginning of the war by Count Cardorna, the Italian generalissimo, and the statement was attributed to him that it would require five months to reduce the fortress. The Italian campaign was opened on May 25.

Gorizia is the ke yto Trieste and the Istrian peninsula, the eastern region of the so-called "unredeemed" Italian provinces. That region comprises one of the most precious elements of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, its principal seaports, arsenals, and commercial outlets.

Nature and artifice made of Gorizia a stronghold of extraordinary strength. Beyond the Isonzo River, which flows some ten miles distant from the Italian boundary, is a precipitous mountain wall, at the south of which lies Gorizia, located in the hollow of an amphitheatre of hills, fortified by the Austrians with all the art of modern engineering.

It had been considered ap ractically impregnable position. Its chief defences to the south were on the great Carso plateau, while to the north the mountain walls runs nearly twenty miles to the strongly defended fortress of Tolmino.

With Gorizia intact Trieste and Istria were safe from the Italian forces. The capture of the fortress lays the road open to the occupation of Trieste, twenty-two miles to the southeast.

It was doubtful whether the Italians would direct their main efforts to the capture of Tolmino, which serves as a base for Gorizia, or of Gorizia itself. It, however, soon became clear that General Cadorna, the Italian generalissimo, instead of proceeding to the gradual investment of Gorizia had decided to make a direct assault on it. Having taken the fortified town of Plava, which lies to the north, he moved an attacking army southward from there and attacked the exceedingly powerful defensive works which the Austrians had constructed on the mountains which dominate the fortress from both sides of the river.

CO-RECEIVER NAMED FOR EMPIRE UNITED CO.

Syracuse.—C. Loomis Allen was appointed co-receiver of the Empire United Railways, Inc., by Justice W. S. Andrews of the Supreme Court, Saturday, to act with former Senator Hendrick S. Holden, a director of the corporation, who was named receiver on petition of the Board of Directors November 1.

Mr. Allen probably will have charge of the operation of the Empire United properties—the Rochester, Syracuse & Eastern, the Syracuse, Lakeshore & Northern and the Auburn & Northern railways, According to the understanding in court Saturday, the receivers will give a bond in the sum of $100,000.

There was no objection to the appointment of Mr. Allen, representatives of the interested parties having agreed to his selection prior to appearing before Justice Andrews. William Nottingham appeared for the Empire United directors, Alexandre H. Cowles for the Bondholders Protective Committee, Edmund Lewis for the attorney-general of the state, and Edgar F. Brown for Mary E. Jenkins, a bondholder.

Mr. Cowle stated that approximately $2,000,000 of the Rochester, Syracuse & Eastern first mortgage 5 per cent. gold bonds had so far been deposited with the Bondholders Protective Committee, of which Arthur W. Loasby is chairman. He said that the committee expected to have more than one-half the entire issue of nearly $5,000,000 within the next few days.

THE QUIRK TODAY, MISS HEDMAN IN "THE CUB"

The World Film Corporation presents the Wm. A. Brady photoplay, "The Cub", founded on the well known stage success of the same name by Thompson Buchanan: The story relates how, in the mountains of Kentucky, even today, civilization is conspicuous by its absence. The law is often taken in hand by individuals having differences of opinion. The White-Renlow feud started over a little matter. A pig belonging to the Renlows is found by Bill White eating his turnips. He makes complaint to Jim Renlow, and an angry discussion arises. White is further incensed by the fact that he sees Tilden White making love to Alice Renlow, Jim's pretty daughter, who is the community's school teacher. He leaves in anger, and on his way home sees Peggy White talking to young Renlow. White follows young Renlow and shoots him. The feud is under way, and a White will shoot a Renlow on sight, and vice versa.

News of this trouble reaches Louisville, and the editor of a paper there sees a chance for a good story. The star reporter is ill, so that the editor sends a "Cub" into the mountains. Thus it happened that Steve Oldham had his adventure.

British and German Hold Conferences to Decide New Moves

London.—All Britain is anxiously waiting for some sign that will show which way the campaign in the Balkans is to turn. Two phases of yesterday's news, it is believed, will have an important effect on the developments of the near future—the Kaiser's trip to Vienna to call on the aged Emperor Francis Joseph and Lord Kitchener's return from the Mediterranean and his conference in Paris.

Lord Kitchener, it may be assumed, will discuss with the French authorities his observations at Gallipoli and along the Vardar River front in Serbia, as well as his conversations with King Victor Emmanuel and General Cadorna on the Italian front. The Kaiser will discuss with Austrian generals the next move of the Central Powers.

Presumably it is a question whether the Teutonic allies will attack the Anglo-French forces in Southern Serbia or concentrate in Western Bulgarian to meet the treat of a Russian invasion from the east and the possbility of Roumania taking sides against her old enemies, Bulgaria and Turkey.

So far as Serbia is concerned winter appears virtually to have put an end to any important movements, although the Austrians are proceeding to deal with the Montenegrins, whose frontier they have crossed, while the Bulgarians are attempting to advance to Prisrend and Monastir.

With heavy and continuous snowstorms reaching the proportions of a [illegible], these operations must be slow, especially as the Serbians and Montenegrins are still offering stubborn resistance. Monastir, it is admitted, cannot be saved, but the Serbians who the defending the city are determined to resist to the last and give to the civilians a chance to escape. They hold a front some five miles from the town in the drection of Prilep, from whicvh point the Bulgarians who have crossed the Carossou River, are advancing.

Snow has completely stopped operations on the Anglo-French front in Serbia, the opposing forces, who are separately by a valley a mile across, having lost sight of each other.

There are no details of the Greek reply to the collective note of the Entente Powers demanding fwacilities for the Anglo-French forces, but a despatch from Athens says it is couched in friendlly terms and is regarded as paving the way for the desired settlement which would enable Greece to maintain her neutrality and not interfere with the intentions of the Allies.

BRITISH RETIRE FROM POSITIONS NEAR BAGDAD

London.—The British victory over the Turks at Ctesiphon, near Bagdad, as reported last week, has not, as many persons believed, sealed the fate of Bagdad. An official report issued to-night says that, having successfully completed the removal of his wounded and prisoners. General Townshend, the British commander, in the face of the arrival of Turkish reinforcements, again has withdrawn his force to a position lower down the river. An official statement issued last night reads:

"The enemy's strength at the battle of Ctesiphon is estimated at four divisions. One of these is stated by prisoners to have been practically wiped out. This is confirmed by our own observations, but the approach of Turkish reinforcements is reported.

"General Townshend, having successfully completed the removal of his wounded and prisoners, has withdrawn his force to a position lower down the river."

While this will prove a disappointment to the layman, those who know the country through which the British have forced their way are not surprised that every precaution s beng taken to prevent a reverse, or even a check, n the march up Mesopotamia.

The country is very inhospitable, and, especially at this time of the year, it is necessary that the army should keep near the river, where there a plentiful supply of water and where it can be reprovisioned and supplied with munitions and guns by the heterogenous fleet which accompanies it.

The defeat inflicted on the Turks previously appears, from all accounts, to have been a serious one, of the four Turkish divisions engaged in the fighting one having virtually been wiped out. General ToHwnshend, according to the first account of the battle, commanded but one British division, but he probably will be better supplied withg uns than his opponents as long as he keeps near the river and has the assistance of armed steamboats and tugs which have been converted into floating forts. It is expected that he is receiving reinforcements which will enable him soon to resume his advance on Bagdad.

OSWEGO COUNTY'S FINEST APPLES MAKE CHEAP THE WESTERN VARIETIES

The fourth annual corn and fruit show was this morning receiving the finishing touches at the rooms occupied in the Lewis block. Some of the most beautiful specimens of Oswego county apples were being arranged for display by Dr. F. E. Fox. These included handsome samples of Spies, Mackintosh, Bellflower, Tallman Sweets, Russets, Ben Davis and other well known varieties gathered from the Fox-Morton orchards. Mr. William C. Hubbard was also arranging an exhibit of apples from his orchard, and which included the well known varieties mentioned above.

The ruby, green, yellow and russett beauties reposing on the plates show to what height of perfection this product of the orchard can be raised. Spraying, grafting and cultivation of theg round in the orchard all serves to bring about the realization of the apple. While climatic conditions, soil, etc., enter into the problem, yet growers all unite in seeking greater knowledge in the cultivation itself. The Western apple, most persons are aware, in points of beauty, as to size and coloring, are equal if not superior to the Eastern apple. Yet, one who has once eaten an Oswego county apple and then bitten into one of the deceptive Western beauties finds the difference at once. The skin is [illegible], the texture of the [illegible] and spongy, and as for flavor, that is a missing quality.

All who are interested in the apple culture, or who wish to learn what this product means to Oswego county, let him attend the fair where admission is free. Every child in the schools shoiild see this exhibit. It is educational, to say the least. This morning Supt. C. I, Kingsbury, who is in charge of the fair said, "I wish the children would come to this fair, and I cannot understand why they do not. These rooms should be filled with children asking questions." Perhaps if grown persons exhibited more interest in affairs of this kind the children would be bound to do so. While there is no way to force people to a community to be interested in vital topics, yet the little fellows' who raised the corn in their proud enthusiastic way will grow to man's estate and remember a city as being interested or not in his undertakings. Some people believe the root to make "Fulton Grow" lies in the rural districts, and perhaps springs from the very corn hills that the little shavers cultivated so carefully last summer. Some people think we all ought to show an interest in the corn and fruit show.

The Corn Show held in conjunction with the exhibit of fruit, takes the place of poultry, vegetable and pet stock departments which must be omitted from the regular Oswego County Fair because of the immaturity of such products at that season of the year.

P. A. DeLancey of Scriba, Master of Domestic Grange, No. 98, is in charge of the Corn Show. One splendid feature of the show this year is thel arge number of entries from youthful farmers, for which Warren S. Gardner, District Superintendent of Schools, is responsible. The children's entries form more than a half of the entire corn exhibit.

Several large entries of poultry are of interest from the fact that there are a number of birds which have taken first and second prizes at the 1915 State Fair. Pitt F. Nutting, manager of the Wallzoo Poultry Yards at Woodville, N. Y., has a number of prize birds entered which drew bluer ibbon prizes at the State Fair.

Newton Ward, of Granby Center, s another large exhibitor of poultry.

WOODMAN TO ELECT THER NEW OFFICERS

Some lively, anxious moments are in store for the various candidates for offices in the lodge of Modern Woodmen of America, when that body meets in East 1st st., tomorrow night. A lot of good-natured rivalry exists among the candidates who want to serve the lodge and each man plans to enter the lists determined to give his adversary a run for his money.

The evening will be known in lodge circles as "get-acquainted" night so designated that the membership may be able to shake hands with each other. This is made necessary by reason of the large acquisitions during the year to the membership of the local lodge.

At the conclusion of the regular meeting "Young" Green will don the mitts for a fast go with a Syracuse youth.

WEATHER FORECAST

Cloudy tonight and Wednesday; probably snow flurries.

One Man Killed; Two Have Narrow Escape as Walls Crumble

One member of the city's fire department killed, perhaps instantly, and the narrow escape of two others, is the record today of a fire which was discovered at an early hour this morning. Leon J. Hammond, 37, a call member of the department, was the unfortunate one who risked his life to save property.

The fire was discovered about 12:45 by several men walking in East 1st st. They saw the flames which had gained headway before the arrival of the fire apparatus and on account of the high wind which was blowing at the time, the firemen were kept busy preventing the flames from reaching buildings, especially the D. L. & W. freight house. A number of bales of rags on the platform at the freighthouse caught fire, but the flames were soon extinguished.

Hammond was caught under falling concrete blocks when the south wall of the storehouse gave way and he was buried in the mass. When taken from the ruins a short time after, he was breathing slightly but upon the arrival of Doctors Joy and Fox, he was pronounced dead.

Just before the wall collapsed, Hammond and another call man, Frank Quirk, in company with Fireman Barto, a regular fireman, were stationed in the doorway of the south side of the burning building. Hearing the wall above their heads crack, each man made an attempt to escape from the impending danger. Barto ran inside the building, Quirk ran out and to the east, while Hammond started west. Hammond was caught in the crash and about five or six tons of concrete blocks fell on his body, completely crushing it.

[illegible] by Assistant Chief Rude to extricate the body from the ruins. These two firemen at the time the south wall gave in were working on the east side of the building and less than a minute after they had left their positions and begun to dig for the body of Hammond, the wall near which they had been standing toppled in, and the two men as a result of the Chief's summons escaped the fate of their comrade.

Hammond was found face down in the ruins and was taken out and laid on the grass. It was thought then that he was still alive, although no action of the heart was perceptible.

The body was taken to the undertaking rooms of Young & Hill at the direction of Ephraim LaPine, of W. Broadway, the dead man's father-in-law.

Leon J. Hammond was an employee at the gun works and he has been a call man on the Fire department for a period of about five years. He was a member of the Holy Name Society and of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. He was married and had one son, The family lived at 11 N. 3rd street, about a block distant from the scene of the fire. Besides his wife, he is survived by a son, Cyrill, and his mother who resides in Baldwinsville.

The storehouse is today a mass of ruins and on account of the nature of the contents—bales of paper, Assistant Chief Rude said at noon today that it will be necessary to keep his men on the scene until nightfall or until every vestige of fire has disappeared, No estimate of the damage could be given by the owner, but the loss is partly covered by insurance.

The flames were under full headway at least fifteen minutes before an alarm was sent in according to the statement of several men. These men were walking east over the upper bridge when their attention was called to the flames which were rising high in the air. The men made their way down East 1st st., at a normal pace and just before reaching the Elks' home they met men coming from that place. They all ran to the fire house and sent in an alarm from the box in front of the station.

When the apparatus arrived on the scene and the nature of the contents of the burning building was noted, the firemen's attention was given to preventing a spread of the fire. In about an hour the flames were under control.

HIDDEN MONEY GAVE FRENCHMAN FREEDOM

New York—The Rochambeau, of the French line, which steamed from Bordeaux on November 20, reached port yesterday morning. She carried 293 passengers and a stowaway. Among the passengers was Nathan Feinmann, a French subject, who at the beginning of the war was proprietor of a restaurant at Prague. He was arrested and placed in a castle at Theresienstadt, where he remained for six months.

Before his arest Mr. Feinmann had secreted $[illegible] in one of his shoes. At the castle he became friendly with a Czech guard whose sympathy seemed to be with France. To him Mr. Feinmann gave half the money and was allowed to escape. He made his way through Switzerland into France, where he entered the army, serving in Belgium and Alsace with the Twenty-second Alpine Chasseurs. He was badly wounded in the head by shrapnel and after a time in a hospitall received a leave of absence to come here and see his mother in Philadelphia. As a result of the wound he is suffering from paralysis of the eyelids, but owing to the fact that he will soon return to France, he was allowed to enter by the immigration authorities.

"THE SONG OF HATE" AT THE QUIRK TODAY

Flora La Hosca (Betty Nansen), is a celebrated opera singer. Two men are rivals for her love. Thef avored one, Mario de Campo, a young artist, incurs by his success the savage hatred of Baron Scarpia, prefect of police. Inspired by his hatred, Scrapia causes the arrest of Mario on a trumped-up charge, and as the price for his freedom, demands that La Tosca give herself to him. The Singer's love is all powerful and she consents to the debasing proposal. Scrapia comes to claim his promise. Tosca is desperate. At the last moment, revolting from the horrible bargain she has made ,she seizes a knife and stabs her false suitor to the heart. Tosca's realization of what she has done and the consequences which ensue lead "The Song of Hate" to a terrific climax, in which Miss Nansen's superb art and wonderful command of dramatic emotion rise to heights never before attained.

AEROPLANE READY FOR SERBIAN KING'S ESCAPE

Berlin (via Sayville).—"King Peter of Serbia and his government may try to escape in aeroplanes," says a special telegram to the Frankfurter Zeitung. "Eight aeroplanes have been sent to Serbian headquarters for this purpose."

The telegram adds that Lord Kitchener abandoned his intention of visiting King Peter because he feared he might be cut off, together, with the Serbian army.

PUBLICITY AS A BUSINESS

In yesterday's Times the Rev. Dr. Richards of Auburn was quoted on the value of advertising. One of the Auburn papers, The Advertiser-Journal, comments upon the doctor's remarks, the substance of the expression being applicable as well to the papers of this city in their relations to the public.

The Advertiser-Journal says:

"In an article on the value of advertising, which is well worth careful reading, Rev. Dr. Charles Gorman Richards makes generous acknowledgement of the co-operation of the local press with regard to free publicity for religious activities and the affairs of benevolent organizations generally. It is a fact that the Auburn papers have always been exceptionally liberal in this regard, although their editors have been far too modest to say so. They have given far more space to such matters than the average dailies of the smaller cities, and far more as compared to population, relative importance and news value than the papers of the larger cities. Elsewhere a great deal of information, printed gratis here, is subject to fees, of varying proportions.

"Business managers of newspapers are far less squeamish than mere editors in discussing such matters among themselves. They point out that among notices that should properly be paid for are stated announcements of births, marriages and deaths, all resolutions, all notices of lodge meetings or of stated assemblages of any and all organizations whatsoever. The business managers maintain that such announcements are not news, but the legitimate utilization of publicity as a business. A story is told among them to illustrate the point: At birth the doctor is paid, and so is the minister who christens, but the editor is not; at marriage the clergyman, caterer and others receive their fees, the editor receives none; at sickness and death the doctor, the undertaker and the preacher are feed, the editor is still feeless.

"Yet newspaper publishing is a business, and publishers must live, usually must pay salaries and sometimes are even required to pay dividends on capital invested. How they do it in the face of the persistent search for free publicity is a trick known only to themselves. The only commodities they have to sell are space and white paper with characters imprinted thereon in ink, purchased by the barrel. The efforts to reduce the incomes of publishers are such that oftentimes their stock in trade is deadheaded. A merchant doing business on the same basis would go into bankruptcy; a subscriber who donated his labor or let his capital without interest would share the same fate.

"The Auburn papers will go right on, because it is the custom, giving their space to worthy causes, deadheading more or less of their output, printing a great deal that strictly speaking is not news and that is subject to charge elsewhere. But an admonition occasionally, such as Doctor Richards suggests, is surely not amiss, as a reminder that there is such a thing as riding a free horse to death, and as increasing a just gratitude to those who do something for nothing, merely for the work's sake."

INEFFICIENCY OF AMERICAN SCHOOLS

What ex-President Taft had to say at the state teachers' convention about the defects of the American system of education is all perfectly true. It is "frequently inefficient and superficial," it is less thorough than the European system and there is "a certain degree of flabbiness" in American school discipline. In alleging that "the German youth of fifteen is as well prepared to enter a college course as our boys of eighteen and nineteen," Mr. Taft probably does not overemphasize the contrast in results between the different educational methods of Europe and this country.

But how is it going to improve conditions to subject the schools to federal supervision, as he suggests, through a series of tests and investigations by the United States Bureau of Education? There is no reason to suppose that a federal bureau possesses any superior knowledge of the shortcomings of American education or has ready a remedy for them that cannot just as well be applied locally. As a matter of fact, the American system of education was in many respects at its best when it was most completely localized, when its nucleus was the little red schoolhouse.

The faults of the American school system are mainly faults of the American character, and to correct them will necessitate something more than ac hange of externals. Investgations by federal educational officers would doubtless have the effect of showing how grave the defects are. But to secure a Prussian thoroughness of method in American schools will require an alteration of ideals on the part of both teacher and pupil which must come mainly from within.—N. Y. World.

MEN AND THINGS

The Chicago Herald claims there is one trouble with that city. It says there are too many respectable citizens who can write "ex-convict" before their names.

To watch a man fight against odds, to see him struggle with adversity, is a sight that inspires. But to see another man step up and help this fellow up the hill, is one of the things that make us want to live.

One man in an organization that is run on clockwork observed the eight-hour rule so close that he jumped off a steel structure to get his dinner pail at noon. I had one girl in my office that always had her hatpins ready at eleven-fifty-nine.

There are baptized Chrstians that teach a Bible class on Sunday and then stray about the town weekdays looking up widows and orphans to fleece.—The Silent Partner.

Opinions

A FAMILY FISH POND

An acre of water is capable of producing more food in a year than an acre of land. Water is very productive, when handled right, and one of the ways to make it produce is to have a fish pond. This is one of the suggestions which departments of agriculture make occasionally, and they are mentioning it more frequently than they used to. The State College of Agriculture has just issued a leaflet which tells something about fish ponds and fish as food.

hTe largest fish-producing streams, of course, have been turned into sewers, others have been dried up, while still others have been stripped of their fish. In other words, there has been little conservation of the fish resources of the country.

A partial remedy for mishandling is in the construction of fish ponds, and the college of agriculture invites the attention of farmers to the possibility of constructing such ponds.

There are some things to be considered before a pond is built. Of course, all farmers can not build ponds, and those who can may not be able to raise the kind of fish they would prefer. Thus, if one would raise brook trout, lake trout, or white fish, the water must have a temperature of less than 70 degrees. The warm water fish include perch, black bass, sun fish, rock blass, bullheads, etc. Thea verage fish requires three summers before it is large enough to be taken, but perch and black bass may be taken the second sumer.

A trouble with the fish pond is that it is held by the neighborhood with less respect than an orchard with lucious fruit. A fish pond is regarded as common property, and, if folks can't fish in it in the day time, they fish there at night. If there should be a development of the private fish industry ,however, it is probable that the fish would not be stolen any more than the farmers' apples, corn and chickens.

There are many lakes and streams in and about the Adirondacks region which would make ideal places for the cultivation of fish. To raise trout however, requires an understanding of the business, like any branch of farming, and perhaps a little more knowledge than in some branches. Still, af amily fish pond could be maintained with less trouble and expense than a family orchard, and under right conditions, give as much satisfaction.—Utica Observer.

NO DEMOCRATIC PRAYERS FOR HUGHES

The Hughes candidacy will not down. It is gaining a vigor. When Charles E. Hughes was governor of New York he set forth his position that while he was not a candidate for president he would take no action to stop conventions from instructing delegates for him, inasmuch as he believed that candidates should not be self-constituted. The situation is altered somewhat today in that he is a member of the supreme court, yet the people are insisting that this is no barrier, and that the logic which prevailed in 1908 should prevail in 1916.

That last resort of political information and news the New York Sun, prints two columns of dispatches from various states in which the sentiment as to president is set forth. Almost without exception the sentiment is recorded as being for Charles E. Hughes. The Sun intimates that the draft has already started its course, and that Justice Hughes must submit.

The papers that are saying, "Why, of course, of course; he is on the bench and cannot be a candidate," are the democratic publications. It is the only position they can take. They choke up when they think of Hughes running for the presidency, and their eyes fill when they see public sentiment crystalizing into an insistence that he run in spite of his desires.

Naturally the democrats don't want him in the field. They are praying for a weaker man. It recalls the expression of young Archie Roosevelt in the pre-convention days of 1912. A newspaper man asked him how his father felt about the possibilities in the democratic contest for the nomination. "Pa admits it looks like Wilson, but he's praying for Champ Clark," was his reply.

Democrats today admit that there are indications of the serious drift towards Hughes, but they are praying for some less formidable man for a Boies ePnrose, for example.—Watertown Times.

PRODUCES RESULTS

The churchman who criticises Billy Sunday lacks a sense of proportion. Worshipping in his own way, according to his tastes as well as his conscience he fails to give the other man the same liberty. Billy Sunday doesn't appear as a scholar, a theologian, an advocate of the higher criticism nor as the erudite and profound creator of a new thought in religion. He does not pretend to stir the mentality of the school of intellectual Christianity. though his effect upon university students is as marked as upon the throngs of plain people who go hours ahead of the time of services to get seats. It is gratuitous to analyze success. No man in his own line is more successful than is Billy Sunday in his calling. Statesmen, politicians, judges, clergymen, publicists, actors and orators attempt to touch the minds and hearts of men. Not one in this generation compares with Billy Sunday. Concede he is grotesque, admit every complaint and yet the fact remains that in audiences of 10,000 to 15,000 of nearer average mentality and morals than audiences of like number assembled for any other purpose, this man absolutel ynever fails to carry conviction and to win.

It is said that there will be many backsliders among his converts. Of course. There are backsliders among those converted by the clergymen of dignified rubric and ceremony. There are backsliders among the high authorities of the churches which scoff at Billy Sunday. But the average is all in Sunday's favor. He leaves a city much better than when he entered it. He gives the poor and th plain people a new grip on life. He lifts up thed iscouraged, renews the faith of the faltering and strange as it may seem to critics he wins to Christ the great and mighty in business and in the professions in every community. To be sure he gets the emotional to hit the trail, but one misses the point if he fails to see that hard heads figure in every trail procession.

The Sunday method isn't the only one which is right. It need not be the best or the one most preferred. It is, however, effective, remarkably so, and those who object to it arem ore godly when they judge by achievement, by results, rather than aestheticism.—Watertown Standard.

The Change of a Name.

How family names change in the course of many years is illustrated by the conversion of "Botevile" into "Thynne." An English deed bearing date in the closing days of the fifteenth century shows three brothers then flourishing—John Botevile of Botevile and Thomas and William Botevile. The trio are distinguished from all other Boteviles by the explanation "of the Inne," or family residence, the title to which had come to their joint possession. John's grandson was known as Ralph Botevile of the Inne, from which the transition to Ralph Thynne is easy. His descendants have been Thynnes ever since.

BOY, FIVE, CROSSES CONTINENT ALONE

Tagged, He Travels Only in Care of Trainmen.

Hartford, Conn.—After a four day trip of 3,000 miles from Los Angeles to this city, traveling alone in the care of conductors and porters, five-year-old Elmer Gardiner, Jr., arrived here recently and has been busy holding receptions and telling his story at the home of his grandmother, Mrs. Henry Ammann.

The boy's father left his home in Los Angeles early in the summer to investigate a new venture in the east, planning to send for his wife and son later should he decide to live permanently in Connecticut. In his absence his wife died, leaving the little boy alone. The boy's father telegraphed $150 to a Los Angeles lawyer, intending that this should be used for Elmer's maintenance until it should be decided whether or not the boy should come east to live with his grandmother.

The lawyer, noting that $150 would be largely spent for the railroad fares between Los Angeles and Hartford, informed the surrogate he had received money with which to send the boy to Hartford, and the court signed the necessary papers.

The first intimation the father and grandmother had of this turn of affairs was when newspapers told of the boy's departure on his trip. This news was confirmed the next day by a telegram.

It was impossible to follow the train movements, and the next heard from Elmer was that he had arrived at Springfield, Mass., and was placed aboard the next train for Hartford. He jumped into his father's eager arms and immediately began a recital about the wonderful sights he saw coming across the country. A tag was fastened in the buttonhole of his overcoat, reading:

"Deliver me to my grandmother, Mrs. Henry Ammann, 46 Lenox street, Hartford, Conn.".

Etiquette of Letters.

Eighty years ago the etiquette of letters was far more rigid than now. Even the twopenny post was not considered good enough for correspondence addressed to persons of any standing. In her "Reminiscences of an Octogenarian" Miss Louisa Packe tells us that when her father had occasion to write to Londoners in his own class of life the letter was always conveyed by a servant not for any reasons of urgency, but because the post was considered a vulgar medium of communication for persons residing in the same city and only to be used for the conveyance of letters to the country.—London Chronicle.

RUNS MOTOR AT 100.

Hardy Scot Receives Instructions and Then Shows 'Em How to Do It.

Burlingame, Cal.—Daniel McClane, a hardy Scotchman, who was married at the age of fifty-nine years and has eleven children and several grandchildren, celebrated his centennial here recently by learning to drive an automobile.

With a hundred years behind him, but still hale and hearty, the old man attracted much attention as he scorched through the streets of the town at the wheel of a motorcar belonging to his daughter, Mrs. D. T. Ambrose.

McClane came to California during the gold rush and has been a resident of Lassen county for many years. He came here for the celebration of his one hundredth birthday.

"Whoop!" exclaimed the centenarian, returning from his joy ride. "I never knew that when I was at the helm of a sailing ship seventy-five years ago I'd be running a craft like this!"

"HOW DRY I AM!"

With Piano It Makes Trouble For Scotty In "Dry Town."

Des Moines, Ia.—When A. H. Day, chief of the "booze hunting brigade," accompanied by Night Captain Weaver and two officers, visited the home of Scotty McClure in search for liquor, for a time he imagined that he had been misinformed. All searched high and low, but found no booze.

Scotty insisted that he was a law abiding citizen. The raiders were about to leave when some one thought of the piano.

"Has the instrument been tuned lately, Scotty?" inquired one of the officers.

"Why—er—yes. Oh, yes, it's all right. Plays fine." Scotty replied.

"D'ye ever play 'How Dry I Am' on it?" inquired Weaver, as he pressed his foot against the pedals.

Before Scotty replied a panel beneath the keyboard was pushed open, revealing twenty-one pints of whisky.

Finger Nails.

The growth of the finger nail is an inch and a half a year. It grows more quickly in summer than in winter. The nail of the middle finger grows the fastest and that of the thumb the slowest.

BE TACTFUL.

Talent is something, but tact is everything. Talent is serious, sober, grave and respectable. Tact is all that and more too. It is not a seventh sense, but is the life of all the five. It is the open eye, the quick ear, the judging taste, the keen smell and the lively touch. It is the interpreter of all riddles, the surmounter of all difficulties and the remover of all obstacles. Tact is a wonder worker.

FEEDS PIGS WITH SNAKES.

Gives Pork a Better Flavor—Wondering if Reptiles Are Cause.

Elizabeth, N. J.—Elmer Reichard, a farmer, who lives near Galloping hill, has discovered that feeding pigs on snakes imparts a delicious flavor to the pork. Reichard's farm is in the wooded region between Roselle and Elizabeth and is infested with snakes. Reichard determined to eliminate them. As a preliminary step he bought several specimens of a breed of small black pigs. These he turned loose in the woods.

Reichard received a surprise a few days ago in the form of a letter from a New York restaurant, which, after several weeks, had succeeded in tracing to Reichard a shipment of pork which had caused much favorable comment by patrons. It appeared that the pork had gained a peculiarly rich, gamy flavor, and the restaurant proprietor contracted with Reichard for all the pork he could raise.

The growing scarcity of snakes has forced Reichard to search for substitutes. He is hopeful that he may be able to prove that the peculiar taste of the meat does not come from the snakes, but from various roots which he has observed the pigs eating.

HE'S THE BAREFOOT MAN.

Haigler Has Been Unshod For Thirty-five Years—No Pains at Seventy-five.

Carlton, Okla.—For thirty-five years J. M. Haigler of Carlton has gone unshod the year round, and now at seventy-five he is devoid of aches or pains of any sort. He is a man of extraordinary physique, standing six feet tall and weighing 325 pounds, and is as prankish as a boy of seventeen.

"I don't remember ever being ill," he says, "and I have always eaten with the relish of a hungry man what has been set before me. I have lived outdoors as much as possible and have always been active, both mentally and physically. Maybe that has helped to keep me young."

There is nothing eccentric about Haigler. He is the father of five sons, all husky men, owners of large herds of cattle and horses and thousands of acres of land.

Nutmegs as Medicine.

A drowsy state after meals is what we should welcome, for it is the most favorable condition for good digestion. Nutmegs may produce it because their effect is to increase the flow of gastric juice. The nutmeg is much used by doctors as a remedy in weak digestion. If one has a keen appetite he does not need nutmeg, for appetite is the most powerful stimulant of the flow of gastric juice. If the appetite is not good the digestion will be feeble, and then the addition of a little nutmeg will be found of benefit.—London Answers.

HERRICK URGES FARMERS' UNION

Lack of Organization Chief Agricultural Trouble.

PROFITS ARE AFFECTED.

Former Ambassador Declares Farmers Are Unorganized Industrially, Commercially and Financially and as a Result There Are Wastes—Agriculture Isn't on Decline, He Says.

Philadelphia.—Lack of organization is the chief trouble with American agriculture, Myron T. Herrick, formerly United States ambassador to France, recently said in an address before the agricultural conference. Mr. Herrick's topic was agriculture and the laws required for rural credits.

Mr. Herrick held that the farmers are unorganized industrially, commercially and financially and that, as a result, there are wastes and losses that seriously affect the producer's profits.

Mr. Herrick made it clear, however, that agriculture in this country was not on the decline. Man for man, he said, the American farmer is superior to any other, and in some branches he has brought agriculture to its highest stages of development. The shortcomings of American agriculture are traceable to the fact that the farmers have not combined their resources with the view of helping one another, he said. Their greatest need, he declared, is co-operation, and this can be brought about only through a more intelligent and extended use of the association.

MYRON T. HERRICK.

He suggested that these legislative steps be considered to relieve conditions:

First.—An amendment of the national banking act to permit any national bank that confines its credit facilities to members to be organized as an association without capital stock.

Second.—An amendment of the banking act of each state to permit any kind of bank that confines its credit facilities to members to be organized as an organization without capital stock.

Third.—A law by the nation and in each state to legalize for associations whatever is lawful for corporations—i. e., a regulatory law.

Fourth.—A clause in such law to permit combinations among farmers' associations or small producers' or consumers' associations.

"Such, in substance, are the basic principles of the laws in all countries where rural co-operation flourishes," said Mr. Herrick. "America is too set in the idea that the corporation or partnership is the only means for organizing business or finance and that the association is intended merely for benevolence, thrift and non-profit objects. There is also a widely prevalent idea that co-operation is of a similar altruistic nature. We should disabuse our minds of these false ideas and put the association and co-operation on a practical, economic basis.

"A system of co-operative associations based on co-operative banks is, in my opinion, the best solution of the troubles that beset American agriculture. The combined wealth and earning power of the farmers are so stupendous that they would become self sufficient if they would consolidate and mobilize their resources through such systems extending from the plains to tidewater. Experience proves that the organized farmer is able to take care of himself. The only way to organization lies through co-operation."

HURLS ALIMONY ON PORCH.

Akron (O.) Man Gets Lessons In Proper Way to Pay.

Akron, O.—Probation Officer Switzer recently gave Harry P. Hood instructions as to the proper way to pay $5 a week alimony he was ordered to give his wife.

Hood tied up $4.50 in a small package and threw it upon the porch of his wife's home. Mrs. Hood asked Switzer to make Hood give up the additional 50 cents and added that it would be more satisfactory if in future the money was paid through the court.

FINDS VIPER IN CUPBOARD.

Farmer's Wife Scared by Reptile Coiled on Plates.

Bedford, Ind. — When Mrs. Ollie Marks, wife of a farmer near here, was setting supper a few evenings ago she reached into the china cupboard for a plate. She was almost "scared out of her boots," she said afterward, to find a spreading viper coiled on a pile of dishes.

As she did not wish snake for supper, she screamed until her husband came and killed the reptile. The snake was three feet six inches long.

WIRELESS SICKNESS NOW.

Travelers at Sea Affected by the Telephone Development.

Philadelphia.—"Wireless nausea" is the newest illness reported and has only come since the wireless telephone with its almost unmeasured voltage current projected through space has become an established thing. The discovery of the phenomenon was the result of travelers on shipboard becoming nauseated at sea when there was no perceptible dip to the vessels on which they were traveling.

The matter was reported to the Aero Club of Pennsylvania, and one of its members was sent aboard a coastwise liner to investigate. When the influence began to be felt the wireless apparatus was set and an extremely high potential such as is used at Arlington was discovered in the atmosphere.

GIVES HIS WANT AD, BRIDE $300,000 CASH

Aged Man Wins Georgia Wife, Twenty-eight, by That Course.

Atlanta, Ga.—William H. Burden of New York, who was married here recently to Miss Lulu Douglas Thomson, won his bride by means of a want advertisement.

Mr. Burden is seventy-six years old. He has been a widower for several years and has adult grandchildren. The bride is twenty-eight years old. It is generally reported that Mr. Burden settled $300,000 on her just before the wedding ceremony.

The bride is a niece of the late W. S. Thomson of Atlanta and of Mrs. Leonidas F. Scott of Decatur, with whom she has made her home since childhood. She got a substantial estate after her parents died, but most of this was spent on her art studies in Philadelphia, and she recently began to consider earning a livelihood by her own efforts.

A girl friend in Georgia ran across an advertisement which appeared to ask for a companion. The friend answered it, but after a letter or two was told that she "did not suit."

"You try it, Lulu," the friend suggested. So Miss Thomson wrote to the advertiser, received a paper with questions to be answered, filled them out and returned the paper. Apparently she "did suit," for the next mail brought a letter from Mr. Burden, who had been the anonymous advertiser.

Mr. Burden came to Atlanta and pushed his suit so successfully that he won Miss Thomson. The marriage, however, was opposed by Mr. Burden's children and grandchildren, who live in Macon, Ga., from which city Burden went to New York several years ago.

The first news of Mr. Burden's intended marriage which reached the ears of his relatives in Macon, a friend of the family said, was that the aged man went to his bank in New York and drew out $300,000 in cash, stuffed it into a gripsack and left for Atlanta.

Mr. Burden's children came to Atlanta from Macon and tried to stop the marriage, even begging Miss Thomson not to wed the aged man. Both Mr. Burden and Miss Thomson, however, insisted that their marriage concerned only themselves. After the ceremony the couple left for New York, where they will live.

Bellefontaine, O.—A gymnasium has been provided in the Logan county jail for the pleasure of the prisoners. Sheriff George Smith, feeling that the men needed some other form of recreation than reading, has put in the equipment at his own expense. Mrs. Smith, the sheriff's wife, has placed two canary birds in the jail to help divert the minds of the prisoners.

CHURCH WOMEN ARE GIVEN VOTE

Syracuse.—For the first time in the history of the Episcopal church in this city women voted at an annual parish meeting last night. It was at Trinity church in West Onondaga st. for the election of wardens and vestry men.

The men extended the ballot to the women as the first order of business at the meeting presided over by the rector, Rev. Almon A. Jaynes.

In making the last announcement of the annual election at the Sunday service Mr. Jaynes stated that the question of suffrage would be taken up at the opening of the meeting, and in event of its passage the women of the parish would be entitled to a vote at this election. Knowing the sentiment of the parish, women attended the meeting.

Not All Use Ballot

When it came to balloting more than twelve women participated. Others asked the chair for information but did not vote. It was evident that the women are going to take an interest forthwith in the church other than teaching Sunday school classes, getting up missionary meetings and parish suppers.

The election resulted as folllows: Warden, for two years, John L. Humbert; vestrymen, Henry E. Mills, Stewart M. Carroll and Henry B. Hallenbeck.

A recommendation favoring woman suffrage was adopted at the annual parish meeting of Calvary church last night, with the understanding the same qualifications should be possessed by women voters as held by the men. These include being of age, being a communicant and a contributor to the support of the parish and compel an attendance of one year. Women will be entitled to vote at regular and special elections.

New Calvary Officers

Vestrymen chosen last night are Walter Dolan, Charles C. MCLeod, Joseph H. Osborne, A. D. West, Bede Hutchinson and Edward J. Day. Paul Halbig and Louis Krumbhaar were elected wardens.

By a unanimous vote the men of St. Pauls Episcopal church extended the franchise to women at the annual parish meeting held at noon yesterday with the rector, Rev. Dr. James Empringham presiding.

Judge Charles Andrews made a speech in favor of the amendment to the canon giving thew omen of the church the right of casting their vote at all church meetings. The attendance at the meeting was larger than before in a long time on election day.

W. D. Dunning was re-elected to the office of warden and the following vestrymen were chosen: George G. Kenyon, H. W. Duguid and Charles R. Eastbrook.

Bishop Fiske to Speak

The Men's Club of the church will meet at Lockwood Memorial House Thursday night at 6:30 o'clock for supper, when Bishop Charles Fiske will deliver an address on the relation of the laymen to the rector. The club will elect officers.

At the annual parish meeting of the Church of the Savior yesterday morning the following were elected. Warden for two years, George Hunt; vestrymen for three years, Walter Hinkley, H. A. Jessup and Robert J. Van Wagner, and vestryman for two years to succeed W. D. Cameron, removed from the city, Wesley A. Yale.

The Church of the Savior did not take up the issue of votes for women as the vestry had not taken any action in them atter.

BUTTER PRICES STAND STILL—STOCKS INCREASE

Syracuse. With cables reporting a decline in the English butter market and exporters on this side temporarily without orders, holders of high cost butter in storage at all points in the country are much concerned over the outlook. Official figures just issued show a stock 23,435,000 pounds in excess of the holdings at this date last year. This is the largest surplus recorded in the history of the market at this time, and in fact for any period in recent years.

The figures recently announced for cold storage holdings in the United States were 77,913,000 pounds, against 54,478,000 pounds on the same date last year. The figures for October showed a stock 6,591,000 pounds larger than on November 1 being 84,494,000 pounds, the increase in that month over 1914 being 23,134,000 pounds. Holdings on September 1 were 82,844,000 pounds compared with 63,666,000 pounds on thes ame day last year, an increase of 19,178,000 pounds.

Butter factors have depended a great deal on export out to care for the enormous excess in make, and the fact that England and her allies have been securing large stocks of cheaper butter from Australia, Russia and Canada has upset calculations a great deal.

Exports to England for the week ending October 29 were 5,425 tubs of 60 pounds each compared with 2,850 tubs in the previous week. That total exports since May 1 have been 75,850 tubs, against only 3,576 tubs in the same period last year.

It was expected earlier in the season that the English markets woulld take an average of 150,000 tubs during October, November and December but the action of the English markets now appears unfavorable for any outlet for approaching this quantity.

Stocks of eggs in storage at the close amounted to 2,826,000 cases compared with 2,388,000 cases on the same date last year. Storage holdings on October 1 were 3,372,000 cases compared with 2,908,000 cases on the same day a year ago. The September holldings were 3,808,000 cases compared with 3,122,000 cases in the same month last year. The export movement has been considerable but holders are depending more on a decreased lay to stimulate storage reductions.

WITNESSES FAVOR LEVY OF INCOME TAX

Syracuse.—With Senator Ogden L. Mills, multi-millionaire, presiding over the session of the joint Legislative Committee on Taxation at the City Hall yesterday, witnesses representing every walk of life presented as the censensus of their opinions that burden of taxation falls too heavily on real estate, especially in rural communities, and that the wealthy are evading their just share of government burdens.

Every one sworn was in favor of a state income tax, it being conceded that the present system of personal property taxation is a failure.

Mayor Louis Will and Mayor-elect Walter B. Stone had told of the rapidly mounting tax rate in Syracuse in the last fifteen years with a heavy decline in personal valuations, when Edwin Collins, secretary of the Board of Assessors, afternoon session. He stated that the city's realty is now assessed at about $132,000 with more than $26,000,000 exempt. He described the method of determining valuations, saying the records in the County Clerk's office were first consulted and tentative figures were sent out to the taxpayers, who were asked to come in for conferences.

Salisbury is accused of having failed to return a horse and rig which he hired from the Halleck livery in Oswego.

No trace of the missing outfit has been found, but it is understood that after leaving Oswego, Salisbury drove the horse to Centerville, Allegeny county, and there sold the outfit. Centerville is located on the Pennsylvania border and is about 150 miles from Oswego.

When arrested, Salisbury said that he had been in Oswego county for the past couple of weeks and knew that the Oswego police were seeking him.

Oswego—The Mohawk Manufacturing company's mill on the Oswego canal was sold at mortgage foreclosure at the Court House yesterday, and was bid in by the Oswego County Savings Bank, holder of the mortgage for $8,000. The mortgage was for $7,000 but the taxes, interest and other charges brought the judgment up to more than $8,000. There were no other bids made at the sale.

Hoboken Sees Good In Commission Plan

Yesterday's New York Times contained the following article which concerns the experiment made by one New Jersey city:

In the city of Hoboken, the most recent among the larger New Jersey communities to adopt the commission plan municipal management, the new commission has not been in power long enough to justify a verdict of praise or condemnation, although there is already some agitation for the recall of Patrick R. Griffin, Mayor and Director of Public Affairs.

Mayor Griffin is the Democratic leader of Hoboken. He is a leader of the old type. For years he was credited with being the unseen power behind the city administration, whenever this was controlled by the Democrats as it has been most of the time in recent years. Mayor Griffin and his sway were issues in Hoboken's annual Mayoralty elections under the old system. They were the dominant issues in the campaign for the commission plan and in the more recent contest which preceded the special election at which Mayor Griffin and his colleagues on the first commission were chosen.

If you talk to the political enemies of Mayor Griffin, they will draw a picture of him and his machine black enough to match Tammany in the days when Tammany was at its worst. The friends of Mayor Griffin, on the other hand, aver that he has been made the target for unjustified abuse, and that his election as a member of the commission must be regarded as absolute refutation of the charges that have been made against him and his political following.

Hope He Will Make Good

Since Griffin has taken his place as the visible head of the City Government the people of Hoboken have assumed toward him and his colleagues an attitude of watchful waiting, and those not absolutely swayed by partisanship are quite willing to have them make good. The commission has been in power only since the latter part of March. While disappointment is frequently voiced, the censensus is that, even though the commission is not all that might be hoped for, Hoboken is better off under the new plan of government, which makes it easy to fix responsibility.

There has been little criticism of the commission so far, except a revival soon after the Commissioners took office of the old charge that a "contractors' ring" had the city in its pocket, and made it pay exorbitant rates for asphalt pavements. Specifications, which, it is declared, virtually shut off competitive bidding and gave to the Uvalde Asphalt Paving company a monopoly, figured in the charges. In adition, the contracts call for a ten-year maintenance bond from a surety company, and this, local contractors say, shut them out because they are unable to obtain such bonds. Whatever substance there may be in this contention, it is a fact that the only successful bidder in recent years has been the Uvalde company. It is a fact also that Hoboken has been paying and is paying more for its asphalt than Jersey City and other near-by municipalities, even in some instances where the identical companies are doing the work.

The surety company clause of the Hoboken contracts was contained until recently in similar contracts in Jersey City and of Bayonne. Since commission government was adopted by these communities this clause has been eliminated and a freeholders' bond substituted. The effect in Jersey City, according to Director Byrne, was a reduction of 20 per cent. in the rates and a saving of $1,000 on the first job. In Jersey City natural asphalt, with a ten-year guarantee, cost an average of 96.4 cents per square yard. In Hoboken the prevailing rate has been $1.54. The specifications are not identical, but the maintenance guarantee is for ten years.

Attacked on Repair Work

Shortly after the Hoboken commission took office it was attacked in connection with asphalt "repair" work let without public bidding. Under Chapter 342 of the laws of 1912 all contracts involving more than $500 must be let under competition. The "repair" work, according to the Director of Streets, will cost from $10,000 to $12,000. The matter was taken to court on a petition for a restraining order. The Commission won, with the understanding that the Uvalde company, which did the work, should sue the city for its bill. This action is now pending in the Circuit Court.

James H. Londrigan, Hoboken's Director of Streets and Public Improvements, discussing the "repair" contracts, told a Times reporter that with the court upholding the commission he felt that he had no apology to make for the manner in which the work was given to the Uvalde company.

"The work was being done under an old contract entered into by a former administration," said the Commissioner. "It was our intention, originally, only to have the bad places patched and if this intention had been carried out no question could have been raised. But on examination I found that it would be necessary to tear up three-quarters of the pavement, that the Belgian block foundation would not support the traffic and that any thing short of the reconstruction we have undertaken would be money thrown away, I think we did a public spirited act and the court so held."

Asked about the surety bond, Mr. Londrigan said the contracts had always gone to the lowest bidder, and that any responsible contractor who was willing to pay could get a surety bond.

"I think that a wise and essential provision," he added. "I even feel that the maintenance guarantee should be for a period of fifteen years and when present contracts expire I shall recommend such a clause. We have discarded the freeholders' bond here as too insecure and we do not care what the practice is in other communities. We are looking out for Hoboken."

Mayor Griffin Angry

Mayor Griffin became angry when a Times reporter sought to question him regarding the "contractors ring" and other matters which have furnished basis for attacks on him and his organization.

"You have been misled about me," he said. "You have been to see my political enemies and they have poisoned your mind against me. They have been telling you a lot of lies about me. They don't know how to tell the truth anyhow. You cannot put me on the defensive for a moment. All these things have been dinned into the ears of the people here in Hoboken for years, and yet I was elected Commissioner by a bigger vote than any of thec andidates who ran with me, which shows that the people have common sense. I have nothing to say in defense of my administration. I shall let my actions speak for me. They will speak louder than words."

The voters of Hoboken had a rough field to harrow before they won commission government. It took three attempts. The new plan was finally adopted at the general election last year. The first Commissioners were chosen after a non-partisan primary early this Spring and have held office since March.

Mayor Griffin, while heading the list of successful candidates, was elected by a minority, receiving only 38 per cent. of the total vote cast. There were more than fifty candidates in the field.

The special election at which the Commissioners were chosen resulted in victory for four Democratic candidates and one Republican. Of the Democrats three were important figures in the Democratic organization and had held places in famous city administrations. Here is the list of Commissioners:

Patrick R. Griffin, Mayor and Director of Public Affairs.

Gustav Bash, Director of Revenue and Finance.

James H. Londrigan, Director of Streets and Public Improvement.

Bernard N. McFeeley, Director of Public Safety.

Harry L. Schmulling, Director of Parks and uPblic Playgrounds.

Commissioner Schmulling was the only Republican elected, though Maxwell Miller, former Republican councilman, who was candidate, lost by a narrow margin.

Gustav Bach, who next to Mayor Griffin received the highest number of votes and won the Commissionership which made him City Comptroler has not been actively identified with organization politics. Mayor Griffin had been a Street Commissioner by appointment under past administrations and Commissioner Londrigan, who took up the street work and the supervising of other public improvements, was City Clerk before he became Commissioner. Bernard N. McFeeley, who as Director of Public Safety, has charge of the Hoboken police force and its Fire Department, was a Democratic councilman.

Movement for Recall

The movement for the recall of Mayor Griffin next March, when commission government, will have been in force for a year, is being promoted by William P. Verdon, a former Republican, who is head of the Republican organization of Hudson County. While partisan in its origin the movement has found considerable support among more progressive Democrats and men interested in civic affairs.

The estate of Edward S. Cullinan, late of Oswego, is valued at $8,000, according to the petition for the probate of the will, filed in Surrogate's Court, yesterday by P. W. Cullinan, brother of the decedent's brother, Thomas Cullinan, and the residue of the estate to P. W. Cullinan. It was reported that a contest might be started by Thomas Cullinan. KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS FAIR WAS SUCCESSFUL

While the total receipts of the K. of C. fair, which was held in the Armory, Oswego, all of last week are as yet unknown, it is probable that $3,000 was taken in at the door, the booths and from the sale of various articles.

The attendance Saturday night was the biggest of the week except on Thanksgiving night and the workers were busy every minute of the time. The evening was given up entirely to work, the dancing being dispensed with. Except for ab rief program by the K. of C. orchestra there was no entertainment. The receipts for the night were approximately $1,000.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Ned Harris, Pennsylvania's Efficient Captain.

Although Pennsylvania university's football team has been a disappointment in many respects to its supporters, no criticism has been directed at Ned Harris, captain and right tackle of the team. On the whole, the team has played good ball, but hard luck has seemed to follow it. As an aggregation Pennsylvania has displayed skill and power in straight football, but has shown weakness in the making of forward passes. That seems to be the chief failing of its game. Captain Harris, with Harry Ross, right halfback, has been the mainstay of the Pennsylvania attack. He is a good ground gainer and a sure tackler.

Rube Oldring Retires.

Another member of the once invincible Mackmen has decided to retire from baseball. Rube Oldring, the big outfielder, says that he will devote his time in future to his farm near Bridgeton, N. J. Oldring was a prime favorite in Philadelphia until he fell down hard in the world's series with the Boston Braves a year ago. He was so weak with the stick in that memorable struggle that Mack lost much confidence in him. Oldring continued to play inferior baseball this year in spite of the fact that he tried his level best to make good. In time he was forced to sit on the bench, where he realized that he was rapidly going back. Mack attempted to include him in a trade last September, but Oldring was turned down. Mack advised him of this fact, and Oldring, fearing a trip to the minor leagues, concluded to leave the Athletics at the end of the campaign.

Griffith Will Let Gandil Go.

It is a foregone conclusion that Clark Griffith of the Washingtons will sell or trade his veteran first baseman, Chick Gandil. Griffith picked up a star first sacker in Joe Judge last September. Judge was purchased from the Buffalo International league club, and as soon as he joined the Senators he created a sensation. Judge, by the way, was in general demand. If Griffith had not secured his release he probably would have gone to the Boston Braves, as George Stallings was prepared to make a fancy bid for him. Gandil was purchased from the Montreal club several years ago for $12,000. He fell off in his batting this year, and Griffith now thinks a change will benefit him. The Cleveland club may get Gandil if C. W. Somers will pay the price.

A Season of Football Records.

This seems to be a season for wonderful football records. Not only has there been an unusual number of big scoring games, the hundred mark in points having been passed on several occasions, but there have been a number of individual exploits that are regarded as world's records.

The records for both punting and drop kicking have been shattered. Mark Bayne of South Dakota Wesleyan college made the new drop kicking record for field goal against Northern Normal, when he booted a field goal from the sixty-three yard line. The best previous record was held by Pat O'Dea of Wisconsin, the distance being sixty-two yards.

Mack Thinks Future Is Rosy.

Manager Connie Mack is not doing much worrying about baseball just now. In fact, the lean Athletic manager is spending his time reading and watching football. He has become quite an enthusiast on the sport, but once in awhile it is possible to extract some baseball information from him. The Athletic leader said in reply to some questions as to the future of his club that he felt sure that the Athletics would be up in the race next season, and that in 1917 he would have a champion team.

Kiviat Case Appealed.

The athletic committee of the Irish American Athletic club of New York city has appealed to the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic union in behalf of new trials for Abel Kiviat, its track captain, and Harry Smith, both of whom were expelled from the A. A. U. for having demanded excessive expense money to appear in an athletic meet in Schenectady, N. Y.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Rapid Eating.

Few people really masticate their food properly or eat as slowly as they should in spite of all the advice and warnings of physicians. Still we will add one more word. Don't let the children bolt their breakfasts or any other meal for that matter. Ten per cent of the school children of America suffer from malnutrition, and malnutrition is as often due to rapid eating as to undereating.

HER NEWEST PHOTO.

It Was Well Taken, Too, Just as She Intended It Should Be.

[A dialogue between him and her.]

"What have you got there?"

"Where?"

"In your hands behind your back."

"I'm not going to show you!"

"Ah, please do."

"Promise you won't try to take it away from me?"

He sneaks up close to the girl, who furtively holds before him a photo, which he clutches with both hands.

"That's beautiful!"

"Do you really think so?"

"Yes, pretty nice. But you are much more beautiful, you know."

"Now you're flattering me. I think I look just horrid in it."

"Oh, you don't. Aren't you going to give this one to me?"

The girl flies to the other side of the room in evident terror. The youth flies over after her and in an apparent struggle manages (quite easily) to wrench the photo from her grasp.

"Give it back to me! Please give it back!" she pleads.

"Give it back? I guess not!"

"I think you're just the meanest thing!"

In a little while they quiet down, and despite the fact that she continues to coax him for the photo every few minutes he carries it away with him. She goes to bed perfectly happy, for she intended that he should have it—in fact, had it taken especially for him.—Detroit Free Press.

BOYS SWARM WITH TREASURE.

Wall Street Meets Few Losses Through Young "Runners."

New York.—The boys who run around Wall and Broad streets every day with $100,000 or so of negotiable securities tied to their waists by steel chains increased in number so rapidly during the rush of trading that the brokerage houses established a fine system of espionage to prevent the loss of negotiable paper.

There are about 600 brokerage houses in the financial district, and probably every one of them took on two new runners, as the boys who carry securities to and from the banks and to the transfer offices are called.

When one of the boys yielded to the enticing voice of a suffrage orator or the arguments of a prohibition campaign speaker and paused awhile with a fortune in his custody he was very apt to have a special policeman in plain clothes step up to him and tell him to be on his way.

Many brokers expressed amazement that with such large amounts in easily convertible securities floating about the streets no serious losses happened.

HARD WINTERS BEFORE US.

Meteorologist Who Predicted Rain Cycle Makes New Forecast.

Paris.—The world's rain cycle, beginning in 1902, which the French meteorological authority, Abbe Moreau director of the French observatory predicted as the result of his study of the sun's face, is now, the abbe says, ended. He forecasts a series, though not perhaps unbroken, of twenty-six hard winters, beginning the present year.

According to the abbe, it is impossible to say where in Europe the winter cold will be excessive, but probabilities are France will have to face many rigorous seasons during this period. He bases his prophecy regarding coming winter temperatures upon the supposition that the temperature curve all over the world can be calculated on the same principles as the world's rain curve.

A Profitable Patient.

M. Latour, referring to the death of M. Cherest while still young, mentions a singular patient who contributed to his income 14,666 francs per annum. This patient, a well known person in the mercantile world, had a terrible fear of dying and besought Cherest to pay him a visit while in bed every morning at 9 o'clock, his fee being 40 francs per visit. Cherest consented, and for several years paid his daily visits, always receiving his 40 franc piece. During the last years of his life this patient, a very old man, became really ill and exacted two visits a day, then three, and then four, always paying his 40 francs for each.—Medical Times and Gazette.

England's Roman Amphitheater.

Dorchester possesses the best preserved Roman amphitheater in England, in which over 10,000 people gathered in 1705 to witness the burning of a woman who had murdered her husband. Dorchester was a place of importance as early as the Roman occupation, and at a later date it had an unenviable association with Judge Jeffreys and his bloody assize.

AN INCIDENT OF THE FRONTIER

A Strange Duel In a Border Gambling House.

When a mining fever struck a new region in the west I thought I would go out and take a hand. One night soon after my arrival I went to a show that had come to the place where I had located. It was given in a big tent and consisted of acrobatic, sleight of hand and other such performances. There were two brothers, knife throwers, who showed great skill, Ben and Harry Halliwell, as their names were given on the roughly printed playbills. Ben's part was to stand with his back to a board while Harry planted knives all about him so that when Ben walked away he left his outline in knives on the board.

The Halliwell brothers were down for two performances, and just before the second a specimen of the toughest class at the mines, a thickset, red faced, thick lipped man, with Satan's own look, sidled around and got in behind the ropes on the plot reserved for the performers. He stood opposite the knife thrower and sidewise to the man at whom the knives were thrown. Harry had nearly pinned his brother in when I saw a flash of light on Harry's face just as he was throwing a knife. It went through the fleshy part of his brother's leg. I had been watching the man who stood opposite him, and a second before the knife that wounded Ben was thrown I saw the intruder manipulate a pocket mirror. It was he who threw the light of a lamp into Harry's eyes and caused him to missend the knife. The audience had kept their gaze fixed on the brothers, especially the one standing for a target, and nobody but myself seemed to have seen the cause of the failure. I'm sure if they had the man who had contrived it would have suffered for his act. Being unused to such scenes I prudently kept my own counsel. A tenderfoot is not fitted to take part in quarrels of the people of new countries.

I saw Harry Halliwell give the man a glance and was confident that he was aware of the cause of his wounding his brother. In that glance I also saw a premonition of revenge. Of course the incident ended that part of the performance. The brothers withdrew, and the bill was finished by the others. So far as I could see, the spectators supposed that an accident had happened, but were so used to scenes of sudden bloodletting that they soon forgot it.

The next day I learned that the fiend who had caused the trouble had been incited against Harry Halliwell for some reason not known to my informant. He passed under the name of Nevada Tim and had a black record behind him. His occupation was gambling, and he passed most of his time at the Metropolitan, a gambling den in the place. I was also told that he had been informed that Harry Halliwell had accused him of throwing a light in his eyes as he was about to throw the knife, and he was looking for Harry to kill him.

The afternoon after the performance, having nothing to do, I sauntered into the Metropolitan and stood looking at the game. I was surprised to see Harry Halliwell sitting at the table playing very moderately. He seemed more interested in watching the door than in the game. I went out after awhile, but something—I could not tell what—led me to go back. There was Harry Halliwell still sitting at the table, the door on his left, and now I noticed his brother leaning on a crutch standing opposite. Presently the door opened, and Nevada Tim walked in. I saw him start when he saw the knife thrower, and instead of walking straight up to the table, as he had started to do, he sidled around to the left.

As soon as the man entered I saw that both the Halliwells were aware of his presence. Ben drew a little off from the table, where he and Harry could better see each other, and his eyes never left their enemy for a second. Nevada Tim kept edging around to get in Harry's rear, but in an apparently careless way not likely to attract attention. I wished I hadn't come there, for I knew what he was bent on, and I wasn't sure the brothers did. Finally he attained a position directly behind Harry, and I saw him turn with sudden swiftness and level a revolver at the back of Harry's head, but before he could pull the trigger I heard a thud and at the same moment saw the handle of a knife protruding from his left breast. He pitched over backward and lay perfectly still.

Ben Halliwell had given his brother a signal which, had it come a few seconds later, would have come too late. Harry had turned only half around and thrown the knife over his left shoulder. So sure was his aim that he had pierced the heart in its center.

I had condemned myself bitterly for not interfering to save a man I supposed was not aware of his danger, though something told me I might go wrong in doing so. It turned out that I would have made a great mistake in interfering. The Halliwells had planned the affair, had kept out of Nevada Tim's way and gone to the gambling house to lay in wait for him. Furthermore, I found that a number of persons present as soon as Nevada Tim entered knew that either he or Harry Halliwell would not go out alive. Halliwell could not hit a barn door with a pistol.

My introduction to the country did not please me, and the same evening I packed up my traps and returned to the east.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Floating Bath Brush Has Rounded Cork Back.

The newest bath brush is about one third the size of the article usually offered for the purpose. Besides its diminutive dimensions it has also other novel features. The back of the brush is made of cork, which insures that it will always be possible to locate it in the bath; and its shape is that of a hemisphere, so that it fits snugly into the palm of the hand. Altogether it is one of the most convenient brushes for the purpose that have ever been devised.

Oysters a la Creole.

Two or three dozen oysters, one tablespoonful of flour, two heaping tablespoonfuls of butter, half a cupful of oyster liquor, half a cupful of cream or milk, two teaspoonfuls of curry powder, two teaspoonfuls each of grated onion and apple and chopped chutney, salt to taste, half a cupful of rice and one of red pepper. Wash rice, throw it into a saucepan of fast boiling water, add a teaspoonful of salt. Boil the rice until tender, but do not let it break; then drain it off through colander, wash well under stream of boiling water and leave in colander over boiling water until needed. Melt butter in a saucepan. Add onion, apple, flour and curry powder. Stir over fire until flour turns light brown color; then add strained oyster liquor and milk or cream. Stir over fire until sauce boils five minutes. Add chutney and season the mixture, add oysters and heat them in sauce until they plump up, but do not boil, as it makes them leathery and indigestible. Arrange some of the rice as flat border on hot dish. Mold rest of rice in cups; then turn out and arrange them on top of rice border. Decorate top of each little mound with thin strips of red pepper. Pile oysters and sauce in center of border, arranging four oysters free from sauce in center. Serve hot as possible.

Household Helps.

Instead of using a flatiron to steam velvet use a soapstone, if you have it, and see how much better and smoother the velvet will be.

Stains on mirror glasses can be removed with a flannel cloth dampened with spirits of camphor.

Better paint the pantry shelves with white enamel. It is cleaner and more lasting than paper, and it is very attractive. If you cannot do that cover shelves with white oilcloth.

Stains on flannels may be removed by applying yolks of eggs and glycerin in equal quantities. Leave for half an hour and then wash out.

A sure preventive against the ravages of carpet bugs or buffalo moths is sulphur in a very fine powder.

Remedy For Chapped Hands.

The following is an excellent remedy for chapped hands or any raw surface, and besides being effective is entirely harmless and will keep in a cool place for a long time. Beat to a stiff froth the white of one egg, then mix one level spoonful of powdered borax with one-half cupful sweet lard and heat quite hot, but not scalding. Then pour slowly on to the beaten white and stir until perfectly smooth and cold. It should be stirred for at least one-half hour, as it gradually forms into the consistency of an ointment and will remain soft. It is then ready for use.

Oyster Chowder.

Chop fifty good sized oysters. Prepare one cupful of finely chopped celery and two cupfuls of cold boiled rice. Put a layer of celery in the bottom of the saucepan, then a layer of rice and a layer of oysters. Season with salt and pepper. Repeat these layers until all the materials are used. Pour over one cupful of boiling water. Cook slowly for twenty-five minutes. Beat up the yolks of two eggs with one cupful of milk, add this to the chowder, stir carefully for a few minutes and serve hot.

New Orleans Pork and Cabbage.

Buy two pounds of shoulder of pork as lean as possible. Shred a sound fine head of cabbage and place it in the bottom of a buttered kettle. Season the cabbage with salt and pepper and over it put one teaspoonful of mustard seeds, half a teacupful of vinegar and one teaspoonful of brown sugar. Put the pork on top, floured well. Bake three hours and serve with baked sweet potatoes.—[illegible]

SANDWICHES FOR AUTUMN.

CHESTNUT CREAM SANDWICHES.—Peel, boil, drain and mash large French chestnuts. Rub them through a sieve and mix thoroughly with sweet cream. Add a touch of salt or sugar, as is liked, and spread the paste on thin slices of fresh white bread denuded of crust and cut in round disks. Use a biscuit cutter for shaping after slices are cut.

Fig Sandwiches.—Soak dried figs overnight in cold water to cover them and then simmer over a slow fire until tender. Add half a cupful of sugar and the juice of half a lemon to each pound of figs during the cooking. Chill them thoroughly in the icebox and then chop to a paste and spread on thin white bread or on thin slices of pound cake. Use a diamond cutter for shaping these.

Marshmallow and Nut Sandwiches.—Toast some fresh marshmallows and mix them in a bowl with chopped English walnuts. Cut white bread in star shapes and put the paste on the lower slice only. This is the rule for all sandwiches.

Cream Cheese Sandwiches.—Get the square cheeses and see that they are perfectly fresh. Mash in a bowl to a paste, add a little sweet cream beaten up first and a teaspoonful of sauce to every cheese; salt and paprika to taste. Spread on thin fresh graham bread cut in disks. Chopped olives or shavings of pimento may be added to this filling.

Bacon Sandwiches.—Wisps of breakfast bacon, delicately broiled, make the most appetizing of sandwiches, especially if put between toasted graham bread. The small shreddings of bacon must lie on lettuce and be seasoned with paprika or red pepper. These are as appetizing cold as hot.

Tomato and Horseradish Sandwiches.—Slice a large tomato thin and sprinkle it with salt and pepper. Mix a little bottled horseradish—it can be bought at the grocer's—with a tablespoonful of olive oil. Spread thin slices of lightly buttered gluten bread with the horseradish mixture and put the tomato slices between.

Mayonnaise Sandwiches.—Make a piquant mayonnaise, using plenty of red pepper and lemon juice in the seasoning. Spread on a bit of lettuce put between fresh gluten bread trimmed of all crust. Only a little of the mayonnaise must be used, for it is likely to drip when it becomes warm.

WHITE RUINS BABIES' EYES.

Professor Tells Opticians That Color Weakens Little Ones' Sight.

Pittsburgh.—Babies' eyes are being ruined by white walls, white dresses and white carriages, said Professor F. A. Woll of Columbia university, New York, recently before the nineteenth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Optical society in a local hotel.

"If you care for the health of the youngster the worst color you can have on the walls of his nursery or bedroom is white," he said. "Babies' eyes are spoiled by white dresses and white carriages. Neutral and dark tints should be used. The dress, carriage and walls of rooms in which baby spends most of the time should be of some tan or neutral tint, either a light brown or a green gray. This applies to the dress of the nurse and the mother as well."

Scrambled Eggs With Herbs.

Put two ounces of butter and two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped white onions over the fire and cook ten minutes without browning. Add four finely chopped mushrooms and cook four minutes more; season all with white pepper and salt to taste. Beat six eggs in a bowl with a beater until very light, add four tablespoonfuls of cream and beat this in well. Put the eggs in the saucepan with onions and mushrooms and stir till eggs thicken. Then draw the saucepan to the edge of the stove and add one tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, stirring one minute more. Serve on a hot dish with a melted butter and parsley sauce.

Care of Goldfish.

A globe of two or three goldfish with a bit of green seaweed makes a pretty centerpiece. The fish are inexpensive and easily cared for. They should be placed at some distance from stove or register and not in the rays of the sun. They endure extremes of cold rather than heat. In the bottom of the globe place some small stones, a bit of sand, a little charcoal and a spray of cabomba, a fine water plant. Feed them a little at a time. Twice a week remove them to a pail of muddy water for an hour, clean the globe, replace the shells, stones, etc., and refill with [illegible].

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Little Frock of Ring Dotted Albatross.

A charming little blue and red frock for the school girl. Because it is adaptable to smart variations it is an extremely useful design.

A dark blue background with red figures forms the color scheme of this model, the trimmings being in red taffeta. The closing is effected at the side and there is a deep belt in which pockets may be inserted. For eight-year size the dress requires 3 yards 44-inch albatross, with ¾ yard taffeta.

By following the construction guide the home dressmaker will see how simple a matter it is to put the dress together. It is well to begin with the waist. First, close the right shoulder seam as notched and form tuck, creasing on lines of slot perforations in front and back; stitch 1¼ inch from folded edge. Close under-arm and left shoulder seams as notched. Turn hems at front edges of both fronts on small "o" perforations; stitch hem in right front 1¼ inch and left front 1 inch from folded edges. Center-front indicated by large "O" perforations in right front. Face collar and sew to neck edge of back and right front, notches and center-backs even; bind left neck edge.

Close the sleeve and cuff seams as notched, face the cuff and sew to sleeve, double "oo" perforations and seams even.

To make the skirt, slash first the front gore to the left of center-front on double "oo" perforations and finish for opening. Pleat front and back gores, creasing on lines of slot perforations; bring folded edges to corresponding lines of small "o" perforations; stitch 1 inch from folded edges and press. Join gores as notched. Turn hem at lower edge of skirt on small "o" perforations. Sew to lower edge of waist.

The large "O" perforation in the belt indicates the upper edge of the front section. Slash the belt on crossline of small "o" perforations; insert a pocket. Turn under edge of front section on slot perforations, lap on back section to small "o" perforations, notches even; stitch to position, leaving edges on left side free for opening.

The red piping adds much to the effectiveness of the dress.

WOODEN LEG SAVES HIM.

Farmer Escapes Serious Injuries in Fight With Bear.

Sunbury, Pa.—His wooden leg spared him severe injuries in a battle with a bear, according to John Davison, a Catawissa mountain farmer, who lives near the town of that name.

Davison, according to his story, was riding horseback along the Susquehanna river, which skirts dense mountain growths at this point, when he saw a black bear fishing in the Susquehanna. It would dive down and then come up with a fish in its mouth, he said.

Angry at his approach, Bruin dropped a fish and gave chase, but Davison drew his revolver and fired. He missed it, and the animal came on after him and bit and clawed at his wooden leg. He fired again, and then a freight train approached on a railroad near by. This, together with the tooting of the locomotive's whistle, cooled the brute's angry passions, and it dropped to its feet and ambled off, disappearing in the woods.

Trainmen declare they have frequently seen bears in this territory; and the farmer exhibited a torn pair of trousers and lacerated wooden leg to gaping inquisitors.

Arms and the Men.

"I see you have your arm in a sling," said the inquisitive passenger. "Broken, is it?"

"Yes, sir," responded the other passenger.

"Meet with an accident?"

"No. Broke it while I was trying to pat myself on the back."

"Great Scott! What for?"

"For minding my own business."

"I see. Never could happen to me, could it?"

"No."

"And if it did I wouldn't be blame fool enough to tell it."

Then there was silence in the car.—Chicago Tribune.

He Showed Them How to Do It

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

During the latter part of the last century a great deal of whisky was distilled in the Tennessee mountains on which no tax was paid. One day a man appeared among the government officials who were endeavoring to hunt down a man named Hardwick, who had been for some time running a still concealed in the mountains and had thus far foiled every effort on the part of the officials to trap him.

"What's the matter with you fellows," said the newcomer, "that you haven't got Hardwick? He's got to be taken and right away."

"All right, Mr. Barker," said Williams, the man addressed; "we'll do the job under your direction. Lead on."

Half a dozen men having been collected for the purpose, Barker started up the mountain side, followed by the others, and after a long and difficult ascent came upon a woman sitting on a rock crying bitterly.

"What's the matter?" asked Barker.

"Matter? Matter enough. Look a-yere." Pulling up her sleeve, she showed a welt that had evidently been made by a lash.

"Who did that?" asked Barker.

"My husband."

"Who is your husband?"

"Jim Hardwick."

Barker opened his eyes and looked knowingly at his men.

"Where is Hardwick?" he asked the woman.

"Reckon he's gone up to the"— She checked herself. "Who air you uns anyway?"

"I don't mind your knowing that we're revenue men, and we're going to get Jim Hardwick dead or alive!"

The woman stopped crying and looked fixedly at the men.

"I don't want you to kill him," she said, "but"—

"You mean," said Barker, "that you'd like to see him punished for his treatment of you?"

"Reckon I would."

"I'll tell you what I'll do. You help us get him and we'll give you $100."

The woman's face took on a covetous look. Barker followed up his advantage. "Show us the way to the still and keep him talking till we can surround it."

"What'll you do with him?"

"We'll turn him over to you."

He counted out ten crisp treasury notes and handed them to the woman. She took them hesitatingly, as though she did not quite like the job.

Half an hour later the revenue men, led by the woman, had come to a ravine. She paused and said: "The still's up thar. Ef you uns stop this end of the ravin' he can't git out; you got him shore." Barker dashed forward, ordering the others to follow. Williams called to him to wait a moment—perhaps the woman was deceiving them—but Barker paid no attention to him, and he went on with the rest. They found the climbing difficult, but pushed on, Barker displaying an energy that put the rest to shame. Williams alone hung back, bringing up the rear. But nothing like a still appeared. Then the men began to tire of the difficult climb and one by one fell to the rear. Barker, coming to a perpendicular cliff, stopped, waiting till the others came up. Nothing was said till Williams joined them.

"Waal?" he said doubtfully.

"Where's the woman?" asked Barker.

All looked about for her, but she was not to be seen.

"I tell you, Mr. Barker," said Williams, "where I reckon she is."

"Where?"

"With that hundred dollars you give her. And I reckon the hundred dollars is whar the still is. And I don't reckon the still is in this yere ravine neither."

There was an ominous silence.

"I reckon," said Williams, "that we uns might as well go home. Before we could find the still—and I reckon we couldn't—the hull thing would be cleaned out."

"Do you think so?" asked Barker absently. He was thinking of the hundred dollars that he had given the woman and that he had intended to charge up to the government, but that now he would not dare to mention, and it would be a dead loss to himself. He was soon convinced by the others that to try to find either the still or Hardwick or his wife would be like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Mournfully he led the way down the mountain that he had climbed with such high hopes. When he came to the place where he had first seen the woman, there she was in her cabin near by washing dishes as unconcernedly as if nothing unusual had happened.

"Did you uns git him?" she asked, with well affected interest.

No reply was made, and she continued:

"Waal, I reckon you didn't or you would have brought him along. Since I didn't help you out I reckon I orter give you back the money." She handed Barker the hundred dollars, which he took shamefacedly, then without a word continued the descent.

"Gittin' moonshiners," said Williams to Barker, "ain't such easy work, after all."

"No," said the man who had come to Tennessee to show them how to do it; "I don't say it is. Don't you fellows say anything about this affair, and I'll report to Washington that you work under [illegible] disadvantages."

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Two Thanksgiving Hints.

Cold storage turkeys naturally share all the defects of other poultry treated in this barbarous fashion. But at most times, and especially at Thanksgiving and Christmas, it is easier to find dry picked turkey free from cold storage than chicken.

For a twelve pound turkey boil until tender two pounds of large Italian chestnuts. Remove the skin and mash them as you would potatoes; mix in a half cupful of butter, salt and pepper. Fill with this the interior of the turkey; sew it and arrange for roasting as you would a chicken. It should cook about two hours. If it browns too fast butter a piece of white paper and cover it with it, removing it a little later.

Escarole.—The leaf of the escarole is narrower than the lettuce, so much so that the rib forms the greater part of it. It is, in fact, a coarse kind of chicory. The green part of it is discarded, and the white is separated, first in two, lengthwise, and cut up in three or four pieces. Not being as tender as the lettuce, it needs to be cut finer. It is prepared and dressed like lettuce.

Traffic Managers Unable to Handle Shipments of Commodities

New York.—Congestion of freight from the West to this city and through New York for export has assumed such serious proportions that the traffic managers of the trunk line roads do not know how to handle it.

The Lackawanna announced on Saturday an order designed to shut off any further receipt of freight along that line between Buffalo and New York, Following this the Pennsylvania Railroad last night issued an unexpected order which went into effect at midnight. This came from Philadelphia and was to the effect that the Pennsylvania decreed an embargo on exports of flour aond lumber at New York and also on exports of grain at Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Figures handed out by freight agents of the various railroads of the trunk lines indicate that there are more than fifty thousand loaded cars on their way to New York, and no terminal facilities to handle them. Investigation at the offices of the various railroads yesterday brought out the fact that practically every siding within two or three hundred miles of this city is occupied by freight cars which cannot be moved until the terminals here are cleared.

The announcement of the Pennsylvania Railroad last night apparently came as a surprise to its competitors. The explanation of the order is that the lumber, flour and grain now held up are slow freight in train load lots, and that owing to a scarcity of lighters and vessels for export it is impossible to take care of this class of business fast enough to clear the yards. Consequently the Pennsylvania wishes to be free to handle lighter freight and other classes of commodities demanding more expeditious attention.

What the effect is going to be on the other trunk lines was a problem last night. When the Lackawanna announced its embargo on Saturday it was supposed the other roads would get through without much trouble. The Pennsylvania following suit on some classes of business, the idea seemed to be that shippers would quickly turn to other lines and load them up to such an extent that all would be obliged to take steps to keep their lines as clear as possible.

As a responsible official of the New York Central said last night, "We are all right up to date, and business is going on as usual although our line is crowded, but if we are going to be loaded up by the other roads which can't handle their traffic we may be obliged to issue orders that will protect our regular shippers. That is a matter that cannot be foretold."

Besides the order from the Pennsylvania last night, the Baltimore and Ohio placed an embargo on iron and steel for export through New York. The explanation was the same as that given in other cases, to the effect that congested lighterage conditions at this port were such that they could not handle this heavy business and take care of other shipments demanding attention. No indication was given concerning the duration of the embargo, but it was said that the Baltimore and Ohio did not expect that it would be necessary to extend the order to any other class of goods.

It was reported last night that the New York Central and the Pennsylvania had each about 10,000 cars of merchandise either in the terminals in this city or in New Jersey or on sidings within two hundred miles of this city. The same situation was reported as regards the Erie road and the Lehigh Valley.

AD MEN INVESTIGATE TRADE SITUATION

Syracuse.—Syracuse has been selected by the Educational Research Committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World as one of the market centers of America, in which it will make a thorough investigation of exact conditions of business and the prospects for the year 1916.

Word was received yesterday by Arthur J. Brewster of the Syracuse Advertising Men's Club of his appointment to represent this city in gathering desired information, and he will undertake the work.

Giving business men an opportunity to close their books for November, in vestigators in all the leading cities of the United States and aCnada will call upon representative merchants in the principal retail lines Friday and ask a short list of questions which the committee has found to be a barometer of business conditions.

This wil lbe the second investigation of the kind under similar auspices. A year ago when business men seemed confused as to the effect of the European war would have on conditions in this country, the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, with affiliated organizations in different cities, aserted that the only true test of exact business conditions was the demand by the consumer.

ROLLER MET MOTT IN PLACE OF SHATTUCK

Doc Roller substituted for Fred Shattuck in the main wrestling bout at Sullivan's Hall last night and Iron-Neck Mott overcame Roller in the last two of the three bouts. Roller took the first after a sensational period of 18 minutes of wrestling, in which nearly every hold known in the game was tried by the contestants, only to be broken.

In withdrawing from the bout, Shattuck gave as an excuse for his action the fact that he had injured his ankle in a railroad accident. He exhibited the injured limb to the satisfaction of the wrestling club. He was thanked for having brought "Doc" Roller here to oppose Mott.

Roller is well-known in the physical culture world, having written considerable on health and hygenie.

In the preliminary bout John Ward scored an easy victory over "Kid" Russian, of East Rochester, securing the first two falls in five and three minutes respectively.

Leon McIntosh and Otis furnished the spectators with several minutes' entertainment in a "Rattle the Can" contest, which resulted in a draw.

Corn Show Finest Ever Seen Anywhere, Is View Expressed by Visitors

The apple, corn and poultry show being held in the Lewis block is drawing the attention of a number of local people. Glimpses of the beautiful green, ruby and russet apples seen through the window leads many to investigate still farther.

A great deal of merriment has been caused by would be visitors who believed the exhibit free to the public. One man desiring to speak with another just within the door unhesitatingly stepped inside and proceeded to "speak." He was soon tapped on the shoulder by another man who extended his hand in the palm of which reposed a piece of money. The visitor took a glance and smiling remarked 'it looked good to him.' A little later he received another tap on the shoulder and again the hand with the money piece was extended. The visitor took another look and asked, "What's the matter; No good?" whereupon he was advised admission is charged. The good laugh enjoyed by all was at the expense of the man who took so long to tumble.

The authorities in charge explain that a small fee is charged for entrance that expenses for arranging the exhibit may be met.

The Wallzoo Poultry yards, of Woodville, N. Y., have more than 100 entries in the poultry exhibit at the show. Pitt F. Natting is in charge of the firm's exhibits.

The largest entry in the poultry line is that of the Newton Ward Poultry Farm, of Granby Center. The Ward exhibit incluudes a black Van Auken, which took 1st prize at the last State Fair, several Van Auken pulletts, which took first and second prizes at the same show and a brown leghorn which took second prize.

There are also a 1st prize Buttercup hen, a buttercup cockerel which took second prize, also a number of gold and silver campines, white and buff leghorns.

Big Christmas Trade Indicated By Reports From All Sections

Today's New York Herald presents country-wide reports of what is to be expected between now and Christmas in the way of trade. Reports from leading centers follow:

Chicago.— Merchants and manufacturers have no fault to find with conditions in Chicago. "Times are improving and things are looking up," was the general verdict in the retil and wholesale districts today.

Chicago bank clearings for November totalled $1,481,587,796, an amount which has been exceeded only once in the city's history, the record having been made in March, 1914. November clearings this year were 27.1[illegible] per cent greater than last year.

Cincinnati —A steady improvement in business in this city and vicinity was reported today by both retail and wholesale merchants here. An officer of one of the large express companies said today that the company's business during November had resembled the rush during the holiday season.

Toledo—Increased bank clearings, expansion of many industrial plants, incorporation of scores of new concerns and expansion of mercantile houses were cited here today as reasons for believing that trade conditions have improved in this community. A canvas of thirty-three of the largest Toledo corporations showed a gain in dividends over last year of $1,411,495.

Youngstown—The weekly canvass of the steel mills of Youngstown and the Mahoning Valley today shows that every plant in the district is operating at maximum capacity. Mills have been obliged to refuse many orders. Some of the plants here have been hampered by inability to obtain enough common labor.

Atlanta—Merchants in the larger population centers of the southeastern section of the country believe that December business will be larger than for several years. Retail stores in Atlanta have laid in larger stocks than usual at this season of the year, and early Christmas trade is justifying these preparations, according to a statement today by Grover Magehee, secretary of the Atlanta Retail Merchants' Association.

Richmond—Wholesale dealers and manufacturers' agents here are distributing an enormous columne of railroad and water borne freight and express traffic in city and country and retail merchants are overrun with business. Postmaster Thornton declares enlarged postal facilities are necessary. Other Virginia cities report similar conditions of ready money and generous buying.

Montgomery, Ala.— The cotton raising territory of this State is better fixed this season than for many years, the Chamber of Commerce says. Diversification has cut down cotton totals, raised the price of the staple and lifted cotton seed to unprecedented prices, and a ready market is at hand. In manufacturing, war contracts have started up plants out of use for years.

Nashville—Practically all lines of industry are showing prosperity. One of the best financial statements issued in months by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Raidway is issued today, showing an increase for October in net operating revenues of $316,229. Jobbing and manufacturing lines are busier than in two years.

New Orleans, La.— Retail and wholesale interests in New Orleans and the territory served by this city report unusually heavy business for the fall and especially for November. [illegible] Simon, Gulf coast director of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, said reports from wholesale merchants showed increases in their November business of from fifty to one hundred per cent.

Raleigh, N. C.—Business conditions throughout North Carolina are improving rapidly, according to merchants in touch with conditions in the State. John A. Park, president of the Raleigh Chamber of Commerce, today said that a great wave of prosperity is sweeping over this section. "I firmly believe," he said, "that there is more ready money available this year for Christmas shopping than at any time in the last several years."

St. Louis, Mo.—"Retail business in St. Louis is better now than ever before," said K. F. Niemoeller, secretary of the Associated Retailers, today "November business made a record and the holiday business is opening up splendidly."

Indianapolis—For the last few weeks there has been a noticeable increase in business in Indianapolis, according to a statement made byan official of the Chamber of Commerce today. "This is shown," he said, "in the bank clearance and by the fact that the building permits and post office receipts have been larger for the last few weeks than for the corresponding weeks of a year ago.

Detroit, Mich.—Detroit's business situation this year is far better than ever before at this time, in the opinion of [illegible] H. Gitchell, secretary of the [illegible] Board of Commerce. [illegible] with work and the merchants predict record making Christmas sales, he said.

Kansas City—Big crops and increased outputs of mines and factories, all marketed at war prices, have left a profit in Kansas City trade territory which will make the Christmas shopping season just opening the most prosperous known in many years, according to E. M. Clendening, secretary of the Kansas City Commercial Club.

Dallas, Texas—Financing of the Texas cotton crop so that farmers have been able to hold their staple for a full twelve cents a pound was the explanation given today for excellent early trade in this territory. Bank deposits show big increases. Local merchants declare their trade at this time is much better than for the last two years.

St. Paul, Minn.—Considerable improved business in nearly all lines has been noted by leading bankers, wholesalers and railroad men through out the Central Northwest, according to business men here who are in a position to judge. They declare that most propitious business conditions prevail in Minnesota, North Dakata, South Dakota, and Northern Wisconsin.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Improved conditions in all lines of trade were reported today. Bank clearings for the month just closing top November, 1914, figures by $8,195,000. Local flour mills, closing today the first quarter of the 1915-16 crop year, will have shipped out by midnight 6,400,000 barrels, making a new high record by more than $1,000,000 barrels for any previous ninety-day period.

Denver, Col.—Wholesale and industrial firms report business conditions throughout the Rocky Mountain States exceptionally prosperous, with money easy and collections improved over the last few years. Abundant crops, a rising market for silver and zinc and good prices for other metals have resulted in enlarged activities in farming and mining districts.

Alderman's Loss Partly Covered by Insurance; Firemen Return to Scene

In spite of the hard work performed by the fire department during the sixteen hours spent at the scene of yesterday's early morning fire which destroyed the Alderman warehouse, another run had to be made [illegible] at 10 o'clock. At that time a pedestrian noticing signs of fire in the ruins sent to the headquarters an alarm. When the department reached it was necessary to play a stream of water on the smouldering debris. This was done all night and this forenoon.

Coroner Cusack before calling together a jury in the case of Leon J. Hammond, the fireman who lost his life while in the performance of his duty, made a trip to the burned storehouse. He questioned the firemen who were working with Hammond, and made a careful examination of the spot where Hammond was caught under the tumbling walls. An examination of the body revealed a fracture at the base of the skull as well as a fractured jaw. A verdict of accidental death followed.

It is the opinion of the firemen that the walls were forced out after the bales of paper had become watersoaked, a strong side pressure being carried on the walls. The storehouse roof was of wood and when the firemen arrived, there was no trace left of it.

The cause of the fire is unknown. One theory is that a spark from a locomotive [illegible] on the wooden [illegible] evening and there [illegible] until it had eaten its way [illegible] the combustible bales of paper.

The firemen were hampered in their fight by bales of paper which were packed in the storehouse and which prevented their [illegible] into the building.

A small insurance was carried on the building and its contents, Mr. Alderman said, and he will suffer a heavy loss.

The concrete building which was destroyed Monday night was built to replace a structure that stood on the same spot prior to a fire three years ago.

The funeral of Leon J. Hammond will be held Friday morning at 9 o'clock from the house, 11 N. 3rd st., and from the Church of the Immaculate Conception at 9:30. Burial will be made at St. Mary's, the Rev. John Lindsman officiating. A number of members of the old volunteer hook and ladder corps, of which Mr. Hammond was a member, will attend the funeral.

Denies Empire Faces Starvation; Reichstag May Tax War Profits

Berlin—The opening of the Reichstag today was marked by an address of welcome by the President, Dr. Kaempf, in which he complimented Germany on the highly satisfactory military situation in thew est and east and the successful ending of the Serbian campaign, and a speech by the Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, Dr. Karl Helfferich, in introducing a bill arranging the preliminaries for the taxation of war profits.

Dr. Helfferich urged the speedy discussion of the bill so that no war profits could escape taxation and promised an actual measure on the taxation of war profits for the next sitting of the Reichstag in March.He intimated that it would impose a graduated scale of taxation based on the amount of the war profits and also would include a tax on incomes which had increased during the war, but he gave no indication of the extent of the prospective taxation.

The Secretary said the government itself had as yet reached no conclusion on the taxation rate and it obviously would be unfair to make it confiscatory or regard the project, as some wish to do, as a punishment for daring to make profits during the war The primary object of the measure was to raise revenue toward covering the colossal expenditures of the war, and for this purpose a considerable percentage of war profits must, and should, pass into the government's coffers.

The bill was referred to a committee.

The President's opening remarks to the House, which, as on previous occasions, showed a large proportion of members in army gray, were heard with enthusiasm.

In opening the Reichstag the President, Dr. Kaempf, said:

"While in the west the enemy's attempt to break through, undertaken with strong force, failed when confronted with the contempt of death of our troops and their commanders; while in the east the German and Austro-Hungarian armies hold with an iron grip what they have won in battles, which were bodly planned and heroically carried out; while on the Isonzo the Italians by force of arms are attempting to conquer the best part of what before the war they could have got from Austria without striking a blow; in the Balkans feats of arms have been accomplished and events have occurred, which, from both a military and diplomatic point of view, have been carried thorugh with splendid and unsurpassed certanity and which have enabled us, in combination with our allies and with the Bulgarian army, to avenge the murder of Sarajevo and to bring to an end, as we hope, for all time the Serbian intrigues, which have proved to be so mischievous to Europe.

"In close union of arms with the brave armies of the King of Bulgaria and the Bulgarian people we have crowned our victory. We welcome this from the bottom of our hearts. The Serbian army has been triumphantly defeated. The Turkish army has lived up to its old reputation and has brought about the failure of the Dardanelles enterprise.

"Proud England is troubled about the key to her supremacy. All our enemies have recognized that we are invincible on the battlefield, so the more eagerly do they cling to their hope to destroy us economically, to conquer us by hunger. As they allow themselves to be deceived regarding our financial strength, which has been proved b ythe astonishing results of our war loans, so they also have been deceived in their estimate of our economic strength.

"We have corn for bread. Potatoes, the most important food of the people, are abundant. If in other things there may be a scarcity, as cannot be disputed, yet the hardships thus caused to a majority of the poorer population will be surmounted by the organization of thep rovision market. We, therefore, financially and economically, have every reason to contemplate the future with firm determination and unshaken confidence."

The Reichstag then adopted the final reading of the bill, modifying certain features of martial law, giving the option of a fine instead of imprisonment for minor offences.

There was no debate, although the socialist member, Herr Scheidemann,

Italy Wages Fiercest Battle of War; Driving Teutons Back to River

London.—Italy is nobly doing her part in the world war for freedom the domination of German militarism. Though not so much is heard of her glorious battles as of the operations on other fronts, the fighting along the Isonzo heights has been the longest and fiercest of the whole war.

For months General Cadorna's soldiers have been scaling almost inaccessible mountains, dragging big guns by hand up paths hewn in the rock, over precipices impassable even to mules, until they now dominate all the crests on the west bank of the river and hold ground on the east from Gorizia to the Adriatic, attacking the Austrian bridgeheads and mountain positions and slowly but surely driving the foe from the strong holds of Tolmino, Gorizia and Doberdo.

From the heights of SaSnta Lucia, Monte San Michele and Mount Sei Busi already their guns are battering to pieces the carefully prepared Austrian positions. Gorizia is reported in ruins, the civilian population has evacuted the town and, in spite of reported reinforcements, its fall is near. Doberdo, encompassed on three sides, can hardly hold out much longer, and Tolmino, threatened on the north as well as south, will most likely be in Italian hands before the new year.

All this has a direct bearing on the Balkan conflict, for it keeps a large force of Austrians from being thrown into the scale against Serbia and Montenegro and compels the sending of a steady stream of reinforcements to replace the killed and wounded, which could otherwise be effectively employed against the little Balkan allies.

The Serbians, 250,000 strong, have escaped from the Teuton-Bulgar net between Novibazar and Pristina, with all their mountain batteries and part of their field guns, and taken refuge in the fastnesses of the Albanian mountains. The Serbian government, following the evacution of Prisrend, has established itself at Scutari, and arms, equipment and supplies are being rapidly forwarded through Albania, so that in time the Serbian army, rejuvenated and joined by the Allies, will be able once more to clear their land of the invaders.

KITCHENER UNDER FIRE AT GALLIPOLI

London. — Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, the Secretary of War, returned to London yesterday from his trip to the Near East.

Lord Kitchener will meet his colleagues in the War Council of the Cabinet tomorrow. At that time he will convey to them the results of his observations on the battle fronts and his conferences at the capitalls of the countries to which he journeyed.

The trip of Lord Kitchener to the Anzac region of the Gallipoli front is described in a press despatch from Alexandria. No announcement had been made in advance except to the staff, but news of Lord Kitchener's landing spread like wildfire. Soldiers rushed from their dugouts, tumbling over one another in their haste to reach the beach.

The moment Lord Kitchener stepped ashore there was ag reat outburst of cheering. The War Secretary spoke to the soldiers of King George's appreciation of their services, saying they had done even better than had been expected.

Lieutenant General Birdwood, the temporary British commander at the Dardanells, accompanied Lord Kitchener on an inspection of the British position.

The War Secretary strode up the steep paths and along the firing line with hardly more effect than one of the young colonials, being in splendid trim. He stopped frequently to speak with the men in the trenches, heedless of danger. He visited one position only twenty yards from the Turks.

Lord Kitchener met the Australian and New Zealand divisional commanders, brigadiers and the other important officers and obtained a good idea of the situation before leaving.

PROGRESS OF RELIGION

The Methodist church last year added nearly 105,000 to its membership, making the total more than 4,000,000 in this country. There isn't much evidence of the decline of religion in these figures. It is readily demonstrated both by church reports and the quickened conscience on every hand that religion is more real and progressive in this country than ever before. There is a greater demand for religious literature than ever. There is more brotherhood of man spent in this country than in any age and more concern about holy things. —Watertown Standard.

BALD HEADS, TOO

There is always someone to take the joy out of life. A few days ago a Wisconsin physician stated that after making a life-long study of insanity he had not found, except with one exceptiod, an insane man who was bald-headed. That seemed to make bald-headed men secure and happy. Now comes Dr. Williams Mabon, formerly superintendent of the Ogdensbury state hospital and Dr. Charles F. McDonald, a distinguished alienist, who declare that the proportion of bald heads inside and outside of insane hospitals is about the same. So there are no compensations for the bald-headed man after all.—Watertown Times.

TWO CLASSES OF INVASIONS

It is not a foreign war and invasion by English, German or Russian troops that America has to fear, and for which the administration is calling for billions of debt in taxes and bonds. Those war-cursed nations when they get through with the present "Kilkenny fight to the death" will be so impovrished they can't raise armies or fleets for a generation.

But there is an industrial invasion from those devastated nations which is to be feared. When devilish war is over their people will return to their industries, and mothers and sisters will replace their stricken husbands and sons in the shops and fields and wages, if possible, will be lower than ever.

The surplus will be dumped on to the American markets and the age-long shibboleth of the Sunny South—"Buy where you can buy the cheapest," and emphasized in the destructive Wilson Tariff of the Cleveland administration and in the Bryan-Underwood Tariff of the Wilson administration, will cut the throat of American industrial workers, except those who bow to king cotton and tobacco. It is not a two and one-half millions of armed troopers in the land and billions of war debt in time of peace that America needs, but a Tariff high enough to Protect every wage earner or individual in field, mine or shop from the competition of products produced by the poverty-stricken workers in foreign lands, East, West or South.—Independence (Kan.) Tribune.

WHERE THE COMMISSION PLAN SUITS A CITY

Is Commission-Manager form of government going out of fashion? Not much is heard of the subject these days—that is, within the precincts of Fulton, once the hotbed of discussions pro and con. But perhaps the subject may bob up again, although The Evening Times prefers to believe in the Lewis administration; that it will be productive of less cause for complaint than some of its predecessors.

During the now almost forgotten campaign for Commission-Manager form of government one not infrequently heard it said that the cities submitted for observation under the workings of the new plan were too far away for proper inspection, and, that in no instance had the new system been in use long enough to determine its valule.

Sunday's issue of the New York Times is authority for a lot of information concerning Jersey City, where the commission form of government is just ending two and one-half years of successful existence. Jersey City is now the largest city in the Union to adopt commission government, but after January 1, 1916, the honor will be shifted to Buffalo.

The new plan of municipal management has been more widely applied in New Jersey than in any other State. Woodrow Wilson first broached the subject in an official way in his first annual message to the Legislature, in which he recommended a uniform charter which municipalities might use after first submitting the question to the voters. The Legislature, after considerable contention, adopted the commission charter, as the Walsh act.

Jersey City soon followed Trenton which first took up the plan and its success in New Jersey's largest city gave impetus to the movement. Bayonne, Hoboken, and a number of smaller communities, joined the procession. According to all reports the taxpayers are well pleased. Even in Hoboken where the first application of the plan fell into the hands of its enemies the consensus among the men who pay the city bills is that Hoboken is better off than under the old system.

In Jersey City, as elsewhere in cities of the country, the change of government had its origin in dissatisfaction with the old order of things. The streets got into bad condition and a citizens' committee appointed to protest and demand relief was driven from pillar to post, very much as were the citizens who succeeded in halting the proceedings which would have resulted in widening East First st., between Rochester and Broadway, last summer. Responsibility for the bad conditions in Jersey City could not be fixed and the citizens' committee got no satisfaction. Like sensible people, the committee abandoned its efforts to reform the administration and started a propaganda for commission government. The plan carried by a large majority.

Immediately things began to happen. One of the first resolutions passed by the commissioners was to make all meetings public. No "star-chamber sessions" were permissable, and the former long-neglected assembly room became crowded to suffocation. The people were interested in their government, and no wonder, for the reason that their commissioners represented everyone of them, and not the residents of a respective ward.

Mayor Fagan, or President-Mayor and the Director of Public Affairs, was successful in offering many propositions that were startling, because they were foreign to the traditions of the politics of the city. In discussing Jersey City's general progress, one of the officials says as follows:

"In the Fire Department, where the horses were the despair of the city veterinary, new horses are being installed pending a general motorization of the department. The somewhat antiquated apparatus is being replaced with modern engines.

"The Water Department from being a liability has been made an asset. The commission inherited approximately $250,000 water debt. This year, according to Commissioner Brensinger, it will get about $400,000 revenue.

"The older public schools, many of which are veritable fire traps are being gradually eliminated. The commission plans to spend $3,000,000 for new schools, which will bring the seating capacity of the public schools considerably above the present demand.

"In the Police Department the old time sway of the "benevolent associations" is being eliminated, and it is generally admitted that the department is absolutely free from organized graft. The back rooms of saloons have been wholly done away with under excise regulations established by the commission. Sunday law enforcement is on a "liberal" basis.

"The city hospital was found to be defective in equipment. Not only was there lack of beds but there were not enough sheets for the beds that existed. The surgical equipment had to be practically replaced. The new commission is planning an addition to cost $350,000, to contain a ward for children and an isolated ward for tubercular patients.

"The net bonded indebtedness as our budget shows, is actually lower than at the close of the last Administration, even though we have borrowed $843,000 for school purposes and $268,000 for general purposes."

Surely the foregoing affords food for the thoughtful opponents of an improved form of government in Fulton.

NEW YORK CROP NOTES

In New York state the largest farm receipts come in November and December, and the smallest in February. Counting only sales of crops however, 50 per cent of the receipts come in the last three months of the calendar year, and the lowest percentage of crop sales in June.

New York leads this year in the total production of cabbage, followed by Wisconsin, which has about a third as much. Eight states, New York, Wisconsin, Ohio, Michigan, Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, and Minnesota in the order named contain more than half the total cabbage area in the United States.

New York is one of the three leading states in the commercial production of peppermint and spearmint, according to the federal department of agriculture. It is outranked by Michigan and Indiana, where the mints are grown on muck soils. Most of that grown in New York is on upland in Wayne county. More than 300 pounds of the plants are required to yield one pound of oil.

Of the various New York crops, that of corn is slightly less than last year, with the price to the producer six cents less per bushel. There are 2,000,000 bushels more of wheat this year than last, with the price about five cents less on the bushel. Oats made 54,000,000 bushels last year; barley 2,500,000 as against 2,100,000 in 1914; apples 8,500,000 bushels as against 16,500,000 in 1914. The average price to the producer, however, is $2.25 a barrel as against $1.40 a year ago.

The production of wheat, rye, barley and oats in the northern hemisphere is approximately one-fifth larger, for each crop, than last year, according to statistics from the international institute of agriculture at Rome, Italy. Denmark is the only country with less than last year's crop of wheat; Italy and the Netherlands have fallen off in rye prodiction; Denmark, Great Britain, and Roumania have less barley than in 1914; and Scotland and the Netherlands, less oats. Figures are missing for Austria, Belgium, France, and Germany. Four continents are represented: Europe, America, Asia and Africa. Tunis is the one country listed in Africa; India and Japan represent Asia.

ITALIAN CHURCH TO BE STARTED

Oswego Priest Here Yesterday—Mass Meeting Soon to Plan for Future Work.

The Rev. Father Germania, an Italian priest of Oswego, was in this city yesterday arranging for a meeting of several of the prominent Italians of Fulton to formulate plans for the organization of an Italian church here.

Father Germania's visit is the result of a canvass which was ordered made by Bishop Grimes, of Syracuse, to ascertain the number of Italian residents of this city. Frank Zaia, Italian leader of Fulton, made the canvass in the early Fall and he reported an Italian population approximating 700, which is deemed sufficient by the Bishop to maintain a church.

Father Germania, Frank Zara and Frank Massaro held a conference yesterday, and the two local men will shortly announce the date for a mass meeting to be held in the City Hall, to which every Italian resident of this city is invited.

The visiting priest is enthusiastic over the proposition and he has volunteered to aid in getting the movement under way. In case the finances of the new parish will not permit the keeping of a priest here, arrangements will be made to have Father Germania hold services in both cities.

An Italian church was organized in Oswego only six months ago and Father Germania placed at the head of it, and already the church is a permanent success. The Italian population of Oswego is about double that of this city.

SEX STORIES vs. DIME NOVELS

The appreciative word said for the dime novel by a Kansas professor at the National Council of English Teachers, will perhaps shock an older generation of readers. Can any good thing in the way of literature or morals possibly come out of the Nick Carter and Old Cay Collier brand of fiction? Yet according to this critic, yellowback novels did less harm to the youthful mind than the magazine sex stories. "These sex stories," he says, "which are found on the reading table of nearly every family, fail to develop the heroic in children." They make molly-coddles of boys, while "it is the story of Jesse James and Nick Carter that leads them to read 'Ivanhoe,' the Indian and sea stories of Cooper and the novels of Stevenson."

This is not what old-time parents, let alone public edicators, once thought of the "literature" that was surreptitiously devoured by boys. But the character of popular fiction has changed to a degree which makes the yellow covered tales of adventure appear wholesome by contrast. Bad as the dime novels were in style and plot, they were not as corrupting as the modern sex story. They contained plenty of villainy, but virtue was still virtue in their pages, and they were free from sex consciousness and the insidious influence of morbid emotionalism.

The vindication of the dime novel comes late in the day and is only a half-way vindication at that; it is merely a less noxious form of juvenile literature than that which has succeeded it. But it is something to know that it was a literature that made men of its boyish devotees and not fops.—N. Y. World.

JEWISH PEOPLE OBSERVE FEAST OF HANUKKAH

The Jewish people of this vicinity will celebrate this evening the festival of Hanukkah, or the Feast of Lights, which will commence at sunset and continue for the next eight days. The observance of the feast does not call for the closing of business places, or cessation of the usual occupations.

The festival of Hanukkah was established for historic reasons and celebrates the victories of the Maccabees over the Syrians. It is one of thef. avorites in the Jewish calendar, Besides its high significance for men and women, it is also a children's holiday and the religious schools celebrate it with elaborate festivities and great heartiness. In the homes songs accompany the kindling of the lights and the ritual of the synagogue is enhanced by the recital of selected psalms. The social amenities of the week are happy and cheerful and, in accordance with the genial spirit of the festival, comprise enteretainment and benevolences in the home and community.

SEAT SALE HEAVY FOR TONIGHT'S OPERA

At the Quirk tonight the Aborn Opera company will be seen in its much talked of Parisian version of Balfe's greatest work "The Bohemian Girl." That music lovers and theatergoers generally approve of the innovations introduced by Milton and Sargent Aborn in their highly spectacular revival of this favorite old opera is best attested to by the rounds of applause that are nightly bestowed on them. Newspaper writers wherever the opera in its present form has been given have been most lavish in their praise of the Messrs. Aborn's enterprise. To those who have only seen Balfe's work in its old form it would seem entirely out of place to introduce a troupe of acrobats, geese, monkies, dogs, chickens, etc., and still those who have seen both the old and the Aborn modern version have wondered why these seeming incongruities have not always been parts of "The Bohemian Girl" so consistently do they fit. A specially selected cast, orchestra and ballet and immense chorus combine to make this one of the most important organizations on tour, Cast includes Henry Taylor, Mildred Rogers, George Dunstan; Francis Tyler and Ralph Nicholls, Edith Allan.

Styles of Architecture.

In their architecture the Moresque strove for the negation of the weight altogether. The Egyptian placed the weight firmly on the ground; the Greek lifted it up in the air with an assertion of graceful power. The Roman confused weight and support; the Byzantine represented weight without support; the Moor suggested that there was no weight at all.

PRIZES AWARDED FOR SEAL SALES

Attorney F. S. Spangle, in charge of distributing Red Cross Christmas seals to the schools, announces a series of prizes which will be awarded to the pupils, as follows:

For selling 10 seals, a modern health certificate will be issued; for selling 25 seals, a pin will be awarded and to the boy or girl who disposes of 100, a medal will be given.

In distributing the seals to the schools, Mr. Spangle will enlist the co-operation of the several faculties.

Messrs. Grove Gilbert and James Robinson have been delegated to supply the stores with seals; H. H. Keeler the manufacturers; and H. F. VanSanford is in charge of the advertising.

The Fulton Committee on the Prevention of Tuberculosis, which includes Mr. H. L. Paddock, president; Dr. E. A. Galdman, secretary, and Glenn J. Streeter, agent, has arranged for a wide distribution of the seals throughout the city. Practically every lodge, church, school, and office will be canvassed. The secretaries of the different lodges will receive a lot of seals this week to be sold to the lodge members.

Attorney Spangle furnishes the following information relative to the distribution of the seals:

"The seals are sold at one cent each and those who purchase them assist in providing the means by which a large number of consumptives throughout the State receive proper care and by which much constructive educational and preventive work is carried on. Many hospitals, sanatoriums [illegible] largely to the pioneer work of the Christmas seals.

"We enclose a stamped envelope so that without expense or trouble you may send payment for the seals enclosed or return them. Many friends send $2.00 or $5.00 for more seals than they can use as a contribution to this splendid work. Each payment will be acknowledged with a Christmas card which will also serve as a notice to canvassers that you are supplied with seals.

"In behalf of the many whom you will help by buying these seals, we heartily thank you for whatever amount you send."

MR. ROOSEVELT OUT OF REP-PROGRESSIVE RACE

New York—Following the example of Justice Charles E. Hughes, Theodore Roosevelt yesterday wrote to the Secretary of State of Nebraska, withdrawing as a candidate for President at the republican primary election there next April, Mr. Roosevelt's name, like that of Justice Hughes, had been proposed by petition.

Mr. Roosevelt's letter of withdrawal followed the call of Frank P. Corrick, chairman of the Progressive State Committee of Nebraska at his Oyster Bay home. Mr. Corrick is understood to have told Mr. Roosevelt that progressives there did not look with favor on the use of his name as a republican candidate.

WOMAN SUES TO GET BACK INVESTMENT

New York—Cecile Taylor yesterday sued George Foster Peabody and Spencer Trask & Co. for $1,100.

Miss Taylor, a stenographer for many years, saved $3,000. As her health was poor she consulted "Dr. Alsop, a clergyman," for whom she was then working, about invesfing her money. She says he referred her to George Foster ePabody, "a good and charitable man who made a practice of helping deserving people. Mr. Peabody referred her to Spencer Trask & Co. She invested her $3,000 through this company.

In 1911 a bond she had bought matured and the firm invested $1,100 for her in eleven shares of Pierce, Butler & Pierce Company stock.

She was not advised at that time, she says, that Trask was floating a new issue of $1,000,000 in stock for this company. The company became insolvent in 1913 and her stock failed to pay dividends.

She asks the court to compel the defendants to repay her $1,100.

BURGLARIES PUZZLE MT. VERNON POLICE

Mount Vernon, N. Y.—As a result of a series of burglaries which has terrorized the residential section of Westchester county along the New Haven Railroad, every available policeman from Mount Vernon to Greenwich, Conn., has been detailed to work on the mystery.

Almost nightly in the last two months residences have been entered and money and jewelry stolen. The thief—for everything points to his working alone—enters the upper section of the house while the residents are at doinner,and he has been known to go into a room adjoining the dining room in which a family sat at the table and remove valuable articles of jewelry.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

MAN, 74, RECOVERS FROM BROKEN SKULL

New York— Physicians familiar with his case were amazed yesterday when the announcement was made at the Knickerbocker Hospita l that Henry Mosier, prominent as an artist, will leave the institution this morning and go to his home, at No. 48 West Eigthy-ninth street. The surprise was caused by the fact that Mr. Mosier, who is seventy-four years old, entered the hospital two weeks ago with a severe compound fracture at the base of his skull. On account of his age his recovery is considered little less than miraculous, according to Dr. Frederick H. Mosier, his son, who has been in charge of the case.

New Skirt With Hip Yoke and Pockets.

A five-gored skirt of unusually good design, trimmed with a hip-yoke and pockets, the lower edge of the yoke having a pointed outline.

Women of fashion are showing enthusiasm over the delightfully smart skirts that continue to appear in unbroken succession in the world of dress. One of the newest effects is the hip-yoke, with pointed pockets at the side, used on five-gored models such as is shown here. The skirt closes at the center-back, and the yoke is capable of charming variation, especially as regards the finish of its lower edge. In medium size the skirt requires 3 yards 54-inch material, with ⅝ yard less if the hip yoke is omitted.

In cutting out the skirt mistakes may be avoided by closely studying the cutting guide. It will be noticed that the front gore is laid on the lengthwise fold of the material, just to the right of the back gore, which is on a lengthwise thread. The side gore is placed next to the back gore, the upper edges almost meeting, and in the space created by sloping the side gore the pocket is laid on a lengthwise thread. The yoke, which is placed to the extreme right of the goods, is laid on a lengthwise fold.

If the home dressmaker prefers a deep yoke with rounded lower edge, cut off the lower edge on small "o" perforations. The short yoke is obtained by cutting off the lower edge of the pattern on double "oo" perforations.

This is a type of skirt that will look well at all times. As a part of a three-piece suit it is stylish and as a separate model nothing more chic could be desired. The ingenious woman readily sees the possibilities offered for trimming the skirt. A band of fur may finish the lower edge, or deep folds of velvet may be stitched above the hem. A braid trimming is also effective.

Every Home Needs a Faithful Cough and Cold Remedy

When seasons change and colds appear—when you first detect a cold after sitting next to one who has sneezed, then it is that a tried and tested remedy should be faithfully used. "I never wrote a testimonial before, but, I know positively that for myself and family, Dr. King's New Discovery is the best cough remedy we ever used and we have tried them all." 50c and $1.00 a bottle.

FREE SEEDS, PEAS AND ALFALFA, FOR FARMERS

Congressman Luther W. Mott of Oswego, who is in Washington for the opening of the fifty-fourth session of Congress, has secured from the United States Department of Agriculture a limited number of packages of Crimm-alfalfa seed, and a somewhat larger number of packages of an improved variety of field peas. He will be pleased to send those interested in agriculture experiment one of the packages of either alfalfa seed or peas as long as the supply lasts. The first to apply will be considered, as the supply is limited and there are no more to be secured from this source. Names should be sent to the Congressman in Washington, as soon as possible, and the seeds will be distributed, with directions as to planting and care, in time for planting in the spring. There is a proviso attached to the distribution—that is, it is requested that only those especially interested in the two seeds mentioned ask for them and that the recipients watch developments closely and report results to the Department at Washington.

The Congressman, during the coming session, as during those of the past, will be pleased to hear from any residents of the district on pending legislation, or their views on either public matters or those of local interest claiming the attention of Congress.

NOT PLEASANT

James M. Lynch, State Industrial Commissioner, went on a trip to San Francisco at the expense of the State. It was a "business trip" for the purpose of attending some meeting that had been arranged for industrial commissioners or something of that sort. It was in fact, nothing more or less than a junket, paid for by the money of the people.

In testimony given by him before the district attorney in New York who is investigating the loss of life in a Diamond factory, Mr. Lynch told about his absence on this trip, and it was brought out that he made three side trips, but he added that he had paid his own expenses on those side trips. At a subsequent session, however, the vouchers for his expenses on these side trips were shown Mr. Lynch, and he admitted that he had forgotten about it, that his mind had failed him in this particular, and that he had improperly charged certain expenses to the State. However, on the suggestion of the lawyer, Mr. Lynch said that he would reimburse the State for the money drawn by him for expenses on these side trips.

Such reading as this is not pleasant. It is one of those occurrences that goes to show that in many instances where one would not expect it, the public office-holder will extort every possible dollar out of the State or county and often that dishonesty will be resorted to secure it.—Utica Observer.

Singing the Praise of Chamberlain's Tablets

Mrs. Ernest Crooks, Camillus, N. Y., says, "I have been singing the praise of Chamberlain's Tablets in the ears of my neighbors and friends ever since I used them about five years ago. Prior to that I had suffered a good deal from indigestion, sick headache and biliousness due to a torpid liver. Chamberlain's Tablets acted like magic, affording me quick relief. After using two or three bottles of them I am in perfect health."

LEROY'S MEN CONFIDENT OF VICTIM SUNDAY

The Nondescripts practiced last night in preparation for Sunday's game with the Shakespeare team at Oswego.

A side bet of $300 has been placed on the game, the Oswegonians basing their confidence in their team on the strengthened lineup.

The None have already met and defeated the Oswego team this season and they will use the same lineup in Sunday's game as was used in the early part of the season.

Chronic Constipation

This disorder is often due to a torpid liver. All that is needed is a few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets to invigorate the liver. Mrs. Wm. H. Clark, Hannibal, N. Y., writes, "I was a victim of constipation, sick headache and poor digestion when I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets a year ago. I took two bottles of them and they strengthened my digestion, regulated my bowels and toned up my system generally."

31 KILLED IN POWDER MILL EXPLOSION

Wilmington Officials Say Blame Cannot Be Attached to German Agents—Bodies Blown so Fragments.

Wilmington, Del.—Thirty-one men were killed and six injured when 8,000 pounds of powder exploded in a packing house in the upper Hagley yard of E. I. Dupont, De Nemours & Co., near here, this afternoon. The packing house was of frame, 18 by 20 feet, one story high.

The cause of the explosion is not known, though there are various reports of activities of agencies opposing shipment of munitions to the Allies.

According to a statement issued by the company the origin "probably will always remain a mystery." Nevertheless, a most searching investigation has been started by the officials of the company. Every employe who was near the building that was blown to pieces will be subject to thorough examination in the hope that some clew to the cause may be learned.

Du Pont officials say there is not a shred of evidence upon which to hang any theory of German effort to cripple a plant aiding the Allies.

Two Slight Blasts at First

At half-past one o'clock a slight explosion was heard in the neighborhood, followed by another one a trifle heavier, which was quickly succeeded by a terrific blast that not only rocked the whole valley, but shock and startled Wilmington. Work men ran from every building and shack in thew ide area which the company's plant covers. A great column of smoke rose from the spot where the packing house stood, and when the cloud disappeared there was a big hole in the ground.

The packing house was blown in pieces as were other structures nearby. There were twenty-five men at wor kin the packing house. None survived.

The men were literally blown to pieces, not esnough of any body, except one, being found to enable identification. The others killed were outside the building. For hours after the explosion workmen were busy with buckets and baskets picking up arms, legs and remnants of r scattered for a quarter of a mile over the surrounding country.

Body Blown Across Creek

The only body identified among those known to have been in the packing house is that of Alan Thaxter, a foreman. The trunk of his body was blown across the Brandywine Creek and was identified by hreds of clothing that clung to the flesh.

The dead are James Baird, Benjamin Barber, Marge Bricotti, Elmer Culpton, James Egner, Harry Elliott, Elmer Fox, Norman Fisher, James Gemlil, Nelson Howgate, J. Haber, Fred Jeffry, Battle Kelleher, Edward King, James Malloy, Bryan O'Connor Harry Place, Gimi Silvestri, Paul Smack, John Smack, Wesley Simpson, E. Springfield, Allan A. Thaxter, Leslie Timmons, W. Wein, Elmer Mace, Patrick Hanrahan, Clarence Pleasanton, Lewis oBker, William Oliver and one man thus far uniden-tified.

The injured are Edward Davis, F. F. Ware, P. J. Sykes, W. H. Oliver, J. Raymond Meredith and one man unidentified.

Lammott DuPont, director of the black powder operating department, and E. H. Ford, general superintendent of the same department, were at the yard soon after the explosion and began the investigation.

125 CASUALTIES RESULT OF SHOOTING SEASON

Chicago.—Fifty-nine dead and sixty-six injured is the toll in eighteen States for the shooting season which ended today, ac compared with 111 dead and 162 wounded a year ago. Last year's statistics were gathered from seventeen States in the Union and one province in Canada.

Michigan, as during the last several years, leads in the number of dead, with fourteen. The season in Illinois produced twelve deaths, while in Wisconsin nine sportsmen have been reported killed.

Accidential discharge of guns again claimed a majority of the victims in the various States, while many persons in the deer dsitricts took pot shots at what they believed to be game, only to learn they had shot down fellow sportsmen.

The fact that there were fewer sportsmen this season than ever before is advanced as the most plausible reason for the low castalty list.

Trial Results in Test of Competency of Supt. of Battle Island Mill

Mr. Louis W. Emerick was the chief witness at yesterday's trial of the Battle Island Paper company against the State of New York, to determine the correctness of the claim for $1,875,000 for loss of power due to the construction of the Barge canal.

The examining attorney, Edward J. Mone, endeavored to show by the questions he asked Mr. Emerick his figures on operating the Rumsey Mill at Seneca Falls, given when the testified in that case were excessively high, when compared with the ones he has presented during the present trial. The witness, after much arguing, stated that he had followed a different system in computing the two sets of figures.

Mr. Emerick informed the Court that he took a different view of the situation.

Justice Rodenbecker, after Mr. Emerick had told of the two systems of commuting figures and deriving conclusions, asked him if it wasn't the general rule in all cases to include the interest charges in figuring the cost of operation of a plant, to which Mr. Emerick replied that it was the usual method of procedure in such cases.

Several attempts were made toward the end of the morning session to find out from Mr. Emerick the value of the power at the Battle Island dam, as compared with nearby plants. When suggestions were submitted to him, relative to the comparative values, the witness declared he didn't care to answer until he had gone over the figures.

"Do you wish to be understood to testify that the labor cost would be precisely the same if the men worked 310 days in the year or 365 days?" asked Mr. Mone.

"Why yes," said the witness, "I plan for full operations every [illegible]."

Mr. Emerick admitted that his tabulations were not all exactly minute or detailed; that in some instances general estimates were

Northcliffe Proposes to Organize New Party to Fight Government

London—Lord Northcliffe's Times cheers up Great Britain this morning by the announcement that at Monastir the situation of the Serbians, with the Bulgarians pressing from the southeast almost on the Greek frontier, is critical. The Bulgarians, the Times also reports, have cut the Monastir-Saloncia Railway at Kanali. The booty captured by the Bulgarians at Prisrend, according to the Times, comprised 50 field guns, 20,000 rifles, 148 automobiles and a large quantity of other materials. Further it announces that the Bulgarians have captured from 15,000 to 17,000 Serbian prisoners.

To add to Great Britain's jubilation the Times declares there is considerable doubt about the assurances given by the Greek government to the Allies, and that King Constantine is in thorough agreement with his government.

The Daily Mail adds to the joy of the hour by featturing the Bulgarian boast that "the battle of Prisrend, where we captured the remains of the Serbian army, will marke the end of our campaign against Serbia.

The Mail then, in a double leaded article, tells the wage earners that the government intends to borrow half their extra earnings due to war bonuses, and after inspiring the British public with the news that Mr. Lloyd George is ill, it cheers it further by the announcement that only theremnantsare left of the once splendid Serbian army.

When in addition Britain is informed this morning that Lord Charles Beresford presided at a meeting yesterday to organize a new national party, led by Sir Edward Carson, to attack the government which is conductiong then ation's greatest war, is it any wonder the man in the street asks:—"Why, if the Department of Munitions has cartridges to spare, are not some of them used in the Tower of London to silence forever those in England who are doing more for Germany than her troops on the battlefields?"

A redeeming feature of them ud slinging campaign against the government is the announcement by the Morning Post, preliminary to assailing Sir John Simon for his attack on Lord Northcliffe's gloom spreaders, as it assailed Lord Kitchener, Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill, Mr. Asquith and every one who is doing a man's work for freedom's cause, that it confesses to a sense of degradation.

Italians to Hold Mass Meeting in Favor of New Church Organization

Messrs. Frank Zaia and Frank Massaro are leaders of the committee which is expected to bring about the organization here of an Italian Catholic church, and they have sent to the [illegible] Italian residents of the city invitations to be present at the City Hall Sunday night at 7:30, when plans will be discussed preliminary to effecting the organization.

The two gentlemen will be chairmen of the meeting, and the Rev. Father Ceramia of Oswego will make the main address of the evening. It is expected that the pastor will in his [illegible] the necessity of having here a separate parish for the seven hundred or more Italians who live in this city and also, that Bishop Grimes has already assigned him to hold services here every Sunday morning.

Ageneral invitation has been sent out to all Italian residents of this city and vicinity to attend a mass meeting at the City Hall next Sunday night at 7:30 for the purpose of discussing plans in connection with theo rganization of an Italian church in this city.

A committee headed by Frank Zaia and Frank Massaro has secured permission to use the City Hall from 7 to 9 Sunday night and the meeting will be called at 7:30. Massaro and Zaia will act as chairmen of the meeting and the Rev. Father Ceramia of Oswego, will be chief speaker.

The visiting pastor will outline the proposed organization in a general way, emphasizing the need of a separate parish for the 700 or more Italians known to live within the city limits. He will also make known to the assemblage the fact that Bishop Grimes has already assigned him to hold services in this city every Sunday morning.

Mr. Zaia, in commenting upon the assignment, said, "It is not unlikely that we will hold our first mass Sunday, December 12th, at 8 a. m. in the basement of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Rev. Father Lindsman has granted permission to use that place. The Oswego pastor will be here every Sunday morning and hold an 8 o'clock mass, after which he will hold services in the Oswego church at 10:30.

At present the Rev. Father Ceremia holds two services in Oswego each Sunday morning, but as soon as the local parish is well under way he will hold but one service in each city. "Of course, the success of the movement is dependent upon the interest taken by our people Sunday night," said Mr. Massaro.

When asked if the services in the basement of the Church of the Immaculate Conception would be permanent, Mr. Zaia said no, that the aim of his people is to provide for a building of their own. This will be a subject for discussion at Sunday's meeting.

The church in Oswego has been organized about four months now and is successful.

The movement for an Italian church in this city was started after Bishop Grimes of Syracuse instructed the Rev. Father Ceremia to secure a census of the Italian population of this city and when the result became known the Oswego pastor was instructed to proceed with the organization of the new parish.

ONE QUART OF BIVALVES AND PEARLS WORTH $150

It is not an unusual bccurrence to find small pearls in the oysters and clams sold in Fulton, but the exception is the rule when a person finds in one quart of bivalves one or more of the valuable products to amount to as much as $150. An exception is at hand, in the person of Fred Smith of Granby Center, who bought at the Keller & Wilson store one quart of oysters and took them home, to be enjoyed by his family and some guests. During the course of the meal, twenty tiny pearls were found mixed with the oysters. They were all carefully laid aside and then taken to a Syracuse man for judgment. He informed Mr. Smith that one of the pearls was worth $50 and the other nineteen would bring the total value of the finds up to $150.

There may be stronger arguments in favor of trading in Fulton, but it's dollars to doughnuts that Mr. Smith remains "From Missouri."

WOMEN CONDUCTING BIG RUMMAGE SALE

The sale will continue until Saturday and it is expected that all the goods will be disposed of by that time

Academy of Medicine Guests of Phoenix Man; Event a Happy One

Dr. H. L. Drury, of Phoenix, was the host last night, to the members of the Fulton Academy of Medicine, at his home in Phoenix and right now it is well to add that, if any better testimony were necessary to the enjoyableness of the occasion, it would have been [illegible] from every one of the local men present, "Wish we had brought our autos, then we could have stayed longer;" but as it was, most of the Fulton diners boarded the southbound car at 8 o'clock and returned on the last northbound car. The stay in Phoenix was short, comparatively, but goodness travels in small portions.

Dr. A. L. Hall was toastmaster, which fact [illegible] interesting toasts. The responses were made as follows:

Dr. E. M. Anderson, "Life One Endless Dream;" Dr. H. L. Drury, "I Would Not Live Always;" Dr. C. F. Fessenden, "In Pastures New;" Dr. F. E. Fox, "Survival of the Fittest;" Dr. E. A. Gallagher, "My Latest Acquisitions;" Dr. N. H. Haviland, "When I a'Wooing Went;" Dr. S. D. Keller, "The Happiest Moments of My Life;" Dr. H. M. Schlappi, "My Pal and I;" Dr. H. J. Terpening, "How I Cured Him;" and finally, the patriarch of the Academy of Medicine, Dr. G. G. Whitaker, whose recovery from a recent illness, enabled him to sit up to the table and indulge in a little nourishment, at the same time, handing to the merry diners a little talk on "The Biggest Lie by Mortal Ever Told." It is said the doctor did not refer at all to his knowledge of the amount of power going to waste each day in the Oswego river, which eliminates him from any charge of favoritism toward the owners of riparian rights in this vicinity.

Just how much entertainment and profit might have accured to Dr. Drury's guests had every member of the Academy of Medicine been present, is an unknown quantity. This statement is based upon the subjects which would have been handled by the absent ones, [illegible]

Dr. E. J. Cusack, "How I Saved My Rubber;" Dr. H. M. Doane, "A Cause to Be Won;" Dr. L. Fowler Joy, "The Popular Doctor;" Dr. H. L. Lake, "The Modest Doctor;" Dr. M. Riordan, "Home Again;" Dr. F. P. Sinclair, "My Most Trying Experience."

The Fulton Academy of Medicine comprises seventeen members all of whom were present at last night's meeting, with the exceptions noted.

Trade Commission Urges Preparedness at End of the War

New York—Preparedness in this country for trade conditions that will follow the close of the European war was urged at the dinner of the Association of National Advertisers last night at the Astor Hotel, which was attended by about four hundred members of the association and their guests, advertising men and business men. The speakers included Mr. Edward N. Hurley, vice chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.; Mr. N. C. Kingsbury, first vice president of the American Telephone and Telegraph company; Mr. Harry Tipper, of the Texas Company and president of the association, and Mr. Samuel Hopkins Adams.

It was Mr. Hurley who emphasized the importance of preparing now for the trade that should come to this country when hostilities cease in Europe.

"I am afraid," he said, "that there is a growing feeling of indifference toward opportunities ahead. The theory has been advanced that it will require years for the countries now at war to resume their normal rate of production and that the business is bound to come to us anyhow. This is a serious mistake. It was only a few months after the Franco-Prussian War when France was producing almost as much as before. She did not recover her normal purchasing power for twelve years, but this was due to the heavy indemnity Germany laid upon her.

"The American manufacturer should realize that not a smokestack has been destroyed during this war in England, Germany or Italy, and only a few in a small part of France.

"Unless we take advantage of the great opportunity we now have we will find that ninety days after the war is over Germany, France and England and other European nations will be on their way to a position in the markets of the world even stronger than they occupied before.

"True business preparedness demands that every American manufacturer who makes a product that can be sold abroad should aim to sell from ten to twenty per cent of his output to foreign countries. A market which includes both foreign and domestic business stabilizes industry and insures the manufacturer, his employes and

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FARMERS

If, as Mr. Dillon, state commissioner of foods and markets, charges, certain railroads are co-operating with the Hay Dealers' Association to keep out of this city New York State hay, to the benefit of western hay, the situation demands the intervention of the Public Service Commission Governor Whitman or any other official agency with adequate power to act. Mr. Dillon asserts that while railroad tracks are crowded with hay from outside this state, the farmers of Onondaga and Cayuga counties, who have a surplus of 30,000 tons which he desires to auction off in this city, cannot find any means of getting it here.

It is matter of common knowledge that the railroads are badly congested, their cars are filled with freight which they cannot unload for lack of dock and terminal facilities and their yards and spur tracks are cluttered with waiting trains. Perhaps this may explain the inability of the up-state hay growers to obtain transportation facilities. There should be, certainly, no discrimination against the farmers of this state which benefits the farmers of another state. On the statement made by Mr. Dillon the governor might very well ask the Public Service Commission to investigate the alleged hold-up. —N. Y. Tribune.

MANY CASUALTIES

There have been 16 deaths from football during the season just closed, and injuries that will result in permanent crippling almost without number. These are scarcely ever counted. If the injured man dies, it is a matter for comment; but if he is lamed for life, or if there is injury or destruction of sight or some internal injury that brings its penalty in the future ,the public hears of it only through a line in the game telling that "Smith had to retire because of a smash over the head," or that "Jones suffered a bad fall and was carried off the field unconscious."

Football is said to be a great game to teach our young men courage, quickness of thought, give them strong bodies and hardy constitutions to build them up and prevent their being mollycoddles. Well, perhaps it is, and it may be necessary to pay the toll; although it seems to be a high one and cruel.—Utica Observer.

"NERVES" AT WASHINGTON

What is the matter with Washington? Is it an attack of "nerves" due to the approach of Congress that has swept usually cool headed administration officials off their balance? What other explanation can there be for Mr. Tumulty's launching his Mexican boomerang? What else can account for Mr. Garrison's action in deliberately placing his person in close contact with the Philippines buzz saw?

In an attempt to discredit a mass of pretty convincing evidence concerning conditions in the Philippine Islands the Secretary of War has discredited one witness but not his testimony, has made the broad assertion that all this criticism is due to politics, has pronounced Mr. Taft a "partisan" in his attitude toward the Philippines problem.

Mr. Taft can very well take care of any such charge of partisanship and has very ably done so. During his long service as Governor General, as Secretary of War and as President Mr. Taft demonstrated that the only "partisanship" of which he was guilty was partisanship for the Filipino people.

There is politics in the Philippines problem—to be sure! It is democratic politics and dishonest politics. Mr. Garrison is not responsible for this, but he should know it. The strictly non-partisan administration of the islands that Mr. Taft built up, always over the opposition of some Americans whose concern was self-interested, worked for the best interests, the abiding interests ,of the great majority of the nation's Asiatic wards. The politics of the present administration has been directed solely in the interest of a few mestizo politicians. If Mr. Garrison does not know this he should go to the islands and see for himself.

The administration is committed to the Jones bill, which is to be pressed for passage at the coming session of Congress. Mr. Garrison himself describes this as being "falsely labelled" an independence bill. The false labelling is the work of the democratic party in Congress, done with the approval of the democratic administration, of which Mr. Garrison is a member.

Mr. Garrison thinks this measure is but another step forward along the lines laid down by Mr. Taft. It is a dangerous step, which seriously threatens the interests of the mass of Filipinos in order to make offices for a few politicians who seek to fatten off of them.—N. Y. Herald.

WHERE ARE WE?

Nothing that is built on selfishness can stand. Peace of mind and comfort of body bought at the expense of personal gratification must fail of its realization, and as persons represent communities, then communities reflect the ideals of the mass of the people.

The highest type of community is distinctive in its appearance and activities, both of the higher order, as in individuals. Wealth is immaterial in the real development of either.

Supposing an invasion were to be made into imaginary, individual homes—and these homes with children in them—with the idea of judging these as to their worth in the future of the community. Suppose untidy conditions reigned, selfishness predominated in each person, and nowhere could a trace of the worthwhile things; in picture, literature or music be found. Or, worse yet, suppose a few members have found in some way the joy in music, art or literature and then straightway betook themselves to seclusion that they might enjoy—alone.

Would the judges, think you, upon leaving that home measure it as of immediate or future value to the community?

Then again, in referring to a fore running phrase, "communities reflect the ideals of the mass of its people." If this be true, then what do we as a people reflect in our community? Is there a future in our plan for growth? If so why do we not recognize art, and music and literature. These three agents of value are expressed in public lectures, debates and community music programs.

Fulton's talented people in fields of music, art and literature have selfishly taken themselves to seclusion and enjoy—alone. Cannot something be done to bring an awakening? If there is a desire to do and a way sought, scores of other cities will supply fine examples. The newspapers, magazines, and the very tree tops themselves tell of civilization's real activities. All who run may read the signs. Either, as a community, we rise to higher better ways, or we shall run down at the heel.

Isn't it true?.

PRESIDENT PROMISES AID TO RURAL CREDITS BILL

The President has made it known that he will actively support the Rural Credits Bill, which Senator Fletcher will reintroduce during the coming session of Congress.

In brief, the Fletcher bill provides for the establishment of regional mortgage banks, with authority to loan money up to fifty per cent. of the value of farm property.

The regional banks would procure their lending capital by the sale of bonds: based on the farm property mortgages.

Under the Fletcher bill these farm land banks would be outside of any control by the Federal Reserve Board.

The purpose of the rural credits system is simply to enable farmers to borrow money on the security of their lands at approximately the rate first class business concerns can borrow money on convertible securities.

The individual farmer, as things are, is at the mercy of the local money lender. He must pay what is demanded and he comes pretty near to paying ten per cent. for money, when interest and fees are added together..

Under the rural credits system all farm land borrowers would fare equally and the Government regional mortgage banks would actually find the markets for big and little loans alike, at a uniform charge.

It is easy to see what a powerful aid to the prosperity of American farmers this system would be, and, of course, it needs no saying that all business prospers when farmers are prosperous.

It is highly gratifying to The American to see President Wilson adopting and indorsing, one by one, these fundamental political and economic reforms.—N. Y. American.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—George Burkitt, once, and now once more, assistant postmaster at Winnetka, Illinois, has had a kind of "Off-again-on-again-gone-again-Finnegan" experience. He was dismissed from the postal service for having said that the President's second marriage was indelicately sudden. He tried to secure a hearing from the Postmaster General and was turned down. He published the correspondence in the newspapers. He was ordered reinstated within twenty-four hours.

This doubtless closes the incident so far as concerns Burkitt and his job. But the episode has brought about a renewal of comment over the President's courtship and marriage which has caused no little irratation at the White House, where great pains have always been taken to minimize gossip on this particular topic. The President's attentions to Mrs. Galt have been no secret here in Washington for many months. No one here was especially surprised when the engagement was announced; and the only comment which the Capital vouchsafed was in line with that for which Burkitt lost his job.

A few western newspapers had dealt with the subject in like vein; the women of Idaho—where women vote—had been polled with a similar expression of opinion; and the girls of a western state university had held a meeting and resoluted to the same effect. But the subject was no longer exciting interest, even privately, and was in a fair way to disappear altogether, when suddenly up bobs Burkitt's boss, Assistant Postmaster General Roper, with an official letter which has set all tongues to wagging again and with accelerated force.

The news broke here on a Sunday, and the correspondents became immediately very active. At the White House it was said that nothing was known about the matter. Postmaster General Burleson refused to say anything. But Mr. Roper talked with some freedom and seemed to think he had in some fashion befriended the President in firing Burkitt. Tumulty, however, had no such illusions and, as soon as he had given the situation the once over, he promptly proceeded to announce Burkitt's reinstatement" by instructions of the President."

So far as Burkitt is concerned that ended it. But it did not end the gossip. No indeed. That is still going on, with the concensus in Burkitt's favor by a large majority.

SENATORS OPPOSE ALL CAUCUS ACTION

Washington.—Advocates of cloture in the United States Senate have about reached the conclusion that it will be impossible for them to attain their ends by caucus action, and in consequence at the meeting of the Senate's democrats tomorrow it is likely that no effort will be made to bind the party to any particular form of amendment to the Senate rules which would mean a limitation of debate.

The special committee of which Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, is chairman, and which is considering cloture, held another meeting today, and while its decision was not made public, it is generally understood that its report will not attempt to force cloture as a party measure.

NEW YORK STATE ALIEN LABOR LAW CONSTITUTIONAL

The United States Supreme Court has rendered a decision which has been awaited for many months by contractors and state officials in many states, especially in this state, and which establishes that the New York State Anti-Alien Labor Law is constitutional.

When the labor organizations suddenly broke in upon work in the New York subways 15 months ago with a demand that contractors employ only naturalized Americans, they pointed to a state law which required that no alien labor should be employed upon our public works. The contractors who had made contracts under the assumption that they might employ aliens (cheaper labor) were dumfounded, and went to the courts with apparent promise of winning out. New contracts were refused and there were prospects that old contracts would be allowed to lapse in many cases when the Legislature came to the rescue with an amendment to the law by which difficulties were smoothed over and the labor unions mollified. Meanwhile the constitutionality of the state law was tested out and moved successively to the United States Supreme Court which has now decided that the state law was constitutional.

The effect of the decision, should a new effort be made to place the law back to its former rigid requirements, would be to add considerably to the cost of state of other public works, whether on canals, roads or ther improvements. Its effect would be a discrimination against the taxpayers and in favor of private industries which may not only employ aliens, but which would have still further additions to the supply of available cheap foreign labor in the thousands of aliens who would be thrown out of state work.—Auburn Citizen.

Seals Prevent Tuberculosis Spread

John Allison was fairly prosperous. He held a good position in the mills. Two years ago he married ag irl of his choice, and they were happy. Ten months after he was married John paid the last installment on his home, a cozy six room bungalow.

Every night—and the habit seemed to stick even after months of married life—Mrs. Allison met John with a kss and a hug and a happy smile as he returned from work. About a year ago little Dorothy joined the family group. The atmosphere in this little home was delightfully harmonious. A nest egg for the "rainy" day began to assume comfortable proportons.

"I am worried about Jim Cole," said John one evening as he smoked his pipe, while his wife cleared up the kitchen. "He coughs, and I can tell he is getting weak, because he goes off in a corner and sits down to rest every hour or two.

A few nights later John brought home the news that Jim was sick at home. Then he began to spend many of his evenings at the bedside of his pal. In the course of time, Jim died. The doctor, called in too late, pronounced the disease tuberculosis.

It wasn't many months until John too, began to cough, and he smiled with more and more of an effort as he sank down into an easy chair to rest when he reached home from work. A romp with baby Dorothy soon tired him out. Suddenly it dawned upon him that he was "going" the same way Jim did. The doctor looked grave when at last he went to the family physician with his trouble. "You must give up your work at once," he said. "Even then, and if you let me do everything I can for you, the chance for your recovery is mighty slim." To shorten a long story, John had waited too long. His little nest egg dwindled away. A month ago his heartbroken widow hid her face in little Dorothy's curls as the clods began to fall on the earthly remains of her husband. She was poorly fitted for life's work. Little Dorothy is now being supported through public funds, while her mother washes other people's linen and scrubs other people's floors. In time she, too, will undoubtedly become a public charge.

In "getting" tuberculosis from Jim, who had got it from somebody else, John was changed from a producing member of society, a high class citizen and an asset for any community to a liability. Interest on the liability will be paid for years to come. And who can estimate in dollars and cents the value of that happy home broken up prematurely by this most terrible and relentless of all preventable diseases—tuberculosis?

How many Jims and Johns are there in our community? Every Red Cross seal you buy helps to educate your friends and neighbors to prevent tuberculosis, provides relief and help for those who suffer and secures adequate provision for the control of the spread of the disease from the sick to the well. Buy Red Cross seals for your own sake and for your community's sake.

PICTURE VERSIONS OF A. H. WOODS PLAYS

BROADWAY'S GREATEST SUCCESSES TO BE PRODUCED ON SCREEN IN NEAR FUTURE.

PATHE ACQUIRES THE RIGHTS

Remarkable List of Dramas Will Be Filmed Under George Fitzmaurice's Direction.

The New York newspapers have been giving considerable prominence of late to an agreement between the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and A. H. Woods, whereby Pathe receives the motion picture rights to all the plays that have been and will be produced by Mr. Woods. The announcement of the agreement is of particular importance to both the theatrical and motion picture worlds, since Mr. Woods is the owner of what has been the largest stock remaining of theatrical successes not yet put into pictures. The list of plays which thus becomes available for motion picture purposes is a most remarkable one, embracing as it does many of the greatest theatrical successes of recent years.

These plays have been the prize for which many motion picture concerns have been angling for many a day. At the time the papers were signed there were three large immediate cash offers lying upon Mr. Woods' desk. With the acquisition of the plays Pathe becomes the possessor of the best stock of picture material held by any company. That they will add prestige to the already well-known Gold-Rooster program, on which they will be placed, goes without question.

It is announced that work will be started at once upon the filming of these plays. George Fitzmaurice, who made for Pathe the big successes "Via Wireless" and "At Bay," has been entrusted with the production of many of the adaptations. In his casts will be used so far as possible the actors who appeared in the original productions, among whom are many of the leading players of the day, such as Florence Reed and Robert Edeson. George Brackett Seitz and Ouida Bergere, both well-known playwrights, will make the adaptations. The first play to be filmed will be "New York," with Miss Florence Reed.

The rise of A. H. Woods from ten-cent melodrama to a position in the front rank of theatrical producers is one of the most spectacular in the history of the American theatre. Within a few years he has established himself firmly as the most successful, original and daring of managers. A list of the "hits" during the past five years will show the name of A. H. Woods tacked on the majority of the most emphatic ones. For instance it was he who gave us the international musical success "Madame Sherry," to be followed later in the operatic field by "Gypsy Love," which charmed two continents. He, too staged the laughable farce, "The Girl in the Taxi," which also was played abroad. It was Mr. Woods who made a star of Julian Eltinge, the famous impersonator. In "Potash and Perlmutter" he gave New York something new and scored another hit.

More recently he has given to the public such sterling successes as "The Song of Songs," "Kick In," "Innocent," "The High Cost of Loving," "The Yellow Ticket," "Common Clay," and "Abe and Mawruss," the last two the most notable successes of the current season.

As for players, Mr. Woods has assembled under his banner such prominent artists as John Mason, Jane Cowl, Dorothy Donnelly, Florence Reed, Richard Bennett, Julian Eltinge, Barney Bernard, Madame Cottrelly, Irene Fenwick, Cyril Keightley, Thomas A. Wise, Forrest Winant, Pauline Frederick, Lew Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, John Barrymore, Josephine Victor, Jane Grey, Emmett Corrigan, Mary Harlan, Marguerite Sylva, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Bernard Granville, Adele Ritchie, Sam Bernard, Louise Dresser, and a host of others.

Mr. Woods is the owner of the Eltinge Theatre and lessee and manager of the Republic Theatre in New York. Pathe was represented in the negotiations by General Manager Louis J. Gasnier.

A Kipling work will at last be seen in motion pictures. He is one famous author who up to now has not lent his talents to the screen. Pathe, it is announced, has acquired the picture rights to "The Light That Failed," perhaps Kipling's best-known work, and turned it over to Edward Jose to produce.

For the first time in motion picture history two feature pictures will be made at the same time with the same cast. Edward Jose, the Pathe producer, is the man who is working the miracle, and he is enabled to, since he is producing Kipling's "Light That Failed," and Gilbert Parker's "The Weavers," both of which demand desert scenes and battles in which Arabs are engaged.

The first of the A. H. Woods theatrical successes to be put into pictures will be "New York." George Fitzmaurice, the Pathe producer, has just started work upon it, with the famous Florence Reed as his leading woman. "New York" will be released as a "Gold Rooster Play."

DROP POLITE NOTES BETWEEN AIR FIGHTS

Aviators Observe All Courtesies When U. S. Air Man Is Taken.

Paris.—The sequel to the recently reported capture of James Bach, an American belonging to the French flying corps, shows that a certain feeling of brotherhood exists among the rival aviators who daily try to kill one another thousands of feet above the earth.

The day after the capture of Bach and the pilot accompanying him a German plane flew over an aviation camp near the one at which the captured fliers had been stationed and dropped an oriflamme, or banner, to which was attached a note saying in French that Bach and his companion had descended in German territory and that neither was wounded.

The message was picked up and dispatched to the camp with which Bach had been connected. There the note was received by Bert Hall, another American of the same escadrille, who is reported to have distinguished himself on the first day of the Champagne drive. Hall prepared a note of thanks, which the next day was dropped on a German aeroplane camp twenty miles behind the enemy's lines.

A few days afterward a 150 horsepower albatross biplane which had been maneuvering over French territory despite hot firing was forced to descend in a field adjoining the camp of a French escadrille. A bullet had penetrated the gasoline tank, gradually emptying it. The German pilot and observer were immediately captured by several air men, to whom they exclaimed smilingly in good French:

"This doesn't count; we only stopped to borrow a little gasoline."

The prisoners were just in time for dinner, and the officers' mess received them politely and talked aviation with them until the time came to turn them over to other authorities.

The Proper Weapon.

"I'd like to drive that old miser to terms." "Then why not use a screwdriver?"—Baltimore American.

Eliminates Odor.

When baking berry pies, if the juice runs over place another pie tin half full of water on the oven shelf directly under the pie.

The overflowing juice drops into the water instead of on the oven bottom, and you have no smell of something burning and no oven to clean.

This is also good when you are making escaloped potatoes and, in fact, for anything that boils over in the oven.

PEARL WHITE

SHELDON LEWIS AND PEARL WHITE

SHE OF THE BLONDE TRESSES COMES BACK TO PICTURES IN A WELL-KNOWN DRAMA, PLAYING OPPOSITE SHELDON LEWIS OF THE "ELAINE" SERIES FAME

Pearl White, she of the blonde tresses and irrepressible good spirits, has returned to picture work after a long vacation, her first in years. This should bring comfort to the many anxious fans who have wondered why of late they have not been seeing her on the screen undergoing the numerous perils and exploits that have been her lot. She has signed a contract for another year with Pathe, and is starring in a five-reel picture called "The King's Game," adapted from George B. Seitz's well-known play of the same title. It is interesting to note that in this picture she plays opposite Sheldon Lewis, her co-worker in "The Exploits of Elaine," and that Arnold Daly, the hero of that serial, is producing the picture.

Miss White today is undoubtedly one of the three best known motion picture stars in the business, and commands a high salary. This is the result of her work in the various very popular serials beginning with "The Perils of Pauline," now a film classic, and extending through the three "Elaine" serials. It is promised that she will star in another Pathe serial before long, as well as in various feature photoplays.

BUSINESS MEN TO BE QUIZZED THIS WEEK

The Ad Club of Auburn, comprising the newspaper men of that city, will this week quizz the merchants and manufacturers of the city, the question to be, "How Is Business?"

Auburn has been selected by the Educational Research Committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World as one of the leading marketing centers of America in which it will make a thorough investigation of exact conditions of business and prospects for the year 1916.

On December 3, Saturday next, as soon as the business men have closed their books for the month of November, investigators in all the leading cities of the United States and Canada will call upon representative merchants in the leading retail lines and ask a short list of questions, which the committee finds to be a barometer of business. The investigation will consume four days.

This is the second investigation of the kind. A year ago when all business men seemed to be confused as to the effect the European War would have on conditions in this country, the Association Advertising Clubs of the World with representative organizations in different cities came forward with the asserton that he only true test of the exact business conditions is consumer demand, and to prove this point conducted an investigation among the leading retail stores which showed that despite many alarming reports the average condition of American business showed a decrease for the month of November, 1914, over November, 1913, of only 2.3 per cent.

The completed report, containing many maps and charts and compiled withing 12 days, was delivered to President Wilson, Premier Borden of Canada, and other government official as well as many of the leading business men of the country, and their high commendation of the investigation is what has led to a repetition of the plan this year.

JACK LYNN HERE ALL NEXT WEEK

There is an old saying to the effect that good things never come singly, that they come in pairs and bunches. We want to tell you about the six good things that are coming your way to prepare you in advance of their coming, so that you may get the full benefit of pleasurable anticipation. To gloat over their coming, as it were, for that is what we are doing—gloating over the fact that we have secured six of the greatest plays and biggest successes of the recent New York season.

They are "The Minister's Son," "The Call of the North;" "Charley's Aunt;" "Paid in Full;" "When We Were 21;" and "The Indian's Secret."

The big six we call them for they are all that and more. To secure these tremendous plays we have planked down a large sum of money in advance, thereby obtaining the exclusive production. A deal of such magnitude is seldom made by any stock company, the majority taking but one or two plays at a time.

The Jack Lynn stock company determined to give their patrons the very cream of dramatic and comedy plays. The engagement is for one solid week, and opens at the Quirk Theatre Monday night with a fine production of that celebrated drama, "The Indian's Secret."

Mrs. Fred A. Sumerville, of West 1st st., was hostess yesterday afternoon to the members of the Friendly Nine Birthday club, but this mere announcement does not begin to cover the pleasant details of the meeting, one of which was thed istribution of gifts from a Christmas tree that is said to have fairly groaned under the weight of its load. Everybody present received a gift, and even the one absent member of the club, Mrs. McCoy, was remembered. Mrs. McCoy was prevented by illness from attending this meeting, but she avers that it will be a hard matter to keep her away from the home of Mrs. Alvena Greenwood who will entertain the club on a date in January, to be decided later. The favors last night were walnuts and postcards. Refreshments were served at 5 o'clock ,and later in the evening the men folks appeared to enjoy an evening of music and good fellowship. Only one guest was entertained by Mrs. Summerville, "Fritz," by name. It's your guess."

WARNS SCHOOL BOARDS ON FIRE PREVENTION

Albany.—Deputy Commissioner of Education Thomas E. Finegan has sent a warning letter to all boards of education of the State.

He points out that the law makes them responsible for placing school buildings in suitable condition to protect the lives of children and teachers. Members of the board should personally make examination, and may employ experts.

GRAIN SEIZURE A GOOD CHECK

Canadian Action Viewed as a Means to Prevent Speculation, Removing a Burden From Government.

(Utica Observer)

The action of the Canadian Government in commandeering some 20,000,000 bushels of wheat located at certain shipping points in the east, means but one thing—It is a step taken to check speculation in wheat.

The Canadian Government has been watching the situation, and it has been wise enough not to be caught napping. It has become quite evident that speculators from the American side as well as in Canada were manipulating the market. The countries at war need the grain, argues the speculators, why not make them pay sharply for it? In extremities, all the belligerents are paying tremendous prices for almost everything. They find the cost of munitions and all supplies trebled and then multiplied by 10. Clothing of all kinds, everything needed for food, everything needed in the way of sustenance or in supplying the men with means of offense and defense, has mounted to great heights in price. The cost of ocean freights has gone up so rapidly that nothing may be transported without adding greatly to its cost, and this increases the burden.

Currents in the wheat market have convinced those who have been watching it that an organized effort was being made to increase the cost of this product far beyond a point where the immense yield would warrant. England, Italy and France, which must have wheat or stop fighting, would be compelled to pay additional millions unless the price of the commodity might bec ontrolled. What more reasonable step than for the Canadian Government to take over the wheat at the eastern shipping points and thus hold the market in check? The early extension of this order to also embrace the wheat in the Canadian Northwest may be anticipated. The price will be fixed, it is said, at a fair figure. This will no doubt stablize the market on both sides of the border. There will be no wild hiting of the priee of wheat so far as Canada is concerned, after the manner of last year when the speculators reaped millions not only out of the belligerent countries but from the people of this country who were compelled to pay higher prices for flour and its products than the situation warranted. Canada doesn't propose to see a repetition of that episode, and as the situation presents itself at this moment ,we believe that the great wheat-consuming public will have cause to rejoice that the action has been taken.

Self-Preservation

Another feature also illustrates the wisdom of this move. Under present conditions, Canada is able to control the shipment of this food, and none of it will be permitted to fall into the hands of the enemies of Canada and the mother country. A very considerable trade with Germany has been carried on through the Scandinavian countries—Norway, Sweden and Denmark—and it is intimated that efforts were being put forward to take wheat from Canada and this country to Germany by that route. Of course it is Canada's business to prevent this if possible, and so by controlling the wheat that is shipped from her ports, she will be certain that none of it goes to those who are fighting against England.

After a flurry that may come to the market for a few days, there will be less speculation in wheat from this time on. As is pointed out by the announcement giving notice of the seizure, the action does not increase the number of consumers or decrease the supply of wheat, it simply put a part of the supply in the hands of the government instead of leaving it to the mercy of speculators who might be inclined to take advantage of the necessities of the occasion and manipulate the market to their very great advantage, as they did a few months ago when their action increased the cost of flour to about $8 a barrel when there was no reasonable excuse whatever for its going above $6.50 a barrel.

It is interesting to note, also, that the Canadian Government took this step without consulting with the speculators or interests. No hint whatever had come as to what was about to be done; nobody was given a "tip" through which advantage might be taken, and if Canada has any yellow journals they were not given opportunity to threaten, badger and criticise the government until after the action had been taken.

There are a good many things that this country might learn from their neighbors on the north.

DR. VI KYUIN WELLINGTON KOO.

Dr. Koo Recently Named Envoy to Mexico, Cuba and Peru.

A GRADUATE OF COLUMBIA.

One of the First Students Sent to America by China Through Boxer Rebellion Indemnity—Has Host of Professional Friends, Also Good Knowledge of International Law.

Washington.—Dr. Vi Kyuin Wellington Koo, who was recently appointed as the Chinese minister to the United States, succeeding Kai Fu Shah, is a graduate of Columbia university, where he received his doctor's degree. He was one of the first students sent to America by the government of China through the Boxer rebellion indemnity, remitted by the United States, and acquitted himself with great credit. He is well known in New York and includes among his friends many leaders in educational, professional and financial circles.

The new envoy attended St. John's college, Shanghai, and was admitted to Columbia in 1904, where he took a prominent part in undergraduate life. He was editor in chief of the Columbia Spectator, the university daily paper, and was a member of the Columbia debating team which defeated Cornell in 1906. The student board of graduates included him as a member. He also took an active part in track athletics.

Dr. Koo was only recently named Chinese minister to Mexico, Peru and Cuba and passed through Washington on his way to London prior to taking up his official position. He was presented to Secretary of State Lansing at that time and discussed the Mexican situation with him.

As an undersecretary at the Chinese foreign office Dr. Koo was a member of the commission which conducted negotiations with the Japanese minister in Peking last spring. It is said that he is a close friend of President Yuan Shih Kai and is in sympathy with the latter's leaning toward a monarchical form of government for China.

The impression was gained here that Minister Koo's appointment came as a surprise to the present minister. It is said that Peking was dissatisfied with his reports of the attitude of the American government and public opinion in the United States during the Chino-Japanese negotiations. The legation repeatedly applied to the state department for aid and counsel at that time, but the United States took no action toward restraining Japan in her demands upon China.

In 1909 Dr. Koo was made master of arts and for three years thereafter studied under Dr. John Bassett Moore. The degree of Ph. D. was conferred upon him, and he acquired a wide reputation for his knowledge of international law.

While a student in New York city Dr. Koo was closely associated with work in Chinese American circles. He was editor of the Chinese Students' Monthly and as president of the Chinese Students' alliance did much to advance the interests of Chinese students in America.

Dr. Koo left America in April, 1912, to take up his duties as diplomatic secretary to President Yuan Shih Kai. The Chinese society gave him a luncheon on the eve of his departure.

While on the Pacific slope, intrusted with a government mission, he received word of his appointment as minister to Mexico.

At the recent Bankers' club luncheon in New York Dr. Koo said, "The Chinese people have a liking for Americans which is as intense as it is justified, and when I say this I do not speak on behalf of only a portion of the people."

Ten years of recuperation may make good for Mexico's three years of revolution, and again they may not.

Mexico now has counterfeit money. But so have we, so there!

BEAR SAVES KEEPER FROM HUNGRY MATE

Driven Away After Attacking Prospective 200 Pound Meal.

New York.—An unscheduled performance of Androcles and the lion was staged recently in the Central park polar bear tank. Jim Coyle, the keeper, was Androcles. His namesake, Jim, the patriarch of the bear colony, played the lion, while his consort, Molly, was the crowd of wild animals of the arena, whose role was to eat the martyr.

At 2:15 o'clock p. m. Androcles, equipped with hip boots and a monkey wrench, went into the tank to repair the drain at the bottom. Jim and Molly retired upstage on the rocks and looked at him. Androcles went ahead with his work, bending over into the water, with his back to the animals. Androcles' 200 pounds caught Molly's eye.

An instant later she jumped, and it would have been all up with Androcles if Jim had remained a spectator. He jumped after Molly and caught her by the throat, while Androcles clambered out of the arena, with only a scratch on the back of his hand to show where the bear's teeth had grazed him.

Bill Snyder, head keeper, and his three assistants heard Androcles using strong language and hurried up with pointed iron bars. After five minutes' persuasion they separated the couple, while the martyr went into the police station to recuperate.

"That bear Jim," said Snyder, "has been here ten years and has never given us any trouble. Molly has been here six and keeps you guessing every minute. Yes, sir, bears are funny. You daren't turn your back on 'em—never."

Beauty In Industrial German Centers.

The great industrial centers of Germany are picturesque in the extreme, writes Harvey M. Watts in the Philadelphia Public Ledger. Not only do they have that superb larger picturesqueness that is inherent in great plants, huge mechanisms, smoking stacks of gigantic skyscraping dimensions, such as, indeed, have been revealed to us by a Pennell in connection with his illustrations of the Panama canal and of our own industrial wonderland. But the German towns also possess that smaller picturesqueness in the shape of grouped model dwellings, garden city effects, which are virtually unknown over here, in which utility and beauty go hand in hand.

If we are going in for an approximation to the amazing Teutonic preparedness in our industries and if we intend spending millions all over the state in the building up of the old and in the development of new and permanent industries, all of which is most admirable, then our towns must imitate the methods of the giant plants and turn as they do to experts for all matters that are summed up in the term "municipal improvements." The old rule of thumb way is out of date. It is slow and costly and gets nowhere. As a result of it towns in Pennsylvania, which might easily have a national reputation for comeliness, are ugly beyond description.

LED A "DOG'S LIFE."

Saloon Keeper Tells Court He Slept In Room With Fifteen Canines.

St. Louis.—Sleeping in the room and the bed with as many as fifteen dogs is a dog's life, according to Edward Flader, a former saloon keeper, now living in Bellevue, who recently sued for divorce.

The dogs belonged to his wife, Ida, the petition stated. It is said that she also permitted chickens a free runway of the saloon, and when Flader attempted to drive out the dogs he says his wife threatened him with a club.

Old Gas Well Does Duty.

Napoleon, O.—A gas well sealed up in disgust twenty-seven years ago is now being used for lighting, heating and cooking purposes by former Sheriff D. W. Sangler on his farm near here. When his neighbors recently began using the gas from the Napoleon-Wauseon pipe line he recalled the abandoned well and had it cased and pipes laid to the house.

OPEN UP YOUR LIFE.

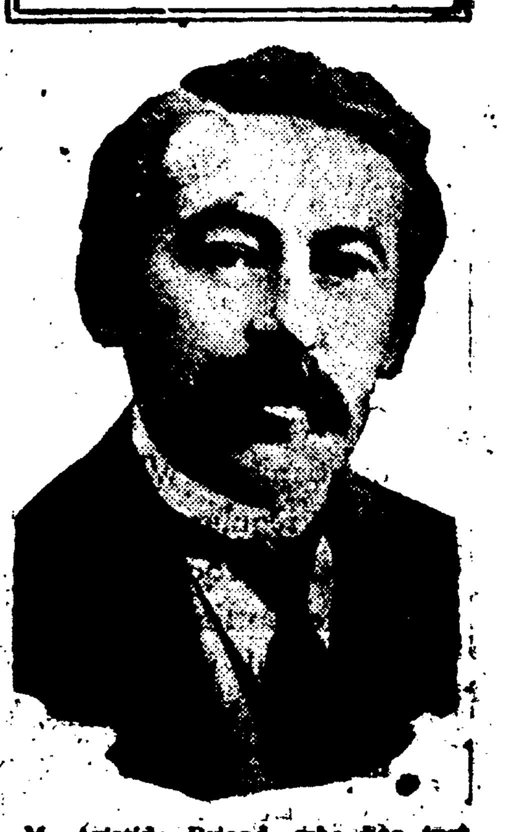
By cultivating our natural gifts we add to them; by neglect we lose them. Seed that is never put into the soil will never produce a plant. The life that remains closed will never produce a man.

Working Out Civic Problems.

In another year the Norfolk (Neb.) Commercial club will be organized into a number of subdivisions, making for a better working body. Retailers, wholesalers, manufacturers, salespeople, professional people, advertisers, agriculturists, etc., will have their own distinct divisions, wherein the problems affecting them may be worked out satisfactorily.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Aristide Briand, New Premier of France.



M. Aristide Briand, who has just become premier of France for the third time, ranks among the ablest of the French statesmen. He was minister of justice in the cabinet of M. Viviani, whom he succeeded. A native of Nantes, in his fifty-third year, M. Briand, after graduating in the law, devoted himself to politics and journalism. Originally a revolutionary Socialist, time and experience have tempered his views.

The new premier has been a member of several cabinets. He first became premier in 1909 and handled masterfully the great railroad strike of 1910. The general confederation of labor called a general strike on all French railroads, and 30,000 men responded. France for a brief period was at the strikers' mercy. M. Briand adopted an effective measure to end the strike. He put out an order calling the strikers "to the colors" for three weeks' training as reserves, and directed them to protect the railroads. The strike collapsed, for Briand's shrewd move had made the strikers their own "strike breakers." His ministry fell in 1911.

President Elect Poincare asked M. Briand, then minister of justice, to form a cabinet in January, 1913. His tenure of office as premier was brief, for in the following March the senate overthrew his government on the question of proportional representation. During his last premiership he became involved in the Caillaux-Calmette affair, and for a time his political star was dimmed. He regained popularity by being chiefly instrumental in passing the three years' conscription law.

Leader of House Majority.

When the Sixty-fourth congress assembles in December the members of the house majority will have a new floor leader to direct their deliberations. Representative Claude Kitchin of the Second North Carolina district will be in the place formerly occupied by Oscar W. Underwood, now senator from Alabama.

As chairman of the ways and means committee Mr. Kitchin becomes the head and front of the Democratic party on the floor of the house of representatives. Although but forty-six years old Mr. Kitchin has had fourteen years' experience as a national legislator. He first went to congress in 1901 and has been there ever since, rising steadily in the esteem of his colleagues and has become a powerful member of his party. He is well posted on the tariff and was one of Champ Clark's lieutenants in the days when the Democrats were in the minority.

A native of the state he represents, Mr. Kitchin comes of a political family. His father was a congressman a generation ago, and his brother, William W. Kitchin, also served several terms as a representative of North Carolina in the national house from the Fifth district. The two brothers sat together in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth congresses. William retired to become governor of his state and later tried for the senatorship against Simmons, but was defeated. Claude remained on the job in Congress and now ranks next to Speaker Clark as the most powerful member of that body.

Horses of the highest degree are to be seen at the New York show, held every year in New York city. Animals of various breeds and adapted to many uses are there assembled. From all over the country they gather, and in former years they came from Europe. Work horses, racers, trotters, high stepping carriage animals, ponies, saddle horses and all the rest are on exhibition. There also are to be seen men, women and children, most of them owners or lovers of the beautiful horse. Children take a large part in the horse show. They come with their ponies and are keenly interested in the competition for the ribbons that are awarded by the judges. The little girl in the picture is Miss Helen Henderson of New York. She is the daughter of Mrs. Van Wyck Thorn Henderson. She won a prize with her handsome harness pony, which she drove in the ring.

Homonyms.

Fill the blanks with words spelled differently, but pronounced alike. Example: Scent, sent.

1. Do not —— for her yet. By —— she may be better.
2. Bruno dashed through the farm —— at a sufficiently rapid —— to overtake the hurrying tramp.
3. "It's great fun to ——, mother," remarked the little eagle, "but a mis-turn makes me —— for days afterward."
4. It made her —— to think how tall her friend had ——, while she herself was such a "dumpy."
5. No matter how far you —— in Italy, you will find some road that takes you back to ——.
6. It —— to make haste slowly. Do not set yourself too hard a —— at the start.

Answers: 1, mourn, morn; 2, gate, gait; 3, soar, sore; 4, groan, grown; 5, roam, Rome; 6, pays, pace.

Cutting the Cake.

A "cake" should be made by packing a flaring bowl full of flour. Turn the cake out upon a large plate, packing it well into shape, and upon the top lay a gold ring. Let each person present cut the cake in turn, the turns being decided alphabetically or by lot, each one showing a slip of paper on which is written a number—1, 2, 3, etc. No. 1 cuts off a piece of the cake, then No. 2, and so on, each one trying to avoid disturbing the ring. The one who knocks the ring from its resting place must pick it up from wherever it falls on the plate with his or her teeth, not touching it with the knife nor with anything except his or her teeth. This seems very simple, but, for a good laugh, just try it.

Salutations In Different Countries.

The American or English speaking folks say, "How do you do?" "Hello!" or "Good morning." The French, "How do you carry yourself?" The German, "How goes it?" The Dutch, "How do you travel?" The Spaniards, "How are you passing it?" The Arabs, "A fine morning to you." The Turks, "God grant you his blessing." The Egyptians, "How do you perspire?" The Chinese, "How are you digesting?" The Greeks, "How are you getting on?" The Italians, "Grow in grace," but now in most parts of Italy they say in effect, "How are you?"—American Agriculturist.

Big Round Moon.

Jumping the Rope.

At first my feet feel very light,
My yellow curls bob with delight.
The rope seems bidding me to dance—
Along its length I skip and prance.
I hear them counting, "Fifty-five."
How glad I am to be alive!
Then I see Kate and Susie Swope;
I know they love to jump a rope.
I am ashamed, [illegible]
And then it feels so good to turn.

THE WIDOW'S BEAR STORY

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

James Hoke, farmer, was an impatient man, and there were a hundred people who knew it.

The time came when James Hoke saw, admired and loved little Jessie Gould. She knew of his impatience and had several samples of it before he had asked her to be his wife. When she asked her mother's advice the reply was:

"Bless you, child; a little impatience in a husband only keeps the wife smart."

Miss Jessie said "Yes," and the marriage took place accordingly.

For about a month the young husband maintained a check on his impatience, and then he began to break out again.

Mrs. Hoke was a patient little wife. When he was overheard raising the old Harry and she was spoken to about it she always had the same reply:

"Yes, James is rather impatient and is easily put out, but he is quickly over it, and, on the whole, he is the best husband in the state."

During his childhood the measles had passed young Hoke by, as is the case with about one child out of ten. He had been married about two years and was as strong as an ox, when the ailment suddenly grabbed him. He laughed at it, fought it, swore at it, but the doctors sent him to bed, and there he lay for a week.

At the end of that time the patient announced that he wasn't going to put up with such a farce any longer. It should be killed or cured. Despite the protests of his wife, he clothed himself and took a little walk. As if nature had been waiting for him, a sudden shower of rain was let loose to wet him to the skin. Three days later Mr. Hoke was a dead man.

After two years of widowhood people began to wonder if Mrs. Hoke would marry again.

One day old Mrs. Barnes came a-visiting, and as they had long been acquainted she felt privileged to remark:

"Jessie, you must know that it is common talk that you will marry again."

"Well, I think I could marry if I wanted to."

"If you should marry again I hope it will be to a man who hasn't the failing of impatience."

"But how is one to know? When a man is courting he conceals as many of his faults as possible, doesn't he?"

Thereupon, in a laughing way, the question was answered, as will be seen later on.

Among those who came to "buy cows" of the widow was Hiram Johnson, an old bach and a farmer who lived about three miles away. One evening, as he came early, she thought to put old Mrs. Barnes' experiment to the test. So, after they were seated, with a pan of apples between them, she began:

"Mr. Johnson, I want to tell you a story. It is about a bear and a girl. Would you care to hear it?"

"I have always been mighty fond of bear stories," he replied as he threw his apple core away and prepared to listen.

"Well, when I was a girl ten years old I went to the woods one day to gather chestnuts, and all at once a big black bear stood within two rods of me."

"Gosh!" exclaimed Mr. Johnson, as he brought his fist down on his leg.

"What was I to do?" asked the widow. "I was but a small girl. It was the first bear I ever saw. I knew from the looks of this one that he was both hungry and savage."

"By thunder!" exclaimed Mr. Johnson, as he pounded his leg again.

"Just as I was about to faint away from fright twelve large woodchucks dashed out of the bushes with horrible growls and snarls and attacked bruin with the utmost ferocity, and a battle was on. Here was my opportunity to escape, and I took advantage of it.

"I got home all safe, but I could never make father nor any other man believe about the twelve woodchucks."

The story was ended, but that wasn't the last of it. The next evening that Mr. Johnson called the widow didn't wait five minutes before she began:

"I want to tell you a story about a bear and a girl."

It was so on the third night, the fourth, fifth and sixth. The widow had set out to test his patience. When she had retold that story thirty times and had seen no signs of impatience in her caller she met old Mrs. Barnes again and told her of it.

Mrs. Barnes and the widow decided that he was a patient man, and one evening, when he jumped in with a proposal of marriage before the story could be begun, the widow received it favorably. Mrs. Barnes came to congratulate her and advised:

"Don't drop it too sudden. Keep on telling it for at least six months after marriage."

But there is a limit to everything. One day when the wife had been visiting a neighbor for the afternoon she returned home to find a note on the table which read:

"For the last fifty times you have told that bear story I haven't heard a word of it. I am stone deaf and am going to Chicago to see if anything can be done for me."

The wife got his Chicago address and sent him a letter reading:

"The last fifty times I told the story I simply moved my lips and rumpled my chin. I had lost my voice completely. Come back and we will be very happy."

Hiram returned with his hearing improved. The bear story has never been retold.

Simplicity With Undeniable Style.

Dainty costume of chiffon poplin trimmed with satin. A note of novelty is struck in the method of fastening the waist.

Fashioned of chiffon poplin and trimmed with collar and cuffs of satin, this would make a charming dress to be worn on all informal occasions. There is a note of novelty about the adjustment which extends across the front in fichu effect, and the belt may be contrasting material to match the collar, if desired.

In medium size the costume requires 5½ yards 36-inch material, with 1 yard of satin for the collar, cuffs and belt. With two exceptions, all of the sections of the dress are cut from an open width of material. The home dressmaker understands, of course, that two open widths are laid together so that the sections will be cut out in duplicate. Two "rights" or two "wrongs," as the sides are popularly called, must be placed together so that both sides will not be alike after the sections are cut.

The back gore is placed into position first. Where it is sloped toward the waist-line there is left a space which accommodates the front of the waist. To the right of this section is placed the front gore of the skirt and opposite the skirt gore is the sleeve.

Now, on the quarter fold of material (so folded that the selvages meet), are laid the back on the lower fold and the collar on the upper fold.

The skirt may be shortened, if desired, by cutting off lower edges of gores on single or double "oo" perforations.

The back of the waist extends over the shoulders to form a yoke effect, and here a piping or bit of fancy beading may be added, if further elaboration is admired. The costume is an ideal foundation for the addition of the little details that go for smartness, though taken just as it is it expresses the [illegible] of chic simplicity.

MAN GIVES BLOOD VIA GLASS TUBES

Surgeons See Transfusion Without Linking of Arteries.

NEARLY ALWAYS SUCCEEDS.

Called Kempton-Brown Method and Is Said to Be a Cure For Acute Hemorrhages—Patients May Even Sit In Separate Rooms—Invented by Boston Physician.

Boston.—The transfusion of nearly a quart of blood from a man to a woman was among the mysteries revealed in one of the clinics which opened its doors to the clinical congress of surgeons. The new method, known as the Kempton-Brown method, was invented by Dr. A. R. Kempton, a Boston physician, and was demonstrated by Dr. E. P. Richardson and Dr. R. H. Miller at the Robert Brigham hospital.

The Kempton-Brown method of transfusing blood through glass tubes was used in a case of pernicious anaemia. Although in this disease the treatment is only palliative, it is declared practically a cure for acute hemorrhages.

Unlike the old method, where the artery of one person was linked directly to the vein of the other, Dr. Kempton's invention permits the two patients to be separated, even to sit in different rooms. Venous instead of arterial blood is then directed into the glass tube, waxed with paraffin and carried, as in a bucket, to the patient.

This method, it is stated, offers three advantages—the arteries of the donor are not injured, the exact amount of blood can be measured, and the method practically always succeeds.

Another method of treating anaemic patients was demonstrated at the Massachusetts General hospital by Dr. Roger I. Lee and Dr. Beth Vincent, who showed how the spleen might be removed. The two methods used together produce the best results.

One of the most important papers yet read in connection with the clinical congress was that of Dr. Charles F. Painter of Boston at the Peter Bent Brigham hospital. He explained to several hundred surgeons how that great bugaboo rheumatism was usually the result of poor teeth, of the cold that would not stay cured or of diseased tonsils, [illegible] or other organs. The [illegible] germ, [illegible], was carried by the blood through the body until it lodged in the joint.

Dr. David Cheever performed an important cancer operation and explained that the one way to cure cancer was to take the growth out during its early stages.

COUPLE MARRIED 63 YEARS.

They Have Lived In Same California Town Since 1855.

Auburn, Cal.—Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Stevens of this city have celebrated their sixty-third wedding anniversary. They have been residents of Auburn for sixty years, or since 1855, and are the oldest pioneers, excepting Justice B. F. Gwynn.

Stevens, now quite feeble, was postmaster of Auburn under President Lincoln, being the first postmaster of the town. He was for forty years agent for the Western Union Telegraph company here and conducted a drug store for half a century, his son continuing the business after he retired. He has served as a supervisor and as city trustee. Stevens is eighty-seven years old and Mrs. Stevens is seventy-nine.

Punning His Specialty.

"So you have made up your mind to be a specialist—in what line?" was the question put to a struggling doctor by a friend.

"I don't know," was the answer. "I have been considering various advantages in different branches. A chiropodist can generally get a foothold no matter how bad business is; a manicurist has usually something on hand, and an ear and eye specialist can often get a hearing when there is anything in sight. I haven't dwelt on the possibilities of throat or dental or hair experts because the two former always look down in the mouth and the latter may get but a bald living or be expected to dye for his patients!"

A STATE MESSAGE

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

"Carl," said the hereditary prince of Auretania to his chum, Count Krakousky, "the diplomats have got up a match between the Princess Alexia of Metropolis and myself. They consider it a fine political deal for me when I come to the throne. That's all very well, but I don't propose to tie myself down for life to a Gorgon. I wish you to look her over and report."

"Anything your highness desires," replied the count, "but I'll not promise to keep off your preserve. I may win the meat of the nut and leave you nothing but the shell."

"If you find her a Jezebel I hope you will. However, I'll have you watched. I wish you to take a young man with you named Caspar Audenreid. He'll join you at Metropolis."

The count saw nothing of Audenreid till having been accorded an interview with the princess. As he was about to enter the palace a man accosted him and showed him a letter from Prince Otto announcing that he was Caspar Audenreid, and they went in together. They were received by a maid of honor, who told them that the princess would receive them presently. In the meantime the maid of honor did what she could to entertain them.

When the princess came in Count Carl, who was saving what he had to say for the princess, was looking out through a window, leaving the maid of honor to Audenreid. Carl approached the royal lady with great impressment, bowed very low, kissed the tips of her fingers and told her that his master had sent him to assure her of the happiness he anticipated in their approaching union. The princess received the messenger graciously and proposed that they should walk in the royal gardens.

The maid of honor rose to follow her mistress, but the latter gave her by look a command to remain away. The count and the princess proceeded to the gardens, where her royal highness led him to a bower and, motioning him to a seat beside her, asked him to tell her all about the man she expected to marry. Was he tall or short, a blond or a brunette, handsome or homely, witty or dull? Indeed, she fired questions at him so fast that he could not find opportunity to reply to them all.

But while she was talking of the prince she seemed to be thinking of the count, now throwing her eyes at his, now taking them suddenly away, only to turn them back again. It was not long before Carl began to think that his threat to rob his master of the princess' heart might be carried out. He could certainly say truthfully that the lady was a very attractive person. At any rate, she was so to Krakousky.

However, the count did not feel at liberty to make a long stay in Metropolis and the next day proposed to return. But the princess told him that she was preparing a message for Prince Otto and had not yet got it ready. She hinted that she was waiting for some decision on the part of the prime minister and the cabinet. Of course Count Carl could not disobey what was a command and put off his return till he should have the lady's permission to go.

The count from the moment he met Caspar Audenreid saw nothing of him. When he asked the princess what had become of his associate she told him that he seemed to have taken a fancy to her maid of honor and the maid seemed to reciprocate. "I have therefore permitted them to remain together," she said, "not caring to interfere in a love affair."

It occurred to Count Carl that this was a device on the part of the princess to prevent her own flirtation with himself from being interfered with. He would have chuckled at having so readily slipped into the princess' favor in place of his master had it not been that he was fascinated with her and remembered that a union between himself and one of royal blood was impossible.

The count was kept at the capital of Metropolis so long that he feared when permitted to leave that he would meet with a severe reception. However, he tore himself away at last and ventured to Auretania.

"Well," said his master, "what do you think of her?"

"She's not half bad," replied Carl.

"Not half bad! Why, you're in love with her."

"How does your highness know that?" stammered Carl.

"Audenreid, whom I sent to watch you, has told me so."

"Well, I watched you. What did Audenreid know of the matter? He saw nothing of me."

"I was Audenreid."

"You Audenreid!"

"Yes, and the maid of honor was the princess."

The approaching nuptials of the royal couple were announced, and in due time Prince Otto proceeded with a suit at the head of which was Count Carl. After the royal wedding had been celebrated the nuptials between Count Carl and the maid who he had supposed was the princess took place, the prince giving the bride away. As soon as the latter wedding had taken place the prince slapped his friend on the back and said:

"I wouldn't trust you out of my sight."

"I return your royal highness' compliment."

Trial Results in Tests of Competency of Supt.

given, when asked for the reason for the discrepancy the witness said that the Rumsey figures were estimated while the Battle Island figures were given from actual operation.

At the afternoon session counsel for the Battle Island Paper Company an dthe attorneys for the state locked horns over the question of the competency of Frank Rumsey, commissioner of public work and former employe of the Battle Island Paper company, to testify as to power production of the company's generating plant.

Deputy Attorney-General Sanford W. Smith and Edward J. Mone objected to questions framed by Attorney George W, Driscoll, representing the Battle Island interests on the ground that Mr. Rumsey was not qualified to give conclusive testimony about the technical problems of electric power production.

The total of the Battle Island company's claim for $1,827,000 before Judges Rodenbecker and Ackerson, lost its technical aspect for thhe afternoon and most of the time was devoted to a heated discussion of thhe qualifications of the witnesses.

Under the questioning of Attorney Driscoll, Mr. Rumsey testified that he hal kept what are known as ammeter and voltage records from May, 1907, up to the time he relinquished his position as supervising officers of the power plant in January, 1914.

"Where are these records?" asked Mr. Driscoll.

"They are lost," replied Mr. Rumsey.

"What did you do with them?"

"I left them in the plant, in a cupboard."

"Have you made any attempt to locate them?" Mr. Driscoll continued.

"Yes, we tried to find them, but could not," responded the witness.

"How long did you spend at the plant trying to find them?" interrogated Mr. Driscoll with a smile.

"About three hours," rejoined Mr. Rumsey."

"Were you instructed by anyone to keep these records?"

"No, I kept them for my own benefit."

LOSS COMPLICATES CASE

The loss of the records throws a still further tangle into the already complicated case. Up to date, testimony has been given that other important records on power and water measurements have been lost or misplaced. The first volume believed to be missing was the book of heads, giving the measurements of the water flow. The actual power production taken at the generators was another record which has not been placed in evidence.

Just before the adjournment last night, the state began its examination of Mr. Rumsey. He will be on the stand the greater part of this morning, it is expected.

The examination of Mr. Rumsey by Mr. Driscoll brought out testimony that the company had sufficient facilities for producing power at the power station and that the flow of the river was of such wolume as to insure sufficient power to maintain the sulphite mill.

DISPUTED BY STATE

This contention is disputed by the attorneys for the state, who have set up the claim that the river's flow was not sufficient to maintain the operation of the sulphite plant and that at times the water in the river was so low as to make production practically impossible.

Mr. George C. Chauncey preceded Mr. Rumsey on the stand and gave an estimate of the valuation of the water power at the Battle Island Power station. He placed this estimate at $440,000 and was given a severe grilling by Deputy Attorney-General Mone, who attempted to show that the power was not so valuable as that on the other side, where a claim against the state has already been judicially settled.

Attorneys for the state declared last night they expected to make a search for the records said to have been maintained by Mr. Rumsey. They contend these records will be a valuable bit of evidence in proving the case of the state.

BAD HOUSING AND ITS EFFECTS

Cause of Much Disease, Poverty and Crime.

IT RAISES TAX BURDENS.

John J. Murphy, Tenement House Commissioner of New York City, Traces Evil Results of Bad Housing on Family Life and on Workers.

The three great scourges of mankind, disease, poverty and crime, are largely due to bad housing, according to John J. Murphy, New York city's tenement house commissioner, whose official task it is to study and remedy as far as possible improper housing conditions. Mr. Murphy, who is the only tenement house commissioner in the United States, attended the recent national housing conference in Minneapolis and read a paper on housing conditions, based on his investigations in several large centers of population, in which he said:

"There can be no question that the three great scourges of mankind, disease, poverty and crime, are in a large measure due to bad housing in its broadest sense. Intemperance in many of its most repugnant forms may be traced to the fact that so many citizens are obliged to live in homes in which they can take neither pride nor comfort and which make the saloon seem desirable by contrast.

"Bad housing is especially detrimental in its consequences to the children reared under its influence. In many cases the evil influences of environment can never be eradicated. The need for the erection of institutions for the blind and hospitals for the child victims of tuberculosis, spinal meningitis and other diseases of like character is greatly intensified by bad home conditions. The employee living in a house inadequately lighted and ventilated is unable to perform his task with proper energy and intelligence. Women compelled to live in such houses develop tendencies to irritability, which frequently lead to family disruption.

"Bad housing tends to increase the tax burdens of a community by requiring larger expenditures for remedial service, which might otherwise be eliminated. The lack of proper cleanliness and decency in the exterior and interior of houses tends to reduce the self respect of the occupants. Note how eagerly the family which has even slightly improved its financial standing seeks buildings with more attractive exteriors and better illuminated rooms. It will also be found that as families descend in the social scale one of the pangs most keenly felt is the necessity for the occupancy of quarters in buildings whose general appearance indicates that they are occupied by the miserably poor.

"It may be said, therefore, that there is no phase of human existence in society which the housing question does not touch. There is no form of vice, crime, debility or shiftlessness which bad housing does not tend to nurture. 'Keeping up appearances' is often decried and deserves much of the reproach cast upon it when it simply means unwarranted extravagance to maintain a position which one's income does not justify, but among the poor it is an ever present aid to the maintenance of self-respect and is to be encouraged rather than decried.

"Sanitary research shows how important is the reaction of adequate light and ventilation on the health, stamina and moral character of individuals. Bad housing furnishes the fruitful nurseries of disease germs of all kinds, while at the same time creating conditions which prevent the building up of resistance to their inroads."

AM. LOCOMOTIVE LOST $7,000,000 IS CHARGED

New York—The American Locomotive company abandoned its automobile department with a loss of more than $7,000,000, and not $2,300,000, as announced by the company, according to Isaac M. Cate, a Baltimore stockholder. Mr. Cate is trying to oust the present management. He says:

"In the eight years the company made automobiles, gross earnings were $14,600,000. Since it lost $7,000,000 in this department, it cost the company above $21,600,000 to do $14,600,000 worth of business."

Mr. Cate makes an attack upon President Marshall's conduct of the business.

PALERMO BOY LANDS FIRST PRIZE IN CONTEST

The judges of the Corn Show have selected the winners and awarded a number of cash prizes to the best exhibits of corn. The corn exhibit was divided into several classes, the one acre yield, one-quarter yield, single and ten-ear exhibit, etc.

Ralph Sutcliffe, a schoolboy of Palermo, and one of the entrants in the children's contest, received first prize of $20 for the best 1-4 acre yield, with a record of 21 5-10 bushels, or practically 86 bushels to the acre. This is interesting from the fact that the boy's yield excels the prize-winning yield in the crib corn contest for adults.

There were more than 150 entries from school children and there is no doubt that future shows will embrace large number of juvenile entries.

An interesting feature of the school children's exhibit was the entries of girl producers, several of whom were successful in getting prizes at the show.

TRADE COMMISSION URGES PREPAREDNESS

the country against thhe worst effects of financial and commercial depressions.

"Business men are not lawyers, and they evolve some strange ideas as to the construction of certain laws. I was recently astonished to learn that the belief exists among many of them that non-competing firms cannot co-operate and form selling agencies to develop foreign business. This idea is unfortunate, and I fear that it has resulted in actually restraining the development of our commence abroad. And I might mention that such commerce can now be more easily developed since for the first time in our history we have begun to establish our own banks abroad, thus removing many of the difficulties surrounding foreign exchange and credit information. With American branch banks established in South America and projected in the Far East there is no reason why our business expension should halt.

"Perhaps you may think that I am over earnest in this advocacy of organization higher efficiency in business methods and modern practicets, the adoption of European ideals of thoroughness, the standardizing of accounting, but my earnestness proceeds from an understanding of the conditions which confront American business. The great war has brought to us great opportunities and equally great dangers. The thought that we must keep in mind is, After the war, what?- Shall we grow and expand while the growing is good, or calmly await the time when peace in Europe will be followed by fierce competition, not only in foreign markets but in our domestic market as well?

"Have we an inventory of our business resources? Are they being developed to the best advantage? Are our associations doing all they can? Are our methods and proceses standarized? In short, are our industries mobilized?

"Industrial preparedness must be the watchword. Let us have better organization and greater efficiency at home; let us push our trade abroad; let us develop our industry so strongly that no foreign competition can dislodge it."

A Very Old Rule.

The oldest mathematic book in the world is believed to be the "Papyrus Rhind" in the British museum, professed to have been written by Ahmes, a scribe of King Ra-a-us, about the period between 2000 and 1700 B. C. This "Papyrus Rhind" was translated by Eisenlohr of Leipsig, and it was found to contain a rule for making a square equal in area to a given circle. It was not put forth as an original discovery, but as the transcript of a treatise 500 years older still, which sends us back to approximately 2500 B. C., when Egyptian mathematicians solved, or thought they had solved, the problem of squaring the circle.

The "Bull."

The origin of the word "bull" as the definition of a confused utterance is doubtful. Some philologists say it comes from the French boule—"fraud" —and others that it is derived from the Icelandic bull—"nonsense." Many definitions have been attempted, but the best probably is that of Sydney Smith. Writing of the difference between wit and "bulls," he says: "Wit discovers real relations that are apparent; 'bulls' admit apparent relations that are not real. The stronger the apparent connection and the more complete the real disconnection of the ideas the greater the surprise and the better the 'bull.'"

Plenty of Results.

"What's Professor Diggs doing these days?"

"He's trying to decipher a Babylonian tablet."

"Any results so far?"

"Yes; Mrs. Diggs has nervous prostration and the children have been sent to the home of a relative."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

British Routed at Bagdad; Loss 5,000 Men; Left in a Hurry

Berlin—The defeat of the British troops who were advancing on Bagdad has developed into a rout, according to an official report received from the Turkish General Headquarters.

The British forces are utterly demoralized and are scattering in every direction, closely pursued by the Turks. The report says:

"The Turkish troops on the Irak front are pursuing the English in order to make their defeat more complete. The English losses in the engagements lasting from November 23d to the 26th exceed 5,000 men and officers.

"The soldiers are demoralized and are leaving their regiments and fleeing into the neighborhood. The English in one day carried off about 2,900 wounded. Among the wounded was the political agent at English headquarters, Sir Komen (?).

"The English were unable to stop their retreat at the highly fortified town of Azizi. They therefore tried to make a stand at a point fifteen kilometres (9.32 miles) of this town. where their rear guards were protected by monitors, but a sudden Turkish attack on the night of November 30 forced them further back in thed irection of Kuete-lemmara, 170 kilometres, (106 miles) south of Bagdad.

"At Azizi and in the neighborhood the Turkish forces captured large stores of food, ammunition and war material. Turkish patrols captured one hundred camels belonging to the English.

"The English departed so hurriedly that they were unable to destroy even a small part of their war material. Many personal effects of the officers were left behind.

"The Turkish forces have captured an English war motor-boat and a lighter on the river Tigris loaded with foodstuffs and war material. In their flight the English threw boxes of ammunition into the river."

ITALY PROMISES TO FIGHT TILL THE END FOR SERBIA

London.—The British pres, led by the Daily Telegraph, exults this morning over Baron Sonnino's solemn declaration, that Italy will adhere to the compact of London and not make peace until the central empires are beaten into the dust. They are even more enthusiastic over the pledge of Italy to furnish supplies and munitions to Serbia and to send an army to her retscue when the hour for vengeance strikes. The statements that Italy will not consider terms of peace until ravished Belgium and Serbia not only are avenged but made greater than ever, has touched a responsive chord here.

"By this pronouncement," says the Daily Telegraph, "the Quad-

WINTER FAIR FAILS TO DRAW THE INTEREST OF FULTON'S POPULATION

The corn, fruit, vegetable and poultry exhibit, under the auspices of the Oswego County Agricultural Society, will close tonight, but the exhibits will remain in place until tomorrow morning.

Mr. C. I. Kingsbury, secretary of the Society, says the show has been a huge success, except that the patronage was too small. "Especially important is the necessity for the farmers of this county to be more enthusiastic in so far as entering exhibits is concerned," is Mr. Kingsbury's statement; "and I would like to see more farmers represented at the next show."

"There is probably $600,000 wor th of corn brought into the county annually," he continued, "and there is really no necessity for this. A number of years ago it was cheaper to buy corn outside than here in the county, but these things have changed now and it is possible to grow corn here which cannot be surpassed, price and quality considered."

The judges have awarded prizes to the entrants and a number of exhibits were given favorable comment, in particular, some of the samples of corn exhibited by school children.

In the one-acre contest, in which the corn was crib dried at Canton, William Hubbard, of Granby, secured the first prize of $30, with a seventy bushel yield. Carl Clement, a schoolboy of Sandy Creek, captured second prize of $20 with a forty-bushel yield.

Ralph Sutcliffe, of Palermo, won first prize of $20 in the 1-4 acre yield of popcorn, open only to schoolchildren. The boy's yield was 21 5-10 bushels, or 86 to the whole acre, which the judges agreed was a remarkable showing on the part of a juvenile farmer. This crop surpasses even the yield of the prize winner in the one acre contest for adults. Glenn Terpening, Fulton, took second prize of $10, with a yield of 19 4-10 bushels. Sherman Lacey, of Fernwood, with a yield of 18 bushels, took third prize of $5.

The awards in the corn contest of single and 10 ear exhibits for adults were: 1st, Fred Smith, Fulton, Red Dent Corn, 10 ears, 1st prize. Smith also won first prize for single ear Red Dent Corn.

Ralph E. Owens, Fulton, had the best exhibit of 10 ears, 8 row Flint. Fred Smith, of this city, took first on 110 ears, 12 row Flint. T. E. Delancey, of Scriba took first prize for the best 10 ears of white Flint, also 1st and second for Red Flint.

Harynes Snyder, of Volney, took first on Yellow Dent, 10 ears and Harold Dann, of Granby, took second prize. E. C. Morgan had the best 10 ears of White Dent.

In the white popcorn contest, Charles Anderson took first prize with the best ten ears; Ralph E. Owens, Fulton, second; and Haynes Snyder, Volney, third. Lee Baldwin, Fulton, had the best 10 ears of black popcorn.

T. A. Delancey won first and second prizes for 8-row Flint, also first and second on 12 row flint, single ear. Fred Smith took third in the latter contest.

On the White Dents, Delancey captured 1st and 2nd, and E. C. Morgan was third.

Ralph E. Owens was first in single ear white popcorn entries, Morgan 2nd and Charles Anderson, 3rd.

Fred Smith, Fulton, secured 1st in the single and 10 ears contest.

In the exhibit of seed grains, consisting of seed rye, seed barley, seed white oats, peas, buckwheat, kidney beans, and black wax beans, W. C. Hubbard of Granby won 1st prize for the best collection and Ralph E. Owens took the prize for the best half bushel exhibits.

There were 150 entrants in the school children's corn contests, and the prize winners included the following;

Glenn Terpening, Granby; W. V. Wilmot, Mexico; Geo. Wills, Scriba, Lizzie Turot, Palermo; Gaylord Kilburn, Martin Cole, Harold West, Max Wall, Scriba; Kirtland Hill, Scriba; Fred Rath, Volney; Clarence aBrnard Mapleview; Ward Dwyer, Oswego Town; Duane Weiss, Volney; Sherman Lacey, Fernwood; Helen Burdick, Clyde Sulcliffe, Palermo; Kennard Rath, Volney; Ernest McConnell, Oswego; Walter Worden, Scriba; Howard Hart, Palermo; Herbert Lee, Mexico; Lisle Hutchinson, Oswego Town; Ismael Dorcey, Mexico; Glenn Green, Mexico; Mildred Borden, Mexico; Willie Whiting, Scriba; Jeffrey Newton, Oswego Town, Coridon Barlow, Scriba; Conrad House, Scriba; Katherine Krook, Scriba; Claire Scudder, Eldrigde Coe, Scriba; Frank Wells, Scriba; Theodore Church, Stanley Holly, Mexico; Gayford Tice, Oswego Town; Earl Brenner, Ruth Gardner, Mexico; Franklin Wilder, Scriba; and Eleanor Sheldon, of Scriba.

The winners in the poultry section were the Wallzoo Poultry Farm, Woodville, N. Y., Ralph E. Owens, Newton Ward, Harold Dann, F. L. Elliott, Walter Nelson, Geo. Denniston, Martin Hall, and Robert Johnson. Mr. Elliott won a 1st prize on a pen of Laken Velders. Mr. Dann took first on an exhibit of turkeys.

In the fruit section the entries of Dr. Fox, Jesse Carrier, D. D. Stone and William Hubbard were prize winners.

Secretary Kingsbury wishes to announce that owing to the large expense of conducting the show, it is necessary to have a larger patronage than his obtained so far. The price of admission has been reduced to 10 cents and the attendance should increase.

RED CROSS SEAL FIGURES

225,000,000 Holiday Stickers Already Distributed in United States

Few people have any conception of the magnitude of the Red Cross Christmas Seal Campaign. Here are a few figures that will show what a gigantic movement this is. Already 225,000,000 seals have been printed and practically that entire number distributed to agents in every state and territory of the Union from Alaska in the North to the Canal Zone in the South and from Porto Rico in the East to Hawaii in the West. Advertising circulars, posters, cards, etc., to the number of several million have also been distributed. Not less than 1,000,000 personal letters asking people to buy seals have been sent out. It is estimated that the army of workers, nearly all of whom are volunteers, engaged in selling the seals numbers well over 500,000. The advertising and publicity donated to the compaign amount to several hundred thousand dollars. Every effort is being put forth to sell 75,000,000 seals, or less than one of every man, woman and child in the United States. This will mean $750,000 for the anti-tuberculosis associations of the country derive their support from Red Cross Seals.

ALL STEEL MILLS NOW ON DOUBLE TIME

New York—Local labor leaders were yesterday notified by Pittsburgh labor leaders that blast furnaces are now working night and day in every iron and steel center of the country. Some 325,000 men are employed.

The statement received says:

"It is today almost impossible to buy, for immediate delivery, pig iron, scrap or ingots in sizable quantities at any industrial plant in the country."

A REASON FOR THE PERSEVERANCE

The Evening Times is in receipt of a telephone call, the wire correspondent asking, "Don't you know that Commission-Manager form of Government is dead in Fulton?" The query, of course, came in response to an article which appeared in this column Wednesday.

In making public reply to the telephone correspondent, we have this and only this to say: "Keeping everlastingly at it brings success." Persistent pounding is responsible for the best victories. No great or lasting achievement comes from a single effort, or in the case of this city, failure to go ahead with a project that had enough momentum to carry it through to a successful issue; but which came to an inglorious ending.

If the word of certain men mean anything, Commission Government is not a dead issue in Fulton. The Evening Times felicitates the men who realize the advantages to be gained under the new system of government, adding that no great success is gained without a lot of effort. In the cities where the new government is established it required months of preparation to lead up to the desired result, and a great deal of hard work was done of which the outside world knows nothing.

There are reasons for the confidence reposed by some men in Commission form of Government, one of them being the existing condition of this city's financial affairs in contrast with the statements issued by the revenue departments of other cities. Jersey City forms an interesting example. In that city the budget for the fiscal year which began on December 1 shows a decrease of nearly $200,000 in the aggregate of appropriations from the last year of a former administration, despite broader activities and increase in population.

Here is a comparative table showing appropriations during the last year under the old plan and for the period the new plan has been in force:

Year	General Fund.	Sinking Funds.
1912-1913 (old plan)	$3,572,661	$654,419
1913-1914 (new plan)	3,633,357	661,693
1914-1915	3,337,821	660,553
1915-1916	3,392,902	667,197

The combined charges for the general fund and the sinking funds for the last year of the old plan was $4,227,080, compared with $4,060,099 in the budget for the coming fiscal year, a decrease of $166,981.

These figures are gained from an article which appeared in a recent issue of the New York Times. Continuing the article says concerning taxation in Jersey City:

"One feature of the tax collecting zeal of the new administration, and, incidentally, an explanation of the lower rate, is furnished by this table, which gives the figures at which the personal property of some large corporations has been assessed under the old and the new plan of government.

	Old Plan	New Plan
Public Service Corporation	$3,353,500	$3,851,000
Standard Oil Company	156,000	1,500,000
N. Y. & N. J. Telephone Co.	667,000	1,125,000
Tobacco Trust	249,000	400,000
Colgate & Co.	200,000	400,000
Swift & Co.	75,000	160,000

"In the new survey for taxation we have maps where the assessment per city lot in each locality is plainly marked," said Commissioner Brensinger. "These maps are open for public inspection. It was a radical departure from the old system where political pull counted. Every taxpayer may see what every other taxpayer is assessed, and judge for himself whether the valuations had been made with fairness."

THE HOBO

The professional bo is a degenerate eight times out of ten. This sounds a little severe, but it's true nevertheless. A saloon stew and a bed on the floor, and clothes enough to cover his nakedness, and an occasional drink, and the requirements of the bo are filled. These hobos are homeless, harmless, helpless. They are not criminals, nor should they be treated as such. They have been stung by the bug of wandering. To really help a hobo is to evidence your lack of understanding of this insincere individual.

Then there is the tramp, who is more dangerous, more desperate.

Then there is the down-and-outer, and this man deserves your help. Not charity, Not anything but a chance to work. If you hand this fellow charity, you harm him. You will soon transfer him into a hobo or a tramp.—Silent Partner.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—Postmaster General Burleson has been recognized as the active political personality in the present Cabinet, and he has lately furnished additional evidence that he is still on the job.

Just as it became clear that the Democrats in Congress were about to show defiance to their master's voice from the White House, Mr. Burlleson hastened to publish a "List of first, second and third class postoffices where presidential postmasters have not been appointed since March 4, 1913." The list is imposing, comprising some 1,400 places and taking in every State.

There is no doubt here regarding Mr. Burleson's purpose in publishing the list just now. It is very generally believed that he is dangling a baited hook before the Democratic Congressmen who are showing signs of independence from White House control. The list is looked upon as at once a menace and an appeal. In effect Mr. Burleson says to Democratic Congressmen: "Here is the pie which is not yet distributed. You can see how much your share should be. If you are good, you will get it. If you are not good, it will be withheld."

George Washington, farewell address.—It is important that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in he exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation, for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Opinions

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S WORK

The Federal Trade Commission is clothed with such inquistorial powers that its creation was regarded by the business community with suspicion and uneasiness.

When the new body was constituted, however, it declared that it purposed to be not a menace but a help to corporations engaged in commerce. There is no question that, properly conducted, it can be of assistance to the public and to business.

The commission has set about its work in a manner to allay the fears that were aroused when it came in existence. In arranging for the methods of collecting statistical data, however, Commissioner Hurley proposes something that is certain to arouse opposition.

He would require data to show the cost of production in various industries. Where the managers of a plant through methods and devices of their own invention succeed in cheapening the cost of production it would be unfair to compel them to supply data for the benefit of their competitors.—N. Y. Herald.

PROPER STATE FUNCTION

The supreme court of Dakota has upheld the right of school authorities to examine the physical condition of a pupil. A parent claiming that the school board had no such authority, brought a test case, with the result mentioned. The New York Sun comments as follows:

"This decision overcomes the frequently urged objection by parents to physical examination of school children. That health observation is an important function of government is an exiom, and that the maintenance of ah igh mental and physical standard among children is the most important contribution toward the general health and efficiency is becoming more and more recognized. Nowhere else may the value of this idea be tested and practically applied so well as in the schools."

A recent article by Edward F. Brown of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor emphasizes thei mportance of school inspection with a view to the prevention of disease and the correction of defects. The expenditure of municipal funds for this purpose, is no longer regarded as experimental, because not only is the spread of disease prevented but the efficiency of the school child is promoted and the defects of sight and hearing, the existence of which have not been suspected, are remedied.

The extra cost of educating pupils who fail of promotion because of physical defects is very large compared with thec ost of physical examination which would correct defects and make the pupil better in body and mind.—Watertown Standard.

FEEDING MIND USEFUL

Dr. Max G. Schlapp, of the Cornell Post-Graduate Hospital, believes that the human race is breaking down. He told the congregation at the Park Avenue Methodist church so last Sunday.

Statistics collected by governments and insurance companies show that the average length of human life increases, so that Dr. Schlapp is probably wrong as to his main conclusion. But what interests us is Dr. Schlapp's premises and not his conclusion.

He thinks that automobile and moving picture industries give employment to thousands of persons who are not producers, but consumers and that the cause of national physical breakdown is that we have too many consumers and not enough producers.

It is odd how intelligent men so easily go wrong in thinking about economic phenomena.

If all the men employed in the automobile industry were set at work to grow foodstuffs, for instance, they could not possibly increase the food production of the country as much as the manufacture of motor vehicles and tractors has increased that production.

The man who builds automobiles is just as much a producer as is the man who builds barns or grows wheat and corn.

So is them oving picture worker a producer, and a most useful one, for his product feeds and improves the mind, and feeding the mind is certainly as useful as feeding the stomach.—N. Y. American.

WANTS STATE PAY FOR HENS FOXES KILLED

Lewiston, Me.—A. G. Dill believes that the legislature, if it is going to protect foxes, should provide funds to compensate poultry raisers for chickens and hens used by reynard as food. In the last two months foxes have killed and taken away 205 chickens and 160 hens from Dill's poultry sheds.

Since it became legal to trap the animals Dill has had a string of traps out in the vicinity of his [illegible] that he each trap has remained [illegible] [illegible]

MAIL PACKAGES EARLY; HELP P. O.

Mail early, wrap securely and address plainly are the components of the slogan to be used in the campaign launched here in preparation for the annual holiday rush of mail. Large posters bearing the above slogan have been printed at the direction of Postmaster Peter Conley, and are hung at conspicuous points in the handsome postoffice. Other words appearing on the poster are: "Parcels may be marked, 'not to be opened until Christmas', or with any similar direction. Fifty pounds, limit distance 150 miles, and 20 pounds, everywhere in the United States."

If the exigencies that beset the local postoffice during the Christmas season were fully understood and appreciated by Fulton people, they would without doubt follow out to the best of their ability the instructions issued yearly by the postmaster in regard to the holiday rush.

In their effort to meet all the requirements of this time of the year, Postmaster Conley and his men urgently request the cooperation of the public in general.

According to the postoffice officials a large quantity of mail has to be returned to the directory clerk through the failure of the senders to place the correct address or to write a legible hand. The plan of writing the sender's address in the upper left hand corner of a letter or package is highly recommended by the officials as it will be the means of preventing much mail from going to the Dead Letter Office. If the person for whom the mail is intended cannot be found. then the sender will receive back what he or she has sent.

As it is probable many of the people would object to sending their Christmas packages at an early date, the Parcels Post Department has allowed the directions as regards their opening to be printed in prominent places upon the packages. From past experiences the "Mail Early" campaign has been successful each year. The slogan was deducted from the corollary, if you shop early, why not mail early?

Following are instructions or "Don'ts" issued today by Postmaster Conley in his campaign to relieve the congestion at the postoffice during the Christmas rush:

Don't wrap your article in too much paper. It makes the package heavy.

"Don't write 'Merry Christmas' and other inscriptions near the address.

"Don't wrap breakable goods in a paper parcel.

"Don't put a letter in a package sent fourth rate. Pay first class.

"Don't seal your parcel.

"Don't leave meat and other perishable goods at a sub-station. Bring them to the main postoffice.

Don't put a two-cent stamp on a package calling for a 10-cent stamp. It will come back to you.

"Don't send valuable goods without insurance.

"Don't send flowers tied in paper. Put them in a wooden box.

"Don't wait until the day before Christmas to mail your packages. Mail them early."

OSWEGO BUSINESS BLOCK BURNED

Loss of Heagerty Property May Reach $50,000— Used as Furniture Storage Warehouse.

Oswego—Fire, starting at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, destroyed the three upper floors of the Heagerty block at the corner of West First and Cayuga streets, causing a loss which will probably approximate about $50,000. The building is owned by M. J. Fitzgerald of Utica and Prof. H. S. Lavere of this city, having been purchased a year ago last August. It is valued at about $28,000 and is insured for about $16,000.

The Oswego Times gives the following account of the fire:

While the walls are apparently uninjured, the interior is wrecked. Outside of the building the heaviest loss will fall upon the Devoe-Haver Manufacturing company, which occupied the second and third floors. The stock of manufactured chemicals and raw material is valued at over $15,000 and the formulas and recipes, all of which are believed to have been destroyed, may bring the loss up to about $20,000. The insurance is about $7,000. The stock of the Mylott Clothing company is also badly damaged and that of the Oneida County Creameries store as well but the amount of loss on these store has not been estimated. The top floor of the building was used for storage purposes and contained considerable furniture and a large amount of unclaimed freight stored there by the New York Central freight company.

Origin a Mystery

The fire started in the third floor, as near as can be learned and the only fire there is said to have been in the drying room of the Devoe-Haver company. When first discovered the smoke was coming out of the windows of the two top floors but it looked like an easy fire to fight. Failure to get water on the fire gave it a big start and there was then no chance of saving the top three floors. What was the cause of the failure of the water is a matter which is to be fully investigated. One hydrant, at least, the nearest, on the opposite side of the road, had a broken valve stem and could not be turned on. Superintendent Ormsby of the Department of Water states that two weeks ago, when the hydrants were put in shape for the winter, this hydrant was reported in good shape. Outside of that he has no statement to make.

It is claimed that the hydrant at the corner of West First and Seneca streets, to which one lead was attached, was found only partially turned on, which would account for the feeble stream which came from it early in the fire. This hydrant is from a 20 inch main and should have furnished plenty of water for several leads of hose. Two engines were put to work and as soon as the streams from them began to take effect the flames began to yield to control.

The Chamber of Commerce, which occupied offices in the first floor of the building, saved most of its office goods and fixtures, the principal damage being done by water before the goods could be carried out. The Chamber had already rented the building formerly occupied by the Dime Building & Loan Association in West Second street, between Bridge and Cayuga streets, and will be open for business as usual tomorrow morning. The rescue work was performed by a number of volunteers under the leadership of R. A. Downey.

Among the losses n the fire was $1,000 worth of goods owned by the Silk Kote Varnish and Polish Company of Newark, N. J., which was being stored in the building. Mr. Mcnard, in charge of the company, says there was no insurance and that he has already wired for a new stock of goods.

Worst Fire in Years

The fire was one of thew orst in some tme and it was only by the hardest work that the figmen were able to check the flames as soon as they did. The failure of water at the start is largely to be blamed for the spread of the flames as the general opinion is that with a few good streams early in the fire it could have been confined to at least one floor. The blame for the broken hydrant and for the failure to turn on the water at another hydrant can only be fixed after an investigation and it is believed that Mayor Hennessey will start one within a very few days.

At 3 o'clock the fire was completely under control and by 4 o'clock it was practically extinguished.

ILLUMINATION AN AID TO BUSINESS

Electricity is used more every year for advertising and display purposes and there is no time when it is employed more effectively than during the Christmas shopping season. A writer in the Electrical World offers some suggestions to merchants as to how they may make their stores attractive and increase their business. Here are some of his suggestions:

The first and most urgent necessity is that your store look "Christmasy" inside and out. Your own ideas and those suggested by past performances by department stores are the best guide as to what to do. Outline your building with red and white and green electric lights. Put up a "Merry Christmas" sign. Be generous with outdoor decorations that will mark your store—as far as the eye can reach—as a center of Christmas activity and suggestion. In the window of the store itself make lavish use of Christmas bells and Christmas streamers, holly, mistletoe and trees. Work hard to outdo every other local store in the appealing festive gayety of your establishment.

Plan ahead a series of good Christmas windows. You have seen a hundred good ones. The manufacturers are all suggesting appropriate displays for featuring their goods. Put the Christmas note in every window, but remember that the purpose is to sell the goods and do not let the merchandise become too secondary an impression.

Dress your goods for Christmas by the use of holly boxes and holly wrapping paper and tie them with holly tape. Use plenty of good Christmas price cards and announcement posters, in green and red, that carry out the Christmas idea, with holly in constant evidence. Much can be done with cards and posters, both in the store and windows to keep the speed and spirit of your message.

Consider the fact that with many of your prospective customers electrical Christmas gifts are strong in novelty. It is well to have a Christmas opening in the store for which personal invitations can be sent to all your customers, with a cordial invitation extended to the public from your general advertising. At this reception give a buttonhole sprig of holly to every man and woman. Pick the most attractive girl among your employes and have her present sprigs of holly to the men guests, putting them into their buttonholes. Have one of your young men make the presentation to the ladies. Have an orchestra on hand to play good Christmas music and lively popular airs that will keep up the spirits of the crowd.

Schedule a series of special demonstrations every other day throughout the Christmas shopping weeks and advertise each one of them in the newspapers on both the preceding day and the day of the demonstration. Take the grill, for instance, and demonstrate it—employing grills and showing all the different uses to which it can be used. Around about the demonstration space have gift grills, tied with ribbon, stacked up in holly boxes ready for delivery.

"THE FACE IN THE MOONLIGHT" TODAY

World Film Corporation releases the five part William A. Brady photoplay Robert Warwick in "The Face in the Moonlight." The picture is the work of Mons. Albert Capellani, the renowned French director, and it is his first production for World Film. Mons. Capellani is probably the most experienced motion picture director in the world, with a record of 12 years continuous success in directing big productions.

Robert Mantell, the famous star, made one of his strongest successes with this play, the period of which is, that when Napoleon was coming into power in France. The great Emperor does not actually appear in the picture but his hand is apparent in the action and the denouement of the drama which is written round the extraordinary resemblance of two half brothers, each of whom is unaware of the other's existence.

One of the two, Victor, is a chivalrous, aristocratic soldier, falsely accused of a murder, which his villainous half brother committed. Napoleon pardons Victor, and Rabat, the murderer, at last goes to the scaffold to expiate his crimes. The film appears at the Quirk today.

LEON HAMMOND'S FUNERAL HELD TODAY

The funeral of Leon J. Hammond, was held this morning at 9:30, attended by a large number of persons.

Assistant Chief Rude and a group of firemen went to the Hammond home in a body. Members of the old Volunteer Fire Department and the members of the Holy Name Society were also present.

Chief Waugh's men were honorary pall bearers, and six brothers-inlaw were pall bearers.

While the funeral procession was moving from the home to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, the fire bell was tolled continuously, and at the church the Rev. J. L. Lindeman eulogized the dead man. Clarence and Lawrence Bray, nephews of Mr. Hammond, assisted the pastor at mass, which occupied the greater part of the morning, after which the body was taken to St. Mary's cemetery for burial.

Forty Thousand Cars Held Up by Barment of United States Ships

New York—The following facts stand out in connection with the freight congestion in New York in its relation to the recent seizure of American steamships by the British Government:

Forty thousand car loads of export freight are stagnating at New York terminals through lack of shipping facilities.

Eleven ocean carrying American freight ships of the American Transatlantic Service are held up in various ports of the world, either seized by Great Britain or held in port through fear of seizure.

The average carrying capacity of a freight car is twenty tons.

The total tonnage of freight held up is 1,000,000.

The total tonnage of the eleven transatlantic ships is 60,940.

If, therefore, these eleven ships were now available for service, in each voyage they made out of New York they could immediately relieve the congestion by 3,047 cars or 60,940 tons of freight.

Six thousand cars of freight are held up in the Lackawanna railroad yards alone.

In two sailings the American transatlantic ships could sweep those yards clear.

The same could be done with the 5,000 cars stalled in the Pennsylvania yards.

nI the Lehigh Valley yards there are 3,970 cars stalled.

The first four ships on the list of the American Transatlantic could dispose of the freight accumulated in that yard.

The steamship Winneconne alone, which is anchored off Liberty Island, could take care of 160 cars of freight today. The Ausable, at Galveston, could be brought here in six days and could load 260 cars more. If the Winnebago had been permitted to sail on time she would have been here today, and could have loaded 356 cars.

Each of these ships has American registry. Each is entitled under the law to fly the American flag. Great Britain has seized them under allegations of German ownership. The American Transatlantic company has furnished sworn affidavits that every share of stock in the concern is held by American citizens for their interest alone.

Yet Great Britain has swept the fleet of eleven ships from the sea. At a time when they would have been of real service as a part of the American mercantile marine they lie helpless at anchor.

Greece is Expected to Make Quick Decision Following Italy's Action

London.—Announcement by Italy that she will not undertake to negotiate a separate peace, together with a report that she has landed an expeditionary force at Avlona in keeping with her promise to aid the Serbs, is looked upon here as an important factor in clearing the situation in the Balkans.

The effect of Italy's determination to fight until the Allies' cause is victorious, it is believed here, will be seen first in a stiffening of the backbone of the Greek government and a quick decision favorable to the Entente Powers. Reports from Athens last night indicate the negotiations are likely to end in complete satisfaction to the Allies.

The points over which the Greek government continues to object are those calling for the free use by the Allies of the railways of the country and the right of allied war ships to police Greek waters against submarines.

Athens, it is believed, now must realize that the Entente Powers are going into the Balkan campaign united in purpose, and that to the Franco-British forces will be added the armies of Russia and Italy. Already there is a report that the Russians have crossed the Roumanian border and are marching through that country for a blow at Bulgaria, but that report lacks confirmation. It is true it would indicate that Roumania had decided to throw in her lot with the Allies, as the Tsar's forces would not be likely to enter neutral territory without permission.

While the announcement that Italian troops are being landed at Alvonia came from Athens, the news bears out the declaration of Baron Sonnino, Italian Foreign Minister, in Parliament on Wednesday that the Italian flag soon would be flying on the eastern side of the Adriatic.

Just what route the Italians will take in pushing through the mountain barriers of Albania is arousing considerable speculation. Difficult to travel when conditions are favorable, the roads leading to the east already are deep with snow and the temperature in the high mountain passes is many degrees below the freezing point.

If the Italians intend to strike out for the East from Avlona it is believed they will follow the valley of the Semeni, which will lead them to the Serbian frontier south of Ochrida Lake. Then turning to the northeast they can skirt the northern end of Prespa Lake directly to the west of Monastir and near the present battle line of the hard pressed Serbs. By taking this route they probably would unite with the remnant of the Serbian army which seems destined to be forced back into Albania along the frontier west of Monastir.

Another road open to the Italians is from the Gulf of Drin, ninety miles north of Axlona. From the Gulf the Italians already have constructed excellent roads northeastward through Drin Valley toward the Serbian frontier at Prisrend. Were these roads to be used, however, it is believed Avlona would not be used as ab ase for landing detachments.

Latest reports from Monastir say the Serbs still are holding out, but that their position is most helpless. The Bulgars have cut their communications between the city and the Greek frontier, and as soon as the pressure becomes too strong the Serbs will be forced back into Albania.

ruple Entente becomes a Quintuple Alliance, whose troops will not cease to fight until the power of German militarism is broken and the forces of freedom triumph."

The correspondent of the Morning Post telegraphs from Athens "Greece having conceded all the demands of the Entente Powers, the military attaches of the Allies and members of the Greek General Staff ar conferring about the withdrawal of Greek troops from Salonica, the Allies having given a pledge that in return for these concessions the sovereignty of Greece in all the territory affected will be not only recognized but guaranteed."

IN THE SPORTING WORLD

Recent developments in the game of football have given to the position of center opportunities equal to those of any other on the rush line for spectacular work, and among the players in the pivotal position Center Cool of Cornell university is considered by many experts to be the best the year has produced. Cool played the same position last year, and his experience has been of great value to himself and the eleven. Although a small man for center—Cool weighs only about 160 pounds—he has been a power in the line, both on offense and defense. He is a cool, heady player of the rangy, quick acting type.

Suggestions For Golfers.

"There is no such thing for any man as eternal steadiness, but there is no reason why most golfers shouldn't develop a much greater steadiness than is shown," writes Jerome D. Travers in the American Magazine.

"It is all a matter of practicing two things—the proper use of the club and concentration or nerve control. The golfer who can't concentrate, who doesn't practice concentration, will never be able to develop steadiness, although he may be a fine shot maker and may be capable of some wonderful rounds.

"So, to put a few suggestions into compact, concrete form, the following are offered to those who desire a change for the better in their golfing steadiness or unsteadiness: (1) Practice concentration, keeping your mind on the ball as well as your eye; (2) make up your mind to accept a bad lie or some bad luck as part of the game and to be expected; (3) play each shot as it comes, without regret over past mistakes or worry over future troubles; (4) practice the short game, shots around the green, at every possible chance. It is here that scores are reduced; (5) practice with the brain as well as with the arms and legs. Cultivate brain control over muscle."

Sloman a Speed Marvel.

Apparently the Pacific coast is developing another cinder path flier in Frank Sloman, the youth who recently broke the American interscholastic record for the quarter mile by running that distance in 48 1-5 seconds. An idea of this schoolboy's speed can be gathered from the fact that, although thousands of 440 yard dashes have been run in the past fifteen years, the record has been broken but three times.

In 1901 C. Long set the time at 51 1-5 seconds, where it remained until Ted Meredith cut it down to 48 4-5 seconds in 1912 while attending Mercersberg academy. Three years later Sloman cut three-fifths of a second off Meredith's time, and if he continues to improve as Ted did after graduation from scholastic ranks the California lad will eventually rank with the great quarter milers of athletic history.

Feds to Play In New York City.

Directors of the Federal league at their annual meeting at Indianapolis definitely decided to invade New York city in 1916. The Kansas City club, whose franchise was declared forfeited, will be sent to New York and strengthened so that it "will merit the support of the New York fans."

James A. Gilmore, who was re-elected president of the league, stated that grounds had been obtained on Manhattan Island for the New York club. He said plans had been submitted for stands to seat 55,000 persons and that the league would be ready for operation in New York at the beginning of the 1916 season.

Coach Sharpe's Good Year.

This is Dr. Sharpe's fourth season as coach at Cornell. It took him three seasons to get his system running smoothly. Of course the Harvard triumph is the prize feat of his record. Sharpe has been aided materially by the prowess of Charlie Barrett, quarterback; Cool at center, and Shelton, a wonderful end.

A SHINING EXAMPLE.

A casual observation of the street paving in Breslau as well as of street repair operations reveals, among other evidences of systematic efficiency, the distinguishing characteristic that it is "put to stay," says Consul Harry G. Setzler, Breslau, Germany, in Commerce Reports. Torn up streets are such rare occurrences as to be events of noteworthy importance. This is all the more remarkable when the natural features of the city and its surroundings are considered.

TOWNS MORE HEALTHFUL.

Dr. T. D. Wood Ascribes the Cause to Inferior Rural Schools.

In a recent address before the Illinois state charities conference at Danville Dr. Thomas D. Wood, chairman of the committee on health problems in education of the National Education association, declared that there is more ill health among children and adults in rural America today than in our cities. Among other things, he said:

It is apparent that within the past decade the actual and vaunted physical superiority of country people and children over those living in the city has been reversed, and now it is confidently affirmed that for the entire population city dwellers are more healthy than those who dwell in rural districts. City life is more healthful than that of the country.

It is just as true, however, and startlingly significant, in view of the preceding statements, that most of our best human material for the cities and for the nation must still come from the country. If rural America is still to be a satisfactory nursery for human life it must be made healthful and attractive. It must furnish a generous fraction of the best of the population, and it must provide conditions favorable for the cultivation of the best, at least so far as the biologic and fundamental qualities of life are concerned.

The problem, then, for bringing about sufficient improvement in the healthfulness of rural life to provide a worthy birthplace and nursery for the best human stock is not simply a problem of the rural school, of the farm or of rural life in general, but it is a great, pressing problem of the nation, affecting national safety, national prosperity and national perpetuity.

Rural schools are, on the average less adequate for their use than prisons, asylums, almshouses, stables, dairy barns, pigpens, chicken houses and dog kennels are for their uses. Healthful and attractive rural schools are absolutely essential to the physical, mental, social, economic and moral well being of the children themselves and to the life and welfare of the nation as a whole. The health care of rural school children should include at least the following:

Schoolhouses sanitary and attractive well ventilated, lighted, cleaned and equipped within and without with the health essentials.

Teachers better trained and better paid to do their logical and full share in carrying out a health program.

Health examinations, including dental inspection, once a year.

Follow-up health work by district and school nurses.

Health care in the school, including health instructions, warm school lunches, toothbrush drills and inculcation of all health habits.

Provision for removal of injurious physical defects by dental clinics, health clinics, etc.

Co-operation of all available individuals and organizations for the promotion of health and welfare of country school children.

His Maternal Grandma.

A devoted father after a day's absence was met by his two little sons.

"Have you been good boys?"

Silence.

"Have you been good boys?"

"No, papa. I called grandma a bad word," said the five-year-old, turning scarlet.

"Is it possible? What did you call your grandma?"

"I called her a human being."

The father, with a mighty effort, maintained his gravity and closed the scene decorously. "I must forgive you for once, but remember, if you ever call your grandmother a human being again I shall have to spank you."—London Telegraph.

Finger Nails.

The growth of the finger nail is an inch and a half a year. It grows more quickly in summer than in winter. The nail of the middle finger grows the fastest and that of the thumb the slowest.

BE TACTFUL.

Talent is something, but tact is everything. Talent is serious, sober, grave and respectable. Tact is all that and more too. It is not a seventh sense, but is the life of all the five. It is the open eye, the quick ear, the judging taste, the keen smell and the lively touch. It is the interpreter of all riddles, the surmounter of all difficulties and the remover of all obstacles. Tact is a wonder worker.

A Matrimonial League

By SARAH BAXTER

"I think, girls,"—said Miss Clara Mansfield to four other young ladies who were sipping afternoon tea with her, "that if something is not done, and that, too, pretty soon, we're all booked for old maids. No young men come to this town, and those who are here are leaving. There are still left enough of them to provide us with husbands, but they have grown up beside us, with nothing occurring to make them matrimonially inclined toward us. Those men who have married have chosen wives elsewhere. It provokes me to see some girl with neither brains nor beauty brought back here by one of our fellows simply because she was new to him."

"No such thing, Clara," put in Margaret Stark. "The reason why girls from other places are getting the fellows away from us is that they go for them, while we sit here idly sucking our thumbs. But you are right when you say something must be done or we shall all be old maids."

"I've heard of a custom somewhere," said Dora Elkins, "that gives the advantage to the girl. If a woman wants a man she paints a red heart on one of her visiting cards and pins it on to the coat or the hat or something of the man she wants. Now, how would it do for us to form a league of heart pinners, each girl member pledged to pin a heart to some man?"

"Horrible!" exclaimed Lucy Jones, throwing her eyes and her hands up at the ceiling.

"Better than everlasting spinsterhood," said Evelyn Treborne.

The upshot of the dialogue was the formation of the league proposed, each girl making the pledge, though it was decided to leave out the card of the one pinning on the heart. Modesty would not stand this. Besides, an anonymous heart would excite curiosity. But the intent of the token was permitted to reach the young men who were to be the victims. Miss Mansfield had a brother who was wanted by one of the young ladies—which one she was not told—and she volunteered to give him the notice.

One night the league was discussed at the club by the young men. Every man claimed that the idea was preposterous and that if he received a heart he would pay no attention to it. But there was not a man jack of them but feared he would not receive one. The next evening when the men stayed in at the club Jim Mansfield confessed that he had found a heart pinned to his hat when he took it up to go out in the morning. He said that the lady could send him a dozen hearts if she liked; she would get no reply from him. At the same time he was racking his brain for a plan to find out which girl had sent him the heart.

The next day Stevenson's attention was called to a red heart pinned to his coattail. How it got there he did not know, but supposed it had been placed there by a small boy hired to do the job. The same evening there was a small social gathering at the house of one of the league, and two other men on going to the coat room found hearts pinned to their overcoats. One of these men when about to put on his hat found another heart in the lining.

Alas, this was the cankerworm that was destined to spoil an excellent plan. Ned Somers, who was blessed—or cursed—with two hearts at his disposal, instead of keeping the fact to himself boasted of it to his companions. This excited the spleen of Arthur Beem, who received no heart at all.

As for the girls, the apple of discord was also thrown among them. The two girls who had set their hearts on the same man each began a secret inquiry as to who her rival was. Neither was long in gaining the required information, and soon after the discovery they were not on speaking terms. Evelyn Treborne had sent a heart to Andy Skinner, which he surmised came from Jenny Brown. He accused Miss Brown, who indignantly denied the charge. She spoke disparagingly of Skinner to Margaret Stark, who had sent him the heart, and this made a break between the two girls. Within a week after the establishment of the league there were half a dozen quarrels between the different persons sending and receiving hearts, including some of the men who had not been honored by being wanted.

Then came Trimmingham, a stranger, to the place, and, hearing of the league and having secured the names of the members, he wrote each one a note stating that he had received a red heart; that she was the only girl in the world he wanted, and if the heart came from her he had one to give in exchange.

For a few days after this every member of the league was in a flutter. Five notes went out to Trimmingham from five different girls, each acknowledging that she had sent him a heart. Then two girls compared notes, and there were two expressions.

"Well, I declare!"

"The horrid thing!"

That led to more comparisons, and the league was broken up.

Meanwhile Trimmingham had left for parts unknown. And it was well for him that he had, for there were five girls each and every one of whom was ready to stick pins into him. Some of these young ladies afterward found husbands, but not in the place they lived. There was one agreement between them—"A prophet is not without honor save in his own country."

A COAT FOR LUXURY.

A Priceless Garment of Moleskin Designed by Cheruit.

INNUMERABLE SKINS.

This truly elegant coat bears the Paris stamp. Rippling in beautiful flares, trimly fitted at the waist, which is finished with a narrow string of moleskin, and adorned with smart patch pockets of fur, it achieves an incomparable luxury. The checkerboard effect of the moleskin gives a very dazzling ensemble, while a deep fox collar closes the neck snugly. The green Spanish coque feather on the turban blends beautifully with the soft tint of the skins.

KNITTED HUG-ME-TIGHT.

Easy Directions to Make an Attractive Winter Garment.

Use 7 skeins of fourfold Germantown zephyr, 1 skein of fourfold Saxony and a pair of medium sized bone needles.

For lower edge of back cast on 28 stitches. Knit 13 rows plain, in the 14th row widen 1 st at each side.

Knit 9 plain rows, widen each side, in the next knit * 9 plain rows, widen in next *. Repeat from * 8 times.

Knit 7 plain, widen in next.

Knit 7 plain, widen in next.

Knit 7 plain, widen in next. Knit 2 plain, take 19 st for one side of front and run the rest of the stitches on a cord. On the 19th stitch knit 6 rows, widening 1 at the back row and narrowing 1 at the neck or front edge in each ridge.

Knit 2 rows, widening at back once.

Knit 4 rows plain, knit 2 rows, widening at back once. Knit 2 rows plain, knit 2, widening at back once.

Knit 2 plain rows. Knit 2 rows, widening at back and front once. Knit 6 plain. Knit 2, widening at back once. Knit 2 plain. Knit 2 plain rows and cast on 8 st. at back. Knit 3 rows plain. Knit 2, narrowing once in front and back. Knit 6 plain. Knit 2, widening and narrowing once. Knit 4 plain. Knit 12 rows, narrowing every ridge (2 rows). Knit 8 rows, narrowing each side in each ridge. Knit 6 rows, narrowing each side in every row. Bind off the last 2 stitches.

Slip the rest of the stitches back on the needle. At the neck bind off all but 19. On the 19 knit the other front to correspond with the first one.

At the lower edge of the back take up the 28 sts. Cast on and knit, narrowing one at each side in every row until four sts are left. Bind off the four.

Take a bone hook and crochet a row of single (s.) all around the edges, take a st in each ridge and widen at the rounded edges. For the border use the single skein. For the first row make 3 chain (ch) and fasten by s. in every alternate st of the edge. For the second row ch 3 and 2 s. in every 3 ch of the first row. For the last row make a shell of 1 stitch, 2 double (d.), 1 stitch in each 3 ch and a slip stitch between the two stitches of the second row. In making the last row from the front edge to back edge under the arm by the slip stitch in center of corresponding shells, join 12 shells in this manner. This makes a nice house jacket and can be worn under auto coats.

Cleansing of Salad Plants.

Too much care cannot be exercised in the cleansing of pot greens and salads. No one wishes to make a gravel bed of his stomach, and a careful looking over should be given to the greens and also to the washing of them to get visible dirt and especially any invisible infection, this particularly in the case of watercress which grows in streams that may be polluted by sewage or lettuce and celery grown in truck gardens and watered with any water that happens to come handy. Fertilizers, too, have to be taken into account, and the most thorough and painstaking care to clean all such plants should be an invariable rule. When vegetables come into the house they should not be allowed to remain in the hot kitchen, but at once set in a cool place. If you have a good ventilated cellar that is best. If [illegible]

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Tricks of No. 9.

All through the multiplication table the product of 9 comes to 9. No matter what you multiply with or how many times you repeat or change the figures, the result is always the same.

For instance, twice 9 is 18; add 8 and 1 and you have 9. Three times 9 equals 27; 2 and 7 make 9 again. So on until you find 11 times 9 equals 99. This seems to bring an exception. But add the digits; 9 and 9 make 18, and again 1 and 8 make 9. Go on to an indeterminable extent and the thing continues. Take any number at random. For example, 450 times 9 equals 4,050, and the digits added make 9 once more. Take 6,000 times 9, equals 54,000, and again you have 5 and 4.

Take any row of figures, reverse the order and subtract the less from the greater; the difference will certainly be always 9 or a multiple of 9. For example, 5,071 minus 1,705 equals 3,366. Add these digits and you have 18, and 1 and 8 make the familiar 9.

You have the same result, no matter how you take the numbers, by squares or cubes.

One more way is given by which No. 9 shows its strange powers. Write down any number you please. Add its digits and then subtract the sum of the said digits from the original number. No matter what number you start with, the sum of the digits in the answer will be 9 or its multiple.

Forfeits.

In many of the games which you play while with your friends, both in and out of doors, you are required to pay penalties by giving forfeits. There are a great many penalties which bring forth fun and laughter. Try some of these written here below the next time you are entertaining your friends and see what a good time you will have:

Put one hand where the other cannot touch it. (Put the right elbow in the left hand.)

Stand on six legs and hold up four. (Stand on one chair and hold up another.)

Cut an apple with ivory knives. (Bite it.)

Go out of the room with two legs and return with six. (Walk out of the room and return carrying a chair or stool.)

Put a pitcher in the room and crawl into it. (Crawl into the room.)

Concerning Nails.

All young people have heard of fourpenny nails, sixpenny nails, and so forth. The "penny" does not mean money, but is a corruption of the word pound.

When we speak of fourpenny nails we mean nails of such a size that 1,000 of them will weigh four pounds. An eightpenny nail weighs eight pounds a thousand, and so on. It is an old English term, and its original form was "four pound," "eight pound," "ten pound." Carpenters and other artisans got into the way of slurring over these terms and pronouncing them "four pen" and "six pen." This corruption, in turn, was modified by turning the shortened "pen" into "penny," and so it stands today, a clear case of turning a weight into a coin.

"Locating Cities."

"Locating cities" is a very interesting game. To play this game it is best to have ten or more children, who are divided into two sides. These sides should stand at least ten or eleven feet apart, in rows facing each other. The first girl or boy on side No. 1 names a city, such as Chicago or Berlin. The first player on the opposite side has to tell what state or country that city is in before the girl or boy on side No. 1 counts ten. If she fails she is out of the game; if she does not, she then names a city, and the next player in order on side No. 1 must answer in the same way. This is kept up until the end of the lines, and the side which has the most number of children standing wins.

Keep to the Right.

Before the day of traffic officers, who arrest you if you do not keep to the right of the road—in fact, before the day of roads themselves—two men meeting invariably kept to the right, says the American Boy. In those days, before the dawn of history, every traveler carried his life in his hands, and he never ventured from home without his shield and sword. Since the shield was carried on the left arm and the sword in the right hand they of necessity passed each other on the right, so as to bring shield to shield, thus being completely protected.

Jumping Letters.

Jump the first letter to the end of the word, making the first last.

1. Jump the implement of the poorest toilers and find where they are compelled to live.

2. Jump to break in pieces and find tradesmen.

3. Jump a luscious fruit and have a swelling.

4. Jump a halter and find snares.

Answers. — 1. Shovel, hovels. 2. Shatter, hatters. 3. Plum, lump. 4. Strap, traps.

A Spider's Web.

I found a dear cat's cradle, fine—
All hung with gems, in our grape vine.
'Twas shaped like tiny pilot's wheel.
The gods no robber man would steal
Because they were but sparkling dew,
Twinkling, red and green and blue.
It was a little fragile thing.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A Dress For Afternoon.

One of the prettiest of the season's one-piece frocks. It is made of figured taffeta and trimmed with hem-stitched batiste.

The center-front of the waist is indicated by small "o" perforations, and this is well to remember in making the waist. The first actual step toward construction, however, is to close the under-arm and sleeve seams as notched, then underface the front edge of the front. Close the back seam and face the square collar and sew to neck edge as notched. Gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations; sew stay to gathered edge, center-backs even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam and bring front edge to center-front. Gather long sleeve on single small "o" perforations; draw gathers to the required size and adjust ribbon, or a bias strip of material about ½ inch wide, over gathers. Close cuff seam as notched, sew to short sleeve, single small "o" perforations and seams even.

For the outer front and back, plait front, placing "T" on small "o" perforations and tack. Close seams on right side and finish left shoulder and side seams for opening. Arrange on front and back, with centers even, and tack neck edges of back together.

Now all is ready for the skirt. First, close the back seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finish edges above for placket. Stitch straight or bias bands (3 inches wide when finished) to position along crosslines of small "o" perforations. Gather upper edge of skirt between double "TT" perforations. Sew to lower edge of waist over stay (leaving lower edge of adjustable front and back free), center-fronts and back seams even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam. Stitch tape underneath upper edge of skirt (on left side) from center-front to center-back.

The skirt is slightly circular in shape, which gives it a pretty flare about the lower edge.

Sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

This charming frock of figured taffeta with collar and cuffs of hem-stitched batiste, is ideal for afternoon wear. The buttons may be of black velvet or satin, the principal point being that they should stand out prominently in contrast to the silk. The shaped front, which is a chic feature of the dress, can be easily removed, if desired, leaving a plain blouse of graceful design.

In medium size the dress requires to develop 5⅛ yards 36-inch silk, with 1 yard of extra material if bands trim the skirt.

CHRISTMAS CHOCOLATES.

How to Make Delicious Bonbons That Will Keep.

Not often to be had in store chocolate creams is the flavoring of cordials or liqueurs that can be added to homemade ones from a well stocked sideboard. They make a delicious combination with the chocolate and keep the candy moist longer than any other filling. Knead a little piece of the fondant until it is warm and soft; make a little hollow in the center, pouring in the cordial from the top and kneading it over. Let it get cold and thoroughly hard before dipping. The coating will be more glossy if you thin the melted chocolate partly with butter instead of all water. It should be the consistency of good, thick cream, and the butter thins it as well as gives it gloss. It should be melted in a pan of water and kept standing in it while coating the bonbons, keeping it at that temperature where it feels warm to the touch. Use a silver butter pick for dipping and insert at the top, and as you take it out twist it so as to give the little curl of chocolate over the top.

For the Bride And Groom

Here is a string of inexpensive recipes for two people:

SCIENCE—INVENTION.

New Plating Process.

Attention has been attracted to some of the peculiar conditions met in the use of a new plating process, says Popular Mechanics, by which metal is shot in the form of spray from a small gun onto the surface to be coated. It has been noted that, while the temperature at the focus point of the spray sometimes reaches 2,000 degrees F., inflammable materials may nevertheless be placed from three to five inches from the apex of this cone and covered with the metal without being ignited. For instance, it is asserted that the head of a match as well as tissue paper has been treated in this manner without being burned. Silk also has been metal coated and its texture not injured.

Starting in Cold Weather.

To start the engine in cold weather fill an ordinary india rubber hot water bottle and apply it as far round the carburetor as possible, leaving it there for a sufficient period to enable the carburetor itself to draw some heat and thus assist vaporization. Another method is to wrap round the carburetor some absorbent material, such as a large sized lamp wick, which can be carried for the purpose, and to pour over this hot water, repeated application of which will raise the temperature of the carburetor even higher than will be obtained by the usual heating by a branch from the exhaust.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

An Aid to the Motorist.

Although the demountable rim now used on motorcars is split transversely and at first glance the tire would seem to be easily removed, such is not the case, says Popular Mechanics. In fact it is about as difficult to get the tire off the rim as it is to remove it from the old style clincher rim wheel. If the ends of the rim where it is transversely split could be lapped and the rim contracted the tire would fall off of its own accord.

The removing may be easily accomplished by means of a turnbuckle, as shown in the illustration. Two holes must be drilled in the rim, one close to the split and the other about ten inches from it. A turnbuckle twelve inches long can be purchased from any hardware dealer. The ends should be heated and turned at an angle to hold securely in the holes drilled in the rim. It will be found that the stiffest rim may be contracted and the old casing removed with little effort and replaced while the rim is contracted. New tires may be put on the rim in a like manner.

Sacks Made of Paper.

The warp and woof of the fabric of a sack that is now being used to some extent to ship ores from Antofagasta, Chile, are made of strips of paper, doubled or twisted, in combination with a small quantity of some short vegetable fiber. It is stated that these paper sacks will stand hard usage and be available for several shipments before wearing out. Their use is just beginning at Antofagasta.—Commerce Reports.

Babbitt Metal Casting.

In castings of babbitt metal it is often necessary to core out some part, and a good core has been discovered in the employment of a plastic mixture of salt and glue, says the Blacksmith and Wheelwright. A good mixture is made by throwing sufficient salt into the glue to form a stiff paste, which is molded to shape and allowed to harden. The core can be removed from the casting by washing in water.

Tempering a Drill.

A punch or drill may in certain cases require to have a very hard point and a tough shank or shaft. Having hardened the tool by quenching from a cherry red, the tool may be reheated from the shank end to a low temperature, closely watching the color as it approaches the cutting edge. Immediately the point assumes a light yellow quench in oil or water.

Speed Warning Signal.

A Seattle (Wash.) inventor has perfected a bell device for attachment to motorcars that can be set automatically to sound a warning when the vehicle exceeds the limit allowed by law. It is operated by a gear attached to the speedometer sprocket and can be regulated to ring at any speed.—Automobile Dealer.

Production of Coke.

During the year 1914 there were produced in the United States 34,555,914 short tons of coke, valued at $98,834,217, according to the annual statement on the manufacture of coke by the geological survey.

No Pity There.

Undutiful boys may see themselves held up as before a mirror in the following anecdote: A young Irish girl in giving testimony in a court of justice, when asked some questions in reference to the prisoner, replied, "Arrah, sir, I'm sure he never made his mother smile." There is a biography of unkindness in that simple sentence.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Kitchen Cupboard

THE PICKLE JAR.

CRANBERRY KETCHUP. — Five pounds of cranberries, one pint of vinegar, two and one-half pounds of brown sugar, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one-half tablespoonful of cloves, one-half tablespoonful of salt and one-half tablespoonful of paprika. Cook the cranberries and vinegar about five minutes, or until the berries open; press through a fine sieve; add the other ingredients and let simmer till thick; then store in bottles as canned fruit.

Tomato Ketchup.—One-half bushel of ripe tomatoes (unpeeled), one quart of vinegar, one pound of salt, one-quarter pound of black pepper, twelve pods red pepper, one-quarter pound of allspice, one ounce cloves, three boxes good mustard, six onions, one handful of peach leaves and two pounds of brown sugar. Mix and boil until of right consistency, being careful not to let it burn; then, when cool enough, strain through wire sieve. The ingredients should all be put together and thoroughly cooked, and when done the ketchup should be quite thick.

Pickled Peaches.—Pare clingstone peaches or remove the skin by dipping the fruit in boiling water and rubbing with a cloth. Pour the hot spiced and sweetened vinegar over the prepared peaches and let stand overnight. Drain, reboil and pour over the fruit. Do this at least three mornings or oftener if convenient. On the last morning make sure that the fruit is tender by simmering in the sirup. Pack the peaches in jars, boil down the sirup slightly, pour over the fruit and seal.

COURT EXCLUDES WATT METER

Developments Yesterday and Today Favor Claim of Battle Island Company.

Syracuse—At least one point was scored by the claimants yesterday in the case of the Battle Island Paper Company against the State. The claimants succeeded in having the Watt meter excluded from the evidence.

Mr. Frank Rumsey was on the stand the entire morning and examined by Assistant Deputy Atorney General Smith as to records introduced to show the power used at the sulphite mill and in reference to the watt meter. That the state claims is vital in the case, and made an attempt to have it introduced into evidence to show the true facts relating to the power generated at the plant.

The witness was asked to identify it as the one used at the plant, but he refused to swear it was or that it was not the same one. At this point George W. Driscoll and Charles E. Spencer, attorneys presenting the claimants, sought former Superintendent John C. Murray to identify it. Mr. Murray was entering the court rom and declared the meter to be the one used at the power station.

Counsel for claimants objected to its admission as evidence on the ground that the meter recorded the amount of power generated after the time of the appropriation and that those existing before the appropriation. He further objected to it on the ground that it was not a proper recording instrument. A heated argument between counsel ensued, as Mr. Smith made remarks about the claimants that the attorneys for them indignantly objected to.

Mr. Spencer asked that Mr. Smith be admonished for his statements, but the situation soon quieted and Judge Rodenbeck ruled the watt meter out of evidence until later. The records of an ammeter were earlier introduced in evidence.

Mr. Rumsey was on the stand the greater part of yesterday afternoon, and the admission of his testimony caused a heated argument between counsel. Again the question of missing records bobbed up and the ammeter and voltage records were added to the missing "book of heads" and the record of the power production of the generators, which the State claims are important.

Mr. Rumsey stated under questioning by Mr. Driscoll that the flow of the river was of such volume as to insure sufficient power to maintain the sulphite mill. This is in direct contradiction of the contention of the state, which is that the flow was so variable that production of power was practically impossible at times.

Mr. George C. Chauncey of Fulton preceded Mr. Rumsey on the stand. He placed the value on the water power at $440,000. This assertion was hotly disputed by Mr. Mone, who tried to show that Battle Island power was not as valuable as power developed on the other sideo f the river.

LAMPHERE IN THE NET ANOTHER TIME

The Syracuse police have taken James Lamphere into custody. He was released about two weeks ago by the Fulton police, after a bail bond in the sum of $300 had been put up to guarantee his appearance before the next Grand Jury.

The latest is in connection with the theft of merchandise, it being charged that the goods were taken from a freight car in the Syracuse yards.

Lamphere may be brought to this city to be tried on the Fulton Livery case.

MR. TAFT IS BROAD.

Mr. Taft is not a partisan in any narrow sense, and nobody who takes the pains to read it carefully will find in this latest utterance of his on the Philippines the slightest trace of partisanship. It is straightforward, lucid, generally calm, and embodies a great deal of valuable information, which is more than can be said of some other recent public documents on the same subject. For his assertions touching political deterioration in the islands, and industrial deterioration because of bad political conditions, he gives his authorities, and these include men of high standing, such as Dean Worcester, Cameron Forbes, ex-Vice Governor Gilbert and Daniel R. Williams. Mr. Taft's statements as to the present conditions in the islands cannot be ignored by Congress when the question of enlarging the political powers of the Filipinos is brought up for its consideration. They are worthy of careful attention. * * * Mr. Taft's strong argument against the acceptance of the Jones bill, either with or without its preamble providing for independence on some future date, specified or unnumber of his fellow-countrymen, irrespective of party. He points out that the confirmation of every appointment by a new elective Senate will cripple the power of the Governor General, and the Government will become hopelessly confused. Mr. Taft's belief that the Filipinos will not be fit for complete autonomy for a generation to come is shared by many others who know the people. It is a national duty to care for these people, to develop the islands in which they dwell. If we neglect thet duty we must expect to meet the consequences.—New York Times.

Greater Profits Says Witness, In Claim Case Against the State

The scenery has been ordered changed during the days upon which will occur a continuation of the trial of the Battle Island Paper company against the State, and Utica is designated by the Court. The first two days of the session, Monday and Tuesday, will be devoted to the case.

The session yesterday was devoted to examination of John J. Warren, a sulphite manufacturer of Brownsville, who testified about conditions at the sulphite mill of the Battle Island company as he found them last summer.

Mr. Warren said he believed the mill capable of turning out a daily amount equal to about sixty tons of sulphite. This should have been sold at a profit of between $3 and $5 a ton, he said. Continuing Mr. Warren claimed the mill should have netted its owners a yearly profit of between $60,000 and $80,000.

Mr. Warren gave many figures and estimated that the plant and the water power should have been worth about $600,000 at the time of the appropriation. After that, though, the witness said, the plant was worth about $175,000 and the difference between the sum and the value before the appropriation ought to be the extent of the damage incurred, through the loss of water power and the damage to the sulphite mill.

The question of power was then taken up, the witness declaring that the difference in the cost between purchased power if, had it had been used to run the plant, and the actual cost of the water power developed and used at the mill, was about $40.31 per horsepower per year. Figuring on this basis, Mr. Warren stated that $21,364 ought to represent about the yearly additional cost it would be, to use purchased power rather than the water power developed at the mill, and destroyed by the construction of the barge canal.

Assistant Deputy Attorney General Mone, who cross examined Mr. Warren, drew from thew itness the fact that due to the Canadian embargo on pulpwood and the removal of the tariff on sulphite, there had been a tendency to discourage the construction and operation of sulphite mills in this country. The witness could not state that he knew of any sulphite mill in the country today which is operating at a yearly profit of $60,000.

BANK DOESN'T OWN MILL SECURITIES, "NEVER DID"

—L. W. EMERICK

The unfair attitude of at least one Syracuse daily toward Fulton's industrial interests was evidenced in the Thursday edition of The Herald, in reporting the testimony offered by Mr. L. W. Emerick, in the Battle Island Paper company's case against the State.

Mr. Emerick was made to appear as one interested in the case through purely selfisr motives, in that he represented the First National Bank of Fulton, and that a verdict in favor of the sulphite mill would secure the bank from certain losses.

Yesterday, Mr. Emerick made a statement of his position, saying: "The First National bank of Fulton is not concerned with the outcome of the $1,875,000 claim of the Battle Island Paper company. The bank does not own any securities in the company and never did. The bank does hold a claim against the company, but that is secured."

Mr. Emerick made this statement to clear away any apprehension that might have been created by the report that he had testified before the State Court of Claims that his bank holds $70,000 worth of securities of the company.

The court records show that Deputy Attorney General Edward J. Mone asked Mr. Emerick whether he or his bank owned stocks, bonds or securities in the company. Mr. Emerick answered that the bank held a secured claim. Later, reference to this was made again by Mr. Mone.

"Mr. Emerick, is the interest of the First National Bank in the Battle Island Paper company something in the neighborhood of $70,000?" Mr. Mone asked. Objection to the question was overruled and Mr. Emerick was allowed to answer.

"Why, whatever interest they have is only a small fraction of that sum," answereed Mr. Emerick.

The methods of the attorneys in the case today aroused a sharp debate. Former Judge Sanford W. Smith criticised the company, intimating that it was trying to conceal evidence and was unfair in submitting its claim.

Attorney Charles F. Spencer, of counsel for the company, at once demanded that Judge Smith be admonished for any such inference. The Court did not commit himself. The State at the time was trying to introduce in evidence a wattmeter which its attorneys claimed showed the actual number of electric horsepower developed at the powr plant. The Court refused to admit the wattmeter.

Attorney George W. Driscoll, of counsel for thec ompany, objected to the introduction of the wattmeter on the ground that what condition it might show is subsequen to the appropriation and therefore does not effect the claim.

Citizens of Fulton

Naturally you are deeply interested in the welfare of your city.

The only organization that tries to do things for the good of all, is the Chamber of Commerce.

A meeting of citizens of Fulton will take place on Wednesday evening. December 8th, 1915, at 8 o'clock in the City Hall.

You are invited to come and be our guests, refreshments will be served.

We have some very interesting things to tell you and the new secretary will give you an outline of the work that should be done.

Remember, that co-operation is the watchword of modern times.

Come and show that you are interested in a bigger and better Fulton.

THE COMMITTEE.

Ask Yourself—Is the Effort Worth While? Will You Volunteer?

The Boys' Club, that greatly needed and much-talked of developer of the youth of this city, is within the grasp of the people. Its organization is about complete, and a location is spotted by the handful of men who are interested in the movement. A substantial sum of money, more than [illegible] that. Of course, more money is needed, but this should be forthcoming, as the tentative committeemen have planned to secure subscriptions.

Only one great requisite remains to be secured, and this is an important one—MORAL SUPPORT. Without it the club will not be added to the list of attractions of this city. What the committeemen need now is the loyal support of women and men, interested in the moral development of the youth in Fulton, to come forward and volunteer to give some fractions of their time to the work of organization. If this is done at once, the work of getting the clubrooms opened on January 1, 1916 will be comparatively easy.

The upper floor of a business block, in the heart of the busy section of the city, where do congregate the young men in their hours of leisure, can be had at a nominal rental. A few minor repairs are necessary, and the club would have to provide heat and light. It is an easy matter to figure the proposed membership fee of ten cents a month, to be secured from each member, will take care of the heating problem, which would cost about $30 annually.

Now that the movement has been launched, it would be a pity were the proposition to die of inanition. The work so far has been under the direction of men who are in earnest and who wish for the moral and physical welfare of the boys and young men of the city. The chairman of the committee, Attorney Floyd S. Spangle, is giving freely of his time to make the work of organization easy, and he will continue his efforts as long as there is a grain of hope left in sight. Mr. Spangle's sentiments are echoed by the other gentlemen serving on the tentative committee.

Are you a booster for the enterprise? If not, why not?

Bulgars Massed for New Attack on Allies

London—With the fall of Monastir and the complete success of the Kaiser and his allies in driving the northern Serb army from its own soil the attention of London has been forcibly drawn to the situation of the Anglo-French forces along the Vardar and Cerna rivers. The Teutonic occupationo f Monastir, unless all military indications fail, leaves the left wing of the allied contingent "up oin the air," with two moves only open to General Serrail; who is in command. One is to draw his extreme left toward the south and let it rest on the Greek frontier, where it will have the Monastir-Salonica railway a few miles in its rear. hTe other is to evacute the Vardar River front and straighten his line, which now resembles an inverted V, and thus reduce appreciably the danger of envelopment.

Show's Closing Hours Attracted Greatest Number of People

The Fourth annual fruit, corn and poultry show given under the auspices of the Oswego Countyr Agricultural Society was terminated last night. The number of exhibits and the attendance of visitors to the show was encouraging to the promoters and as a result of the splendid entries, Oswego county will be represented at the corn show to be held in Canton, N. Y., this month as Mr. Kingsbury, the secretary, intends to retain a number of the prize-winning specimens for this purpose.

The show to be held at Canton by the Northern New York Corn Growers Association is a yearly event, the various county shows in the Northern New York counties. The counties included in the district are all those east of the Oswego river and north of the Mohawk.

In speaking of the show just closed, Mr. Kingsbury said today that the attendance last night was the largest of any night and that the society was very well satisfied with the number of entries. All of the available room was taken up by the exhibits. "Insofar as the corn exhibit is concerned," he continued. "We intend to encourage the boys and girls who worked so earnestly to produce prize-winning specimens, and with the lessons which they have learned in their first attempt we believe that the next show will produce excellent results. Most of the youngsters, instead of selecting from their crops specimens for quality, made the mistake of trying to get the largest ears they could, but they have ben advised of the error and no doubt will profit by this year's experience.

"Glenn Terpening, a schoolboy of Granby, entered some of the best samples of corn I have ever seen," Mr. Kingsbury said, "and I have no doubt butw hat his corn will take a prize at the Canton show. His corn is as near perfect as it is possible to grow." The fact that the prizes awarded to the school boys went to all corners of the country is pleasing to the society as it will assist [illegible] in our advertising campaign.

An interesting phase of the fruit exhibit is the fact that the society will send a number of the prize winners to an exhibit at Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. H. P. Allen has also secured permission to show a number of the specimens in the window of his store on First street for a few days.

Besides thep articularly good exhibit of seed grains, Mr. Kingsbury spoke in complimentary terms of the poultry exhibit in which Newton H. Ward won 38 first and eight seconds. In each case where Mr. Ward took second, his stock was also the winner of first prize. He also won the special prizes on gold and silver campines which were offered by the State Campine Association.

Normal Player Made Ten Field Baskets; Fulton Lost Game

Through the excellent playing of Landers, center on the Oswego Normal basketball team, Fulton High lost last night by a score of 31-15. Landers made a total of 10 field baskets for the Normal team, and with one foul to his credit, he scored 21 points, or more than two-thirds of the total rolled up by his entire team.

Wallace, who opposed Landers in the first half of the game was replaced by Webb, whose usual position is guard, with the result that Landers only scored one field basket throughout the latter half of theg ame.

Landers' work was of a sensational order, his backets scored by dribbling and running under the suspended baskets at top speed, a phase of the game which the high schol team is unacquainted with due to the recent introduction of intercollegiate rules into the amateur game.

A large number of rooters acompanied the Fulton team to Oswego and the exeellent school spirit shown was complimented upon by the hosts.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Suffragists all over the country are divided, not as to aim but as to means The radical wing is working for nation wide suffrage via a constitutional amendment. Many including Presi-gress for a national woman suffrage should come through state action.

On November 19, Governor Whitman, by signing the petition to Congress for a national woman suffrge amendment, lined up with the radicals.

It is not alone in politics that women are struggling for and winning equal suffrage. The women members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers have in the past been permitted a half a vote a piece. The recent convention of this organization held at St. Paul, Mo., adopted the rule of "one woman one vote." However, before the telephone girls enjoy full suffrage the proposition must be submitted to a referendum vote.

The petition which the envoys from the Woman Voters Convention will present to Congress or the day it convenes contains a million names and is four miles in length. Like a snowball it rolled across the continent growing bigger and more impressive with every stop made by the plucky women who assumed the responsibility of delivering it.

To quiet all doubt as to the great demand for the passage of the woman suffrage amendment the petition will be unrolled on the steps of the Capitol and the assembled crowd can satisfy itself that what looks like a snow storm is nothing so fleeting, but the written demand by a million citizens for a complete democracy.

In the receiving line at the reception, to be given by the Congressional Union in honor of the women who brought the petition to Congress across the Continent by automobile, will be found no less a notable than Miss Margret Wilson, daughter of the President.

The Florida Federation of Women's Clubs which last year refused to vote on woman suffrage has now placed itself back of votes for women by a vote of one hundred to five. November also witnessed the lining up of the Texas club women for woman suffrage. Arkansas, Kentucky and West Virginia having previously come into the suffrage fold, it must be admitted that the solid South against woman suffrage is but a memory.

In a letter to The Survey, Margaret Conway, the amusement censor of Denver, says that woman suffrage is "breaking down party lines and rearing lines between good and evil."

Mighty In Titles.

The ruler of Turkey in addition to the titles sultan and kha-khan (high prince and lord of lords), also claims sovereignty over most districts, towns, cities and states in the orient, specifying each by name and setting out in each of his various titles "all the forts, citadels, purlieus and neighborhood thereof" in regular legal form. His official designation ends, "Sovereign also of diverse nations, states, peoples and races on the face of the earth." All this is in addition to his high position as "head of the faithful" and "supreme lord of all the believers of the prophet," "direct and only [illegible] on earth of Mohammed."

A POPULAR THEME

A great deal is being said these days about uniting the country and city; that neither a city nor a country district should have a definite boundary line when it is possible for both to pull together. Sometimes the country folk get blamed for being unappreciative, and on the other hand the city residents are called selfish, uppish, and what not. Instances have been known on both sides where the accusation would prove true. Perhaps the discovery of error alone means half the battle in its correction.

Firstly: If the people of our surrounding country are to be brought to Fulton in a spirit of reciprocity we must have something more to offer them than a fair price for eggs per dozen or at bargain rates the goods on our counters. Of course, these are necessities as far as trade goes, but we must go trade "one better." Why not take out a life insurance policy on inter-urban community interest by making possible an agricultural department in our high school. The possibilities arising through such a department is unlimited as many cities and villages today gladly testify.

Whatever is done in the future for the widening of the city proper, it must be remembered at all times, with all people, in all places that those seeking cooperation from a motive purely of personal gain will find but defeat.

Success in communities as in persons hinges upon Principle. We cannot fly in the face of impossibilities, and honesty is indeed the best policy.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS
President American Society for Thrift

If you should die tomorrow, how much of an estate would you leave to those dependent on you?

Here are some facts that will make you do some solid thinking. An examination of the records of the Surrogate's Office of New York County for the five years beginning, January 1, 1901, and ending December 31, 1905, revealed the fact that an average of 27,011 adults died each year of that period. Of these, 23,051 or 85.3 per cent. left no estate at all; 1,171 or 4.3 per cent. left estates valued at $300 to $1,000; and 1,428 or 5.3 per cent. left estates of more than $1,000, but less than $5,000.

An investigation of the records of the Probate Courts of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, the county in which Pittsburgh is situated, shows that the average number of adults who died annually during the six years from aJnuary 1, 1897 to December 31, 1902 was 5,164. Of these 4,599 or 89 per cent. left no estate at all; 173, or 3.3 per cent. left estates valued at $300 to $1,000; 230 or 4.5 per cent. left estates of more than $1,000, but less than $5,000. 75 or 1.5 per cent. left estates of more than $5,000, but less than $10,000.

The records of the Probate Judge's Office and the Health Office of Lucas County, Ohio, the county in which Toledo is situated, showed that 7,938 adults died during the period of 5 years ending December 31, 1905. Of these 6,204 or 78.15 per cent. left no estate; 825 or 10.4 per cent. left estates valued at less than $1,000; 625 or 7.88 per cent. left estates valued at less than $10,000 and only 208, or 2.62 per cent. left estates between $10,000 and $25,000.

According to statistics just given out by the National Association of Underwriters one person in every ten who dies in our large cities is buried in a pauper's grave. There are 1,250,000 dependent wage earners, who failed to save anything for their own support, now costing this country $220,000,000 a year.

There are 3,127,000 widows in this country over 65 years of age and over 32 per cent. of them lack the necessities of life and 90 per cent the comforts. The county is supporting about 1,000,000 dependents and delinquents in institutions. Yet the wealth of the United States, $150,000,000,000, is nearly double England's $85,000,000,000 and Germany's $80,000,000,000 and three times that of France. Moreover our income of $35,000 000 000 a year is larger in proportion of our wealth than the income of any other great nation.

Increditable as it may seem, in this land of such vast wealth, there are between ten and fifteen million poverty stricken people.

Here certainly is food for thought, when, with these figures before us, we realize that America stands fiftieth in percentage of population carrying saving bank accounts, according to these statistics.

Teaching thrift in the colleges of the land will help greatly.

What Girard College of Philadelphia, for instance, can do to correct these conditions and teach thrift it is doing. Since 1896 a savings fund has been in operation at the college. Under the present system, the boys can make deposits of $1 or more. The growth of the idea is shown by the growth of the fund. The deposits in 1896 were $234.07; and in 1914 reached $1,704,91; There were 115 accounts opened in 1914. It is safe to say that by the time the boys leave the college, the habit of saving will have been established and just as many thrifty young men added to our citizenship.

Opinions

TAFT VS. GARRISON ON THE PHILIPPINES

Secretary Garrison failed to live up to his reputation for tactfulness and fair-mindness when he accused ex-President Taft of trying to make partisan capital by criticising the Wilson administration's policy in the Philippines. To intimate that in a matter affecting the good name and honor of the country Mr. Taft's partisan zeal had not been restrained "within the bounds of truth, decency and fair dealing" was to risk a thoroughly deserved reproof. This the ex-president has delivered with a force which loses nothing because of its dignity and moderation.

Mr. Taft has been singularly considerate in his criticism of the Wilson administration. He has almost gone out of his way to avoid the charge of partisan bias in his comments on administration policies which are open to attack and which have been freely attacked by others. It is, therefore, a serious tactical error on Mr. Garrison's part to insult a generous and friendly critic like Mr. Taft just for the sake of convicting him of a trivial blunder, that of having mistaken the character of an unscrupulous ex-Philippine officeholder.

Writing an introduction for a pamphlet containing charges against the present Philippine administration, which are supported by many other credible witnesses, does not expose Mr. Taft to the charge of knowingly using evidence furnished by an adventurer for the purpose of misrepresenting conditions in the Philippines. The ex-president's record in office was one of unselfish devotion to the Philippine people. Their welfare was one of his pet enthusiasms, and every word or act of his bearing on their fortunes has been inspired by the truest friendliness and the highest disinterestedness.

t is Mr. Taft's sincere belief that the policy of the Wilson administration is hindering progress in the Philippines, is creating unrest there and is raising false hopes as to the duration of the apprenticeship through which the Filipinos must pass before they become capable of self-government. His views are the fruit of a larger experience in the Philippines than has been enjoyed by any other man in public life.—N. Y. Tribune.

HUGHES STILL A FACTOR

Justice Hughes very properly objected recently to the publication of his name on a Nebraska primary ballot. The secretary of state of that commonwealth respected his wishes, but this theoretical setback has not prevented his admirers from starting Hughes clubs in every county in their state. Similar activity in Minnesota has neither been checked by the disappearance of the name of Hughes from the Nebraska ballots nor do we recall a request from Mr. Hughes that the unofficial agitation be stopped.

By calling attention to his failure in this instance we do not mean to imply that his Nebraska decision was insincere; in fact, we do not even go as far as to assert that, as a New York man, Mr. Hughes must naturally disconrage his boom in other states so that it may start with full force in his own. We believe that Mr. Hughes does not want the nomination.

Yet we are equally certain that the Republicans of the country want him to have it and to take it and that, when the call comes, he will not be able to refuse it.—Brooklyn Times.

REFORM SKIRT DANCER

The reform skirt dancer, William H. Anderson, in The America Issue of July 31, 1915, page 2, says:

"The league workers this year will not serve as speakers in the wet and dry fight. The imperative needs of the league issue precludes."

After thus declaring that the Anti-Saloon League would take no part in the wet and dry fight in the State on account of other more important matters, after the election is over and many dry victories were won without the assistance of the League, this same reform skirt dancer in the issue of November 20, 1915, speaking of the work of the Anti-Saloon League, says:

"This year's sweep of dry territory comes as only a part of the year's achievements."

It may be well to state right here that the American Issue can be appealed to from week to week to convict the State Superintendent to repeated and wholesale falsehoods. He never pretends to tell the truth. He always tells what he thinks will fool the people who read his paper into believing what he wants them to believe and in trying to make them believe a certain thing. His main object is always to reach their pocketbook.

After election he stated that he had won many victories in the election of Assemblymen, when as a matter of fact he lost every fight he made. Wherever he opposed a candidate in the primary that candidate was nominated. Wherever he opposed a candidate in the election that candidate was elected. In fact the time has come when the greatest aid that any man can have in a primary or an election is the opposition of the discredited William H. Anderson.—Lyons Republican.

London's Windmill.

New Zealand, we are informed, now boasts only a single windmill. In this respect London is equal with the Antipodes. On Brixton hill, just by the waterworks and only a few yards from the main road, stands an old mill intact with the exception of the sails, and still in use, though now electricity takes the place of wind as motive power. The mill was erected by a Quaker about a century ago, and has remained in the family ever since.—London Chronicle.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Farmers of America May Be Organized Into Cooperation Union

Chicago.—Resolutions creating a central committee to organize the farmers of America into cooperative societies covering every farm product were unanimously adopted today at the closing session of the National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits.

The adoption of these resolutions by a conference of delegates from forty-five States was declared by Chairman Frank L. McVey, president of the University of North Dakota, to be the largest co-operative movement ever launched in the history of the world.

The plan provides first for the forming of an agricultural organization society as a permanent financial basis to have charge of the general organization and educational work.

The purposes of the society are:

To evolve a system of greater economy in marketing; to furnish lectures and instructions upon the subject of co-operation among farmers; to encourage educational centers; to investigate land conditions and to generally assist in solving the financial and producing problems of the American agriculturalist.

Cooperation among grain growers of Western Canada, in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta described by George F. Chipman, of Winnepeg.

Mr. Chipman said, in part:

"In the past nine years the grain growers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have organized three companies for the handling of their grain. These three companies are now operating 490 country elevators and one large terminal elevator at the head of the Great Lakes. The total assets of these three farmers' companies are over four and a half million dollars and the paid up capital one and a half million dollars.

During their operations the farmers have handled through their own companies over 250,000,000 bushels of grain and have made a net profit on their operations of over $1,600,000.

"All of this truggle has not been brought about without a terrific struggle against the forces of the organized grain.

"The farmers' companies are now the biggest single factor in the grain trade of Canada. It is only a matter of a few years when they will market three-quarters of the Canadian grain crop.

"It is also expected that in the future they will go into flour milling and possibly the operation of their own line of steamships for the transportation of their grain."

F. H. Newell, formerly director of the United States Reclamation service, urged the adoption of a system of rural credits which would meet the needs of farmers operating irrigated lands in the West.

SUMMER TRAINING CAMPS FAVORED

College Heads Urge Students to Attend Them.

INTEREST RAPIDLY GROWING

Advisory Committee of University Presidents Urges Continuation of Work on Broader Lines to Increase the Student Enrollment—Expects More Camps Next Year.

New York.—The advisory committee of university presidents formed to assist in the work of building up a national reserve corps among college students, adopted a report recommending that the heads of all colleges of the country encourage the students to join the summer military training camps established by the government for the purpose of strengthening the campaign for national preparedness. The committee, besides passing the resolution at a recent meeting here, also indorsed the work that has been done at the military camps and laid special emphasis on the educational value of the training.

John G. Hibben, president of Princeton university, was chairman at the meeting. Two additional members were elected to the committee, Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams college, and A. C. Humphreys, president of Stevens institute. Among those present were President Henry S. Drinker of Lehigh, President H. A. Garfield of Williams, Chancellor J. H. Kirkland of Vanderbilt university and Brigadier General E. W. Nichols, superintendent of the Virginia Military institute. Major General Leonard Wood, representing the government, was also there to hear the opinions of the committee and make recommendations to Washington accordingly.

Others who are members of the committee but were unable to attend the meeting are Presidents A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard, Arthur T. Hadley of Yale, H. B. Hutchins of the University of Michigan, George H. Denny of the University of Alabama, Benjamin Ide Wheeler of the University of California, J. G. Schurman of Cornell and Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois and Dr. John H. Finley, commissioner of education of New York.

The members of the committee discussed informally the benefits which have accrued from the government's military camps and urged the continuation of the work on broader lines to increase the student enrollment. As a result it is expected that the government will establish more of these training camps next year for students and business men.

The committee was formed three years ago at the suggestion of Major General Wood, who asked the heads of various institutions to aid in the development of the summer training camps of college students.

The first camps were established in the summer of 1913 at Gettysburg and at the Presidio. The course of instruction lasted five weeks. There were 300 students in attendance. In 1914 camps were established at Burlington, Vt.; Asheville, N. C., and Ludington, Mich. The number of students attending jumped to 700. This year more than 1,000 were enrolled, and an additional camp was opened at Plattsburg.

"We regard this movement as in no way militaristic," said a member of the committee. "Its object is to train the students of our colleges and therefore serve a useful purpose to the country. The education which the students receive under officers of the army is of the greatest value to them and to the nation, and we feel that the summer camps are agencies for good which the universities should do their utmost to encourage."

Built Wall at Eighty-four.

RED CROSS FUNDS NOT FOR WAR RELIEF.

American Red Cross Director Urges Fund for Tuberculosis Prevention

None of the proceeds from the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals, which are being sold widely throughout the United States for the benefit of the anti-tuberculosis movement, will be used for any relief purposes, according to a statement by Ernest P. Bicknell, National Director of the American Red Cross.

Mr. Bicknell says: "The American Red Cross is deeply appreciative of the sympathetic interest which has inspired the suggestion from various parts of the United States that a certain percentage of the Red Cross Seal Sales Fund, which has been used for the last seven years exclusively for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis in the United States, be expended this year to aid the European war sufferers. While the Red Cross is desirous of securing contributions which will increase the war relief fund we do not feel justified in adopting any policy which will tend to cripple the tubercnlosis work in this country, dependent as it is for support to so large an extent on the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals. The announcement that a percentage of the Red Cross Seal money would go to our war relief fund might possibly increase the sale; but, in our opinion, the final results would show a distinct loss in that part of the proceeds going for tuberculosis work.

"At the present time there are over 1,200 anti-tuberculosis societies distributing through nearly every state in the Union and even in oPrto Rico, the Canal Zone and far off Hawaii, which are dependent almost entirely upon the receipts from the Red Cross Seal sale for their work during the year 1916. The people of the United States must support this local war against tuberculosis, which annually kills 200,000 people and at the present time is leaving a trail of a million wounded."

W. C. T. U. BRIEFS

(Compiled by Local Union)

At the recent coronation of the Emperor of Japan many residents of the Sunrise kingdom were decorated by His Imperial Majesty. Among those who were recipients of honors was Madam Kaji Yajima, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Japan. Others receiving similar token of appreciation were the editor of The Christian World and the headmaster of St. Paul's College at Tokio, both of whom were educated in the United States and are worthy exponents of the Christian religion. In this connection one recalls the generosity of Madan Yajima upon her recent retirement as principal of a school with which she had been for many years associated, in promptly transferring to the treasury of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union the $1,000 that was given to her personally as a tribute of love for her years of service.

Leaders of the prohibition forces in Georgia are jubilant over the work of the special session of the legislature. The four bills passed by both houses and signed by Governor Harris insure the enforcement of the prohibition law. These measures, all of which go into effect May 1, 1916, provide for the closing of all breweries, near-beer saloons and locker clubs, and prohibit sale of newspapers or periodicals publishing liquor advertisements or the soliciting by means of newspapers, circulars or letters. Provision is also madef or a heavy penalty on failure of officials to carry out these laws. A large company of the friends of prohibition witnessed the signing of these bills by Governor Harris, and this triumph of law enforcement was celebrated by a banquet at the Ansley Hotel in honor of the governor and the members of the legislature, given by the Prohibition business Men's Committee of Atlanta.

DO YOU REMEMBER HARRY H. BARNHART?

Most readers of The Evening Times must remember with gratification the name of Harry H. aBrnhart, he of the ability of a magician to organize and lead "Community singing" at the Chautauqua last summer. Well, thit is what he is doing for Lyons, N. Y., a village. The Lyons Republican says:

"The Community Chorus will hold a rehearsal in the school auditorium this evening, and Director Harry H. Barnhart has requested that all the members make an effort to get a new member for this rehearsal. The chorus will sing at the Elks' memorial service in Memorial Theatre Sunday afternoon, and the music for that service will be rehearsed. Mr. Barnhart wants at least 200 voices in the chorus Sunday afternoon."

GET INTO THE BOOSTING BUSINESS

Do you know there's lots of people
Sitting round most every town,
Growling like a broody chicken,
Knocking every good thing down.
Don't be that kind of cattle,
'Cause they ain't no use on earth,
But just be a Booster rooster,
Crow and boost for all you're worth.

If your town needs boostin', boost her
Don't hold back and wait to see
If some other fellow's willin';
Sail right in, this country's free.
No one's got a mortgage on it;
It's yours just as much as his—
If your town is shy of boosters,
You get in the boostin' biz.

If things don't seem to suit you
An' the world seems kinder wrong,
What's the matter with a boostin',
Just to help the thing along?
'Cause if things should stop again
We'd be in a sorry plight.
You just keep the horn a-blowing!
Boost her up with all your might.

If you see some fellow tryin'
For to make some project go,
An' you can boost it up a trifle,
That's your cue to let him know
That you're not going to knock it,
Just because it ain't your shout—
But that you're going to boost a little,
'Cause he's got the best thing out.

—World Outlook.

tremely difficult for the observation, but there is no doubt a concentrated effort to crush the Allies will be made as soon as weather conditions permit; that the Bulgarians, their whole army now virtually released for operations in the south, will bear the brunt of the work. and that the greatest effort willb e made from the direction of Monastir. It is this forecast of future movements on which is based the belief that General Serrail's task will be to avoid envelopment.

The Bulgars, it is believed, are in greatest force in the triangle Monastir-Prilep-Krushevo, and at the former town the yactually are in the rear of the French left if the last known French positions have been maintained.. These positions occupied the right bank of the Cerna from a point seven miles from Monastir on the east to its junction with the Vardar. The position along the Cerna is of natural strength and is well held, increasing the conviction that the main attack will come on the flank.

The Austrian army, while the Bulgar operations are in progress, is expected to continue its drive through Montenegro, while the Germans, with the Turks and what Bulgar and Austrian units can be spared, will be used to keep Roumania in check and meet any Russian advances the future may develop. Rustchuk, on the Danube west of the Roumanian frontier, seems to be the principal point of concentration for the Germans.

BRITISH SAVINGS NEARLY DOUBLED

London—At a bankers' convention at Newcastle on Friday it was stated, as illustrating the manner in which the British people had responded to the plea for personal economies to meet the cost of the war, that the national savings during the first year of the war increased from $1,750,000,000 to $3,000,000,000. It was added that for the second year of the war the savings would exceed $5,000,000,000.

BOARD WOULD ABANDON JAIL

Resolution Offered by Oswego Supervisor, in the Absence of Defender in Chief, Mr. Parkhurst.

Oswego—Supervisor Riley of the Sixth ward, Oswego, introduced a resolution at yesterday's session of the Board of Supervisors looking to the abandonment of the Pulaski jail, which is described as the worst institution of the same nature in this state. The resolution will be taken up at Monday's session.

The resolution follows.:

"Whereas, The Oswego County Jail, located in the village of Pulaski, has been many times condemned by the State authorities having jurisdiction over prisons, and,

"Whereas, Such condemnations were based on the grounds that such jail was unfit for occupation, unnecesary and a matter of expense to the county of Oswego and,

"Whereas, In the County Jail located on the East River road in the City of Oswego is one of the most modern penal institutions in the State of New York, and,

"Whereas, We believe that it is unfair to the taxpayers of the county of Oswego to continue to compel them to pay taxes for the upkeep of the jail that is unnecessary, be it

"Resolved, That the Board of Supervisors of the county of Oswego do hereby abandon the county jail at Pulaski and that the sheriff of the county of Oswego be and hereby is directed to transfer the prisoners in said Pulaski jail to the county jail at Oswego, N. Y., and to all other things necessary to carry out the resolution of this board.

Mr. Parkhurst supervisor from Richland, was not present and it was decided to defer any action until he would be able to attend.

It was predicted by several members that the abandonment of the Pulaski jail would eventually lead to the Court House also being given up and all courts held in Oswego.

Mr. Martin presented the report of City Chamberlain Hennessey as railroad commissioner, regarding the Lake Ontario Shore Railroad bonds as follows: Bonds and interest paid in 1915, $6,527.50; bonds outstanding, 3½ per cent., $12,000; bonds and interest payable in 1916, $4,350; amount unclaimed on 4 per cent. bonds, $108,-50. Carried and levy ordered.

Mr. McNamara presented the report of City Chamberlain Hennessey as railroad commissioner, regarding the New York and Oswego Midland railraod bonds as follows: Bonds and int. paid in 1915, $26,940; bonds outstanding, 3* per cent., $72,000; payable in 1916, $26.4000. Carried and levy ordereed.

Mr. Wallace gave notice that at Monday evening's session he would offer a resolution fixing the hours of session at 11 o'clock, except Mondays, at 7:30 a'clock. The present hours are 12 o'clock daiiy and 8 o'clock Mondays.

SUNDAY'S MEN COMING WEEK FROM MONDAY

The Rev. M. G. Buck announces that two of the Billy Sunday helpers will be here Monday, December 13, to hold services in the Baptist church. The evangelist's immediate assistant, the Rev. Isaac Ward, who is described by some persons as being the equal of Sunday himself, will conduct the services, and he will be assisted in a generous manner by Mr. C. A. Brewster, pianist and tenor soloist.

The Rev. Mr. Buck thinks that Fulton is to be greatly favored by having the services of the two men.

Man's Limitations.

Man has done wonders since he came before the public. He has navigated the ocean, he has penetrated the mysteries of the starry heavens, he has harnessed the lightning and made it light the great cities of the world.

But he can't find a spool of thread in his wife's workbasket; he can't discover her pocket in a dress hanging in the closet; he cannot hang out clothes and get them on the line the right end up. He cannot hold clothespegs in his mouth while he is doing it either. He cannot be polite to somebody he hates. In short, he cannot do a hundred things that women do almost instinctively.

Another Denial.

At a dinner of the Gridiron club in 1913 Thomas F. Logan of the Philadelphia Inquirer was initiated as a member, and part of his hazing was to go about as a young reporter and interview the guests. Then he was questioned concerning the results.

"Did you interview the secretary of war?" he was asked.

"Yes."

"What did he say?"

"He denies it."

"What does he deny?"

"Why, what I asked him, and he said it didn't make any difference what; it was the immemorial custom of the war department to deny everything."—Arthur W. Dunn's "Gridiron Nights."

Versatile.

It was at a reception, and the two friends had met.

"Do you know," said Ina, "it was as much as I could do to keep from laughing when Josephine was just telling us about her fiance being 'so versatile'?"

"Meaning Webb?" replied Kathleen, smiling. "Well, dear, he is rather versatile, you know."

"Nonsense!" cried Ina. "You know, Kathleen, he is a regular idiot."

"Yes," replied Kathleen, "but he's so many kinds of an idiot."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

HERKIMER CO. WOULD CHANGE LAWS ON DEER

The men who go into the woods and fields in quest of game are interested in the action of the Board of Supervisors of Herkimer county in adopting a resolution by which request is made of Senator F. W. Cristman and the assemblyman to work for an amendment to the Conservation Law, to provide for the taking of only one deer during the open season, but without restriction as to sex. The existing law is declared by the Board to have a harmful influence upon the species as the number of bucks decrease, and the number of does does not increase, because many are killed and left in the woods.

The present law gives a hunter the privilege of killing two deer. The Herkimer Board of Supervisors believes by restricting the number of deer that may be killed to one, and removing the restriction on does, the law will work for the propogation of deer and remove the danger of their becoming extinct. If the killing of bucks continues while the does are protected, the time would come when species would be rare in the Adirondacks, it is declared.

The proposed amendment is favored by sportsmen generally particularly that feature which removes the restriction on does. Hunters often are unable to determine whether a deer is a doe or a buck, and consequently it is pointed out, many become innocent law breakers. The fact that they were unable to distinguish the sex of the animal does not release them from prosecution by game protectors. Other Boards of Supervisors, throughout the Adirondacks probably will adopt resolutions similar to those passed by the Herkimer County Board, it is expected.

GET INTO THE BOOSTING BUSINESS

Do you know there's lots of people
Sitting round most every town,
Growling like a broody chicken,
Knocking every good thing down.
Don't be that kind of cattle,
'Cause they ain't no use on earth,
But just be a Booster rooster,
Crow and boost for all you're worth.

If your town needs boostin', boost her
Don't hold back and wait to see
If some other fellow's willin';
Sail right in, this country's free.
No one's got a mortgage on it;
It's yours just as much as his.
If your town is shy of boosters,
You get in the boostin' biz.

If things don't seem to suit you
An' the world seems kinder wrong,
What's the matter with a boostin',
Just to help the thing along?
'Cause if things should stop again
We'd be in a sorry plight.
You just keep the horn a-blowing!
Boost her up with all your might.

If you see some fellow tryin'
For to make some project go,
An' you can boost it up a trifle,
That's your cue to let him know
That you're not going to knock it,
Just because it ain't your shout—
But that you're going to boost a little,
'Cause he's got the best thing out.

—World Outlook.

tremely difficult for the observation, but there is no doubt a concentrated effort to crush the Allies will be made as soon as weather conditions permit; that the Bulgarians, their whole army now virtually released for operations in the south, will bear the brunt of the work. and that the greatest effort willb e made from the direction of Monastir. It is this forecast of future movements on which is based the belief that General Serrail's task will be to avoid envelopment.

The Bulgars, it is believed, are in greatest force in the triangle Monastir-Prilep-Krushevo, and at the former town the yactually are in the rear of the French left if the last known French positions have been maintained.. These positions occupied the right bank of the Cerna from a point seven miles from Monastir on the east to its junction with the Vardar. The position along the Cerna is of natural strength and is well held, increasing the conviction that the main attack will come on the flank.

The Austrian army, while the Bulgar operations are in progress, is expected to continue its drive through Montenegro, while the Germans, with the Turks and what Bulgar and Austrian units can be spared, will be used to keep Roumania in check and meet any Russian advances the future may develop. Rustchuk, on the Danube west of the Roumanian frontier, seems to be the principal point of concentration for the Germans.

BRITISH SAVINGS NEARLY DOUBLED

London—At a bankers' convention at Newcastle on Friday it was stated, as illustrating the manner in which the British people had responded to the plea for personal economies to meet the cost of the war, that the national savings during the first year of the war increased from $1,750,000,000 to $3,000,000,000. It was added that for the second year of the war the savings would exceed $5,000,000,000.

ZIONIST LEADER TO SPEAK IN SYRACUSE TOMORROW

The foremost exponent of the Zionists of America, Mr. Louis Lipsky, of New York, will speak at a mass meeting in Cooper hall, Syracuse, tomorrow evening. Mr. Lipsky is chairman of the executive committee of the Federation of American Zionists, and it is expected that his address will bring together one of the largest audiences of Jews from this section that Syracuse has ever known.

With the partia demoralization o Zionist organizations in Europe as a result of the war, the task of continuing the work which has been begun in Palestine and of keeping the movement on its feet has devolved upon the American federation. iWthin the last year its activities have more than doubled, and in all this work Mr. Lipsky has been a leader.

For many years Mr. Lipsky was editor of The Maccabeean, a foremost Hebrew publication and the organ of the Zionists. He was associate editor of The American Hebrew for ten years and has been a frequent contributor to the magazines and newspapers of the country. He is a native of Rochester and a graduate of Columbia University.

BOARD WOULD ABANDON JAIL

Resolution Offered by Oswego Supervisor, in the Absence of Defender in Chief, Mr. Parkhurst.

Oswego—Supervisor Riley of the Sixth ward, Oswego, introduced a resolution at yesterday's session of the Board of Supervisors looking to the abandonment of the Pulaski jail, which is described as the worst institution of the same nature in this state. The resolution will be taken up at Monday's session.

The resolution follows:

"Whereas, The Oswego County Jail, located in the village of Pulaski, has been many times condemned by the State authorities having jurisdiction over prisons, and,

"Whereas, Such condemnations were based on the grounds that such jail was unfit for occupation, unnecessary and a matter of expense to the county of Oswego and,

"Whereas, In the County Jail located on the East River road in the City of Oswego is one of the most modern penal institutions in the State of New York, and,

"Whereas, We believe that it is unfair to the taxpayers of the county of Oswego to continue to compel them to pay taxes for the upkeep of the jail that is unnecessary, be it

"Resolved, That the Board of Supervisors of the county of Oswego do hereby abandon the county jail at Pulaski and that the sheriff of the county of Oswego be and hereby is directed to transfer the prisoners in said Pulaski jail to the county jail at Oswego, N. Y., and to all other things necessary to carry out the resolution of this board.

Mr. Parkhurst supervisor from Richland, was not present and it was decided to defer any action until he would be able to attend.

It was predicted by several members that the abandonment of the Pulaski jail would eventually lead to the Court House also being given up and all courts held in Oswego.

Mr. Martin presented the report of City Chamberlain Hennessey as railroad commissioner, regarding the Lake Ontario Shore Railroad bonds as follows: Bonds and interest paid in 1915, $6,527.50; bonds outstanding, 3½ per cent., $12,000; bonds and interest payable in 1916, $4,350; amount unclaimed on 4 per cent. bonds, $108,-50. Carried and levy ordered.

Mr. McNamara presented the report of City Chamberlain Hennessey as railroad commissioner, regarding the New York and Oswego Midland railraod bonds as follows: Bonds and int. paid in 1915, $26,940; bonds outstanding, 3* per cent., $72,000; payable in 1916, $26.4000. Carried and levy ordereed.

Mr. Wallace gave notice that at Monday evening's session he would offer a resolution fixing the hours of session at 11 o'clock, except Mondays, at 7:30 o'clock. The present hours are 12 o'clock daily and 8 o'clock Mondays.

FULTON EVIDENCE FOR FULTON PEOPLE

The Statements of Fulton Residents Are Surely More Reliable Than Those of Utter Strangers.

Home testimony is real proof.
Public statements of Fulton people carry real weight.
What a friend or neighbor says compels respect.
The word of one whose home is far away invites your doubts.
Here's a Fulton man's statement.
And it's for Fulton people's benefit.
Such evidence is convincing.
That's the kind of proof that backs Doan's Kidney Pills.
P. J. Butterman, cigar maker, 312 W. Broadway, Fulton, says: "Nearly every spring I have an attack of lame back and severe pains across my kidneys. At such times my kidneys don't act as they should. I use Doan's Kidney Pills and they never fail to give me prompt relief."

SUNDAY'S MEN COMING WEEK FROM MONDAY

The Rev. M. G. Buck announces that two of the Billy Sunday helpers will be here Monday, December 13, to hold services in the Baptist church. The evangelist's immediate assistant, the Rev. Isaac Ward, who is described by some persons as being the equal of Sunday himself, will conduct the services, and he will be assisted in a generous manner by Mr. C. A. Brewster, pianist and tenor soloist.

The Rev. Mr. Buck thinks that Fulton is to be greatly favored by having the services of the two men.

Man's Limitations.

Man has done wonders since he came before the public. He has navigated the ocean, he has penetrated the mysteries of the starry heavens, he has harnessed the lightning and made it light the great cities of the world.

But he can't find a spool of thread in his wife's workbasket; he can't discover her pocket in a dress hanging in the closet; he cannot hang out clothes and get them on the line the right end up. He cannot hold clothespegs in his mouth while he is doing it either. He cannot be polite to somebody he hates. In short, he cannot do a hundred things that women do almost instinctively.

Another Denial.

At a dinner of the Gridiron club in 1913 Thomas F. Logan of the Philadelphia Inquirer was initiated as a member, and part of his hazing was to go about as a young reporter and interview the guests. Then he was questioned concerning the results.

"Did you interview the secretary of war?" he was asked.

"Yes."

"What did he say?"

"He denies it."

"What does he deny?"

"Why, what I asked him, and he said it didn't make any difference what; it was the immemorial custom of the war department to deny everything."—Arthur W. Dunn's "Gridiron Nights."

Versatile.

It was at a reception, and the two friends had met.

"Do you know," said Ina, "it was as much as I could do to keep from laughing when Josephine was just telling us about her fiance being 'so versatile'?"

"Meaning Webb?" replied Kathleen, smiling. "Well, dear, he is rather versatile, you know."

"Nonsense!" cried Ina. "You know, Kathleen, he is a regular idiot."

"Yes," replied Kathleen, "but he's so many kinds of an idiot."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

HERKIMER CO. WOULD CHANGE LAWS ON DEER

The men who go into the woods and fields in quest of game are interested in the action of the Board of Supervisors of Herkimer county in adopting a resolution by which request is made of Senator F. W. Cristman and the assemblyman to work for an amendment to the Conservation Law, to provide for the taking of only one deer during the open season, but without restriction as to sex. The existing law is declared by the Board to have a harmful influence upon the species as the number of bucks decrease, and the number of does does not increase, because many are killed and left in the woods.

The present law gives a hunter the privilege of killing two deer. The Herkimer Board of Supervisors believes by restricting the number of deer that may be killed to one, and removing the restriction on does, the law will work for the propogation of deer and remove the danger of their becoming extinct. If the killing of bucks continues while the does are protected, the time would come when species would be rare in the Adirondacks, it is declared.

The proposed amendment is favored by sportsmen generally particularly that feature which removes the restriction on does. Hunters often are unable to determine whether a deer is a doe or a buck, and consequently it is pointed out, many become innocent law breakers. The fact that they were unable to distinguish the sex of the animal does not release them from prosecution by game protectors. Other Boards of Supervisors throughout the Adirondacks probably will adopt resolutions similar to those passed by the Herkimer County Board, it is expected.

EMPRESS ALEXANDRA AS RED CROSS NURSE

Care of Soldiers Cures Her of Melancholy.

JOY IN IMPERIAL HOME.

Fear Which Was Held in Close Intimacies of Court Circles That She Was Drifting Into Hopeless Insanity Now Dispelled—Her Two Daughters Also Are Actively Engaged.

Petrograd.—If the war has brought unspeakable horror to the Russian people it has also brought comfort to the imperial household of the czar. Prior to the war it was no secret that the czarina suffered from a marked form of melancholia with other mental peculiarities. The fear was held in the close intimacies of court circles that she was drifting into hopeless insanity.

But since the czarina and her two daughters, the Grand Duchess Olga and the Grand Duchess Tatiana, have entered actively into their work as Red Cross nurses the word has gone throughout all the Russias that the mental sickness of the czarina has been cured.

To her constant and self sacrificing labors in the court hospital at Tsarskoe Selo, the village where the famous summer palace of the czar is located, is credited the relief which has come to her mentally.

The czarina and the grand duchesses took a thorough course in training in the care of the wounded soldiers. The czarina threw herself into the organization of the hospital with enthusiasm and had it equipped in the most perfect manner.

It was placed under the direction of the Princess Gedroyc, one of the highest nobility and who has won a national reputation in Russia as one of the foremost women doctors. The czarina, with her daughters, works at the hospital every day from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. and often later.

So impressed are they with the seriousness and the humanity of their services that they often return in the evenings, and when they have dangerously wounded patients they stay all night. The czarina has also equipped a bath train and presented it to the soldiers in the field.

The court hospital has accommodations for 200 soldiers and thirty officers. The regular nurse's uniform which the royal nurses wear is made of white with a red cross on the left arm. The example of the czarina and her daughters has induced many women of the Russian nobility to devote themselves to Red Cross work.

Some of them have turned over their residences in Petrograd as well as their estates in the country to the soldiers for hospitals.

FINDS DIET CURES CANCER.

London Doctor Reports Seven Complete Recoveries With Nature's Aid.

London.—Seven patients suffering from cancer have been completely cured "by assisting nature's efforts," according to Dr. Robert Bell, head of the cancer research department of the Battersea General hospital.

"We have," Dr. Bell recently said, "been able to demonstrate beyond doubt that the healing power of nature, if sufficiently assisted by regulating the diet regimen of patients, together with the administration of therapeutic agents, has proved in many instances quite competent not only to overcome the disease, but to bring about complete recovery."

His Ashes in Parcel Post.

West Palm Beach, Fla.—The ashes of A. Ninomiya, a Japanese who died here several days ago, have been started for Japan by parcel post. Shortly before his death Ninomiya requested that his body be cremated and the ashes sent to Ehima, Japan, where he was born. The ashes were placed in a metal receptacle, which was hermetically sealed.

Mercurial.

The adjective mercurial, like many others, came into ordinary speech from the realm of astrology. In astrological language a mercurial man was one born under the influence of Mercury when Mercury was in the ascendant and therefore possessed of the mental qualities supposed to distinguish the heathen.

BOARD OF CITY DEVELOPMENT.

First Municipal Commercial Organization Has Been Started In Amarillo.

Amarillo, Tex., has the distinction of having the first municipal commercial organization, says the Town Development Magazine. A board of city development, the name of the organization, is provided for by the new city charter and at the present taxation and assessed valuation has an annual income of $18,000. The new charter briefly provides, first, for a commission government by three commissioners, elected by the people; second, a city manager, elected by the commission; third, a board of city development, corresponding to a regular commercial organization, composed of fifteen members appointed by the mayor, who is also one of the commissioners. The fifteen directors appoint the secretary. He is a salaried official and not a member of the board.

The organization is supported by a two mill levy on $100 of valuation, which the city government must turn over to the board to be used as it sees fit. Neither the mayor nor the city commission has power of review of any kind over how and in what way the money is spent.

The assessed valuation of Amarillo this year is $9,145,000, netting a fund for the board of city development of slightly over $18,000.

Following its first meeting and organization the new board began its search for a secretary. Out of the 109 applications the board selected Porter A. Whaley, former secretary at Anderson, S. C.

Amarillo is the largest city in northwest Texas, having a population of nearly 20,000 people. The experiment of a community supported commercial organization will be watched with great interest by commercial organization members over the entire country.

City Feeds Farm Soil.

According to the Farm and Fireside, the city of Los Angeles, Cal., gathers up from 150 to 175 tons of garbage a day and converts it into twenty or twenty-five tons of fertilizer. That sells at from $14 to $18 per ton. It goes to the orchards, farms and vegetable gardens of the vicinity.

Experience with the Los Angeles plan is but a duplication of the experience of Toledo, O., and other American cities as well as many in Europe. Proper utilization of garbage represents the opportunity to dispose of the city's wastes without expense and in some cases at a profit to the city, while at the same time the resultant fertilizer goes back to the soil from which it came and to which it ought never be lost.

Nobody need think twice to realize that the incineration or other waste of the useful elements in a great city's garbage is worse than wicked. The land cannot be denuded always of its most valuable constituents and yet go on producing for the increasing millions of population. The modern method of handling fertilizers means economy to the city and also to the country. It represents the city for the first time in the business of feeding the soil.

City Hall Switchboard.

One of the innovations introduced by Fred M. Lockwood, manager of operation under the recent amendments to the charter of the city of San Diego, Cal., has been the installation of a central telephone switchboard in the city hall.

Prior to this installation there had been thirty individual telephones in the various offices, for which the city was paying $5 each per month.

Under the new arrangement six trunk lines are run into the switchboard, the total cost of which is $32.50. There are thirty stations on the switchboard, the cost of which is $1 each per month. There is an operator whose salary is $60 per month. Taking the monthly cost of the thirty stations and the salary of the operator together, the cost is $90 per month as against $150 per month under the old scheme.

Included in the service from the central switchboard are two outside lines, one running to police central station and one to headquarters of the chief of the fire department.

Heckling Humor.

A parliamentary candidate was holding a meeting in Auld Reekie at which the heckler was much in evidence, and the embarrassed candidate failed to give a single answer which was judged to be satisfactory by the audience. Toward the end of the meeting an elector rose and quietly asked, "Sir, would you tell us what might be the name your second initial stands for?" The unfortunate candidate, greatly puzzled at the purport of the question, asked in what way the information could interest the audience. "In this way," explained the interrogator, "we should be able to see if you could answer one question!"—London Tatler.

INVITING TROUBLE.

Sorrows are visitors that come without invitation, but complaining minds send a wagon to bring their troubles home in by the load. Many people are born crying, live complaining and die disappointed. They chew the bitter pill which they would not even know to be bitter if only they had the sense to swallow it whole in a cupful of patience and nice, pure water.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

BRAIN SURGERY CURES TWELVE

Exhibition Shows Wonders of Modern Operations.

PARALYTIC BOY ATHLETE.

Lad Goes Through Feats to Delight of New York Doctors—Some of the Victims Resorted to Use of Faculties When Cysts Were Removed From the Brain—Symptoms Puzzled.

New York.—A dozen children were exhibited recently as wonders of modern brain surgery at the Academy of Medicine at a joint session with the New York Neurological society.

The heads of most of them had been cut open, some on one side only, some on both sides, by Dr. William Sharpe and his assistants at Polyclinic hospital.

The children, who ranged in age from two to twelve years, had suffered from spasmodic paralysis, due to hemorrhage inside the skull. In many cases they had been seized with convulsions soon after birth. In a number of instances the paralysis was not much noticeable until eight months or so after birth.

In cutting into the heads of a large proportion of the cases the surgeon found cysts, which had to be removed. Sometimes the symptoms had been puzzling, and in every case where a hemorrhage was suspected as the cause of the symptoms the eye sight were investigated, and an examination was made of the spinal fluid to corroborate the diagnosis.

Little ones who before the knife explored their skulls were incapable of speech or even of locomotion or movements of the arms were able to talk and laugh and run backward and forward and hold their arms up above their heads like normal children.

One of the children, a boy, who before the operation couldn't walk or talk intelligibly, now goes seven blocks to school twice a day.

One little child that formerly was always huddled up, with its head bent down almost to its feet, trotted proudly before the surgeons, some of whom stood on chairs in order to get a better view.

In none of the cases shown at the meeting had there been any convulsions or backward symptoms since the use of the knife. Out of over 170 operations, according to the Polyclinic professor, there were only twelve deaths, and there were special reasons to account for them, including extreme emaciation in a number of instances when the skull was cut open.

One of the children was a boy of twelve, who, from being a helpless paralytic, had been taught by Dr. Bess M. Mensendieck to use one muscle after another until he has finally got almost as much control over himself as a professional athlete. The process of teaching him went on daily for more than six months.

The boy was stripped, and then on a mat he went through practically all the contortions of a wrestler, bending his body backward, forward, sideways, twisting his trunk, raising his arms, flexing his legs and rising from the mat by the use only of his leg muscles.

Dr. Alfred S. Taylor showed two young men who had been restored to health by opening their backs and removing spinal cord tumors.

Dr. C. Burns Craig, who served with the American ambulance service in Paris, told of the injuries to the peripheral nerves produced by modern warfare.

Few soldiers survive bayonet wounds, added Dr. Craig. They die either from shock or loss of blood.

PLAN HOLIDAY FOR APRIL 30.

Would Commemorate Inauguration of Washington as President.

New York.—One of the last things done by the late constitutional convention was the approval of a number of recommendations for the enactment of measures by the legislature, and one of the things approved was the suggestion that April 30 be made a legal holiday in commemoration of the inauguration of George Washington as first president of the United States on April 30, 1789.

Delegate Peter Donovan, one of the members representing the Twenty-first senate district in the Bronx, submitted the proposition, doing so on the basis of a letter written him by George J. Clark, a journalist, who urged that just as July 4 was the holiday of American independence and Decoration day was the anniversary of the saving of the Union, so April 30 should be commemorative of national unity.

When the state legislature meets in January one of the two Bronx senators, either Senator James A. Hamilton or Senator John J. Dunnigan, in the upper house and Assemblyman Fertig in the lower, will introduce the necessary bills.

PROPER TOGS FOR WINTER

New York—Skating is revived and rivals dancing as a social diversion and skating parties where the few cut capers, and the many look on, are the latest form of entertainment.

One of the latest smart affairs was an afternoon skating party, held on the artificial ice at the Hippodrome, where not only the guests exhibited their proficiency in the revived art, but some of the best professionals were seen. The host and hostess themselves qualified to rank with these and as stars in the amateur class which is rapidly increasing its membership.

McCall Design

Winter Sports at American Resorts

By all accounts Tuxedo and other like resorts are to rival the attraction of the famous Swiss resorts now that the war has cut these off. A mile long coast is nearly completed at the famous Jersey Club, and skeeing with Swiss Guides and skating will soon be in full swing there.

With the vogue for outdoor sport there is naturally great demand for sport clothes and accessories, and this field offers numerous opportunities for the selection of useful and acceptable gifts.

Sweater Sets

All the shops make enticing display of sweater sets, consisting of coat, hat and scarf in Angora or brush finish wool preferably. The scarfs alone in their picturesque bright colorings or with matching hats, are most attractive and comfortable additions for out door use and sports. The gayest combinations of colors are used, as well as a solid mass of pure color in coral, Kelly green, King's blue, Chicory, orange, tans, grays and pure white. It's all a matter of preference and becomingness.

Separate Skirts

Naturally sport costumes bring special demand for separate skirts, and nothing is too striking in plaids, stripes or colors for such use, while every detail of line, patch or pouch pockets, buttons and general man-tailored finishes adds to the desirability of these garments. Jersey cloth is a fashionable fabric, and comes in numerous mixtures, as well as in plain tints. Ribbed velvets are especially good, and tweeds of all sorts as well as Coverts and Whip cords are all well liked.

Headwear

Tam o'Shanter crowns, in cornered shape as well as circular are pretty and popular, and hats of kid rival kid coats and leather trimmings in smart sport get-ups. The high wrinkled top boots that is increasingly used in especially pretty and suitable with suits built on Hussar or Hungarian lines, and fur, is, of course, the prettiest top finish for this type of shoe.

Hoisery

The very smartest things is silk hosiery are very heavy and striped in three colors, blue, purple and black, or black, green and blue, and a tie to match is desirable.

A CHRISTMAS HINT.

Helpful Suggestions About Choosing a Plant For Your Friend.

The idea of sending plants to one's friends is not a new one, but it ought to be more popular than it is. They are not so expensive as many other things that we give, and they bring pleasure daily for weeks. A good plan is to send the plant to the family as a whole when you do not care to make a present to each individual member.

It is better to choose a plant that is peculiarly appropriate to Christmas rather than the sort that fits in just as well any time of year. The best ones to send are familiar to most of us.

English holly can be found at any florist's and is a very handsome and charming plant. Its only disadvantage is that it is likely to lose its leaves and berries in a few days unless properly cared for. It should be kept in a cool, damp place until a day or two before Christmas, when it may be brought out to decorate the house.

The Jerusalem cherry is the cheapest of Christmas plants and not at all spoiled by the fact that it is rather common. We all know its gay red berries and symmetrical form. It needs a warm room, but must not be kept where coal gas can reach it or it will drop both leaves and berries.

Growing peppers make a delightfully gay note in the house at Christmas. In some the peppers are long and narnow, while others show fruit like tiny scarlet tomatoes. These like a warm room, too, but gas will ruin them.

Poinsettia is the most effective and gorgeous plant we can buy and also is quite easy to care for. These facts account perhaps for its popularity. It must not be kept too damp and needs a warm room for its abiding place.

Some People Won't Pay Cost.

"Politeness costs nothing," remarked the ready made philosopher.

"That's not always true," replied Miss Cayenne. "I have seen it cost people a terrible struggle."—Washington Star.

SUNDAY NIGHT SUPPERS.

CRAB MEAT COCKTAIL.—Fill cocktail glasses with fresh crab meat and cover with the following dressing: One teaspoonful of freshly grated horseradish, one tablespoonful of tomato ketchup, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one teaspoonful of tabasco and seasoning to taste. Mix well and pour over cocktails.

Kidney In Bacon.—Cut six thin slices of bacon about six or eight inches long. Mix in a basin one teaspoonful each of chopped onion and parsley, add one tablespoonful of breadcrumbs, a pinch of nutmeg, pepper and grated lemon rind. Sprinkle the bacon with it, put a kidney on each slice and roll it round them, tie with a piece of string and bake in a hot oven, or cook in a frying pan for a few minutes. Serve very hot.

Tomato Cocktail.—Select firm ripe tomatoes. Put them into a wire basket and plunge into boiling water for a moment; remove the skins. Put aside in the refrigerator until very cold. At serving time cut into cubes, season with salt and pepper and add enough mayonnaise dressing to cover the tomatoes. Serve very cold in tall glasses or small glass cups. Sprinkle a little chopped parsley over the top of each.

Beef Olives.—Cut slices of leftover roast beef very thin. Spread each slice with the following mixture: Breadcrumbs, roast beef gravy and chopped parsley. Roll and simmer in gravy and water for half an hour.

Oysters With Cheese.—Take a cupful of grated breadcrumbs and brown nicely in a little butter; butter a shallow dish and sprinkle with the breadcrumbs. Drain about three dozen oysters and dry with a clean towel and then season. Place them one by one on the browned breadcrumbs, strew chopped parsley over them and grated Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle lightly with breadcrumbs again and then place in the oven. The layer of breadcrumbs will be brown in about fifteen minutes if the oven is hot enough. Serve with drawn butter and lemon garnish. If desired, a little lemon juice may be poured over the oysters before placing in the oven.

Delicious Pear Pickle.—Chop fine one peck of peeled and cored hard pears, six large onions and four red or green peppers from which the seeds have been removed. Cover with three cupfuls of vinegar, one teaspoonful allspice, one teaspoonful cloves, one teaspoonful ground ginger, two heaping tablespoonfuls of salt, one tablespoonful of mustard seed or ground mustard and one cupful brown sugar. Stir well, bring quickly to a boil and then simmer until all is tender.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A Subtle Expression of the One Piece Frock.

Dressy in effect, yet simple in design, is this princess costume of mole colored broadcloth trimmed with beaver and having an embroidered self-belt.

This adorable frock of princess design is fashioned of mole colored broadcloth. The skirt and cuffs are trimmed with bands of beaver and the high collar is of the same fur. The frock is self-belted, the ends of the belt being ornamented with embroidered motifs.

The dress is cut in six gores and does not require a lining. It would be equally smart in serge, voile or taffeta trimmed with bands of velvet or satin instead of fur. In medium size the model requires 4½ yards of 54-inch material, with 5 yards of fur for trimming. About ⅝ yard silk will be needed to line the belt.

The material is divided into two parts for cutting. The first section is folded in half and the second in quarters, with the selvages meeting, as shown in the cutting guide. On the first half the side front section is placed first, and, although it rests along the fold of the cloth, it is cut on a lengthwise thread. If desired there may be an applied back; this is particularly useful for winter wear and, if used, should be laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods.

The back is laid opposite the side front, and about this are placed the shield and belt; to the right of it are placed the collar and cuff.

On the quarter fold of the goods the front is laid, with the collar to the right. Opposite these are the sleeves, with the back gore to the right of sleeve. After all of the sections are laid on the cloth it will be seen that the space has been covered to the best possible advantage. The smaller pieces may be used for buttons, if desired.

If carried out in taffeta the applied back would be effective in serge or cloth, as these materials are combined very effectively this season.

Built on Soldierly Lines, This Garment Is Decidedly Modish.

A CORRECT JUVENILE.

This material is dark blue and bottle green invisible plaid duvetyn. The military cape is topped by an extremely high collar. For school, outdoor life and stormy days this coat is faultlessly correct.

SQUASHES FROM ASH PILE.

Seeds Dropped Aimlessly, Receiving No Attention, Bring Large Harvest.

Franklin, Ind.—As a result of planting four squash seeds in an ash pile early in the summer H. C. Hoffman gathered more than sixty large squashes from the vines. The squashes have attracted the attention of half the people here, as Mr. Hoffman lives only two squares from the courthouse.

The seeds, thrown carelessly on the ash pile and receiving no attention whatever, except an occasional pan of dishwater, grew so rapidly that they soon left his yard, entered the neighbors' yard and then climbed a wire fence and covered it a half block from their planting place.

Mr. Hoffman delivered to all neighbors where his vines had trespassed a large squash. Most of the squashes were more than three feet long and of fine quality.

A Sure Sign.

A Tragedy.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

In a public park in Rio de Janeiro a lady handsomely dressed walked alone. The fact of her being unattended caused those who saw her to wonder, for it is not usual for one of the higher class to be out alone. When she deliberately took a seat at one end of a bench, at the other end of which sat a man, the surprise was even greater, for she appeared to be a lady. She had been sitting but a few minutes when two gentlemen walked by.

"Gentlemen," she said, "this man who is sitting near me has insulted me. May I ask you to get his address that my natural protector may demand satisfaction?"

The two men stopped, lifted their hats and offered their services. The accused man denied that he had offended the lady. She begged one of the others to call upon her at her hotel. He did so, sending up his card, bearing the name of Roger Stone, Denver, Colo.

"I am fortunate," she said, "in not only finding a countryman to assist me in this affair, but one from the chivalrous west. I am traveling with my twin brother. He is not with me this evening, but will be in later. Will you be the bearer for him of a challenge under the code for tomorrow morning?"

Mr. Stone's surprise at this singular proceeding was even greater than before. He asked the name of the man for whom he was to bear the challenge and was told that it was Harrison—Frank Harrison. He endeavored to learn something of the manner in which the lady had been ill treated, but she appeared to be so averse to going over the disagreeable details that he did not press the matter. What added to the mystery was that the man who had offended the lady was also an American named Mathews.

The next morning the two parties met on the ground chosen. Mr. Harrison, who was the image of his sister and looked equally feminine, was attended by Mr. Stone, the other principal's second being a Brazilian. His opponent protested against the proceeding, for which he said he was unable to account. He disclaimed any intention of interfering with Miss Harrison, and if he had unwittingly done so he would apologize. The lady's defender refused to accept an apology, and preparations were made for the encounter, which was to be fought with pistols.

When the two principals were placed face to face at thirty paces interval and the signal was about to be given to fire Harrison made a signal for delay. Then, addressing his opponent, he said:

"Jim Mathews, you don't know me, for you have never seen me before. I am not Frank Harrison. I am Eugenia Phillips, widow of the man you ruined and drove to suicide three months after our marriage. I have followed you all the way from Virginia City for the express purpose of killing you. I found you yesterday and took measures for this meeting."

A deathly pallor spread itself over the face of the man addressed. His enemy nodded to the man who was to give the signal. He hesitated. The woman raised her pistol, and her adversary followed her act. A white handkerchief fluttered to the ground. The man's hand trembled; the woman's was steady as a rock. Two shots rang out, and the man fell with a bullet in his heart.

The woman stood for a few moments looking at him who had blighted her life and on whom she had taken revenge, then sank in a swoon.

The finishing of this tragedy, occupying as it did but a minute or two, did not give the seconds any time to prevent it. Indeed, they were paralyzed with surprise. When the woman fell her second ran forward, took her up and bore her to the carriage in which she had come onto the ground. He took her to her hotel and called for a doctor, for she was hysterical.

Meanwhile Mr. Stone busied himself to prevent the affair from getting out, and by pledging the few persons involved to secrecy and bribing the police he succeeded. Had it not been for the burial of the slain man the bribe would not have been necessary.

As soon as the lady was able to travel she sailed for the United States, and on the same steamer was her second in the duel.

From the time of that episode Roger Stone was a changed man. The tragedy at which he had assisted, the wrecking of a woman's life, affected him materially. It's not easy for a man to witness a woman's sufferings without being strongly drawn to her. On reaching the United States Stone and the widow both sought the west, where they lived. Stone visited Mrs. Phillips frequently and in time begged her to permit him to devote the rest of his life to her. Though grateful for his sympathy and the service he had rendered her, she told him that it would not be right for one whose nerves had been shattered to burden one who seemed to have a pleasant career before him. Besides, she had a life on her conscience. To this latter statement he said that if he had had time to gain a correct understanding of the case the life would have been on his conscience instead of hers, but it would not have been a heavy load [illegible] distance, and the [illegible] edge has been worn away.

AMERICAN EXPORT TRADE PERMANENT

Must Continue to Supply France After War Ends.

TWO DECADES TO PAY DEBTS

Raw Materials and Cash Will Be in Continual Demand While Factories Are Being Rebuilt—Head of Steel Trade Foresees Enormous Task in Reconverting Various Plants.

That the volume of business between the United States and Europe will not cease with the war, that the United States for several years will not have to fear European competition in manufactured products, is the opinion expressed in Paris by Robert Pinot, general secretary of the Comite des Forges de France. This organization is the official representative of the Creusot works and all the other iron and steel manufacturers of France and the medium through which the French government is now getting large quantities of war munitions for the French and Russian armies.

"It is unfortunately true," Mr. Pinot said, "that we must look to the United States for several years to supply us with money or credits and with raw and manufactured materials. We will be working for the next twenty years to pay what we owe. Not before that time can we begin to put any profits in our own pockets. The fear that so soon as the war is ended the manufacturers now busy making arms and cannon and shells will convert their factories into the making of products to compete with yours is ungrounded.

Must Rebuild Old Plants.

"We will have the enormous task of rebuilding our old steel plants, of reconverting our automobile, button, cloth, printing and railroad shops, all now busy making munitions, back to their old uses. We will have to try to repair the vast material destruction that has come with the war. Then we will have to do our best to satisfy our own home markets. To do these things we will have to continue to buy of you, as we are now doing for war supplies.

"So far as concerns France, we iron and steel men had begun to do a surprising business in the few years before the war. We were not only filling the demands on the home market, but we were beginning to go into the foreign trade. France had almost ceased to be an agricultural nation. I believe, too, that our products were the most perfectly made in the world. Our customers demanded long wearing articles, and we satisfied their demands. An American locomotive is built to last seven years, whereas the railroads we supply want them to last thirty years. This is a condition the American must meet in future competition with us."

In connection with the reconstruction of the French factories destroyed in the north of France, referred to by Mr. Pinot, a current report indicates increasing imports of cotton from the United States and shows that France is now using more American cotton than ever before the war. The totals for the first eight months of this year of such imports were 6,000,000 metric quintals of 100 kilos each. Before the war France had 7,200,000 cotton spindles and 120,000 looms. At the end of 1914 but 25 per cent, or 1,800,000, were in operation, due to the German invasion of the Vosges and Lille districts. Now 40 per cent, or 3,000,000 spindles, are in operation, with 4,200,000 still idle.

MARINES MAY CARRY STICKS.

Idea Borrowed From Tommy Atkins Is Sanctioned by Major General.

Major General Commandant George Barnett of the United States marine corps has sanctioned the carrying of swagger sticks by marines when ashore in uniform or out of [illegible]. The idea is borrowed from Cousin Tommy Atkins of the British army. It is thought that the carrying of the sticks will add distinction to the marines' already attractive uniform. The sticks are from various kinds of wood and are usually twenty-four or twenty-six inches long. Chinese bullets are sometimes used for ferrules and foreign coins for the heads.

The marine is a much traveled man and is quick to pick up ideas of foreign services which will add in any way to his already natty military appearance.

SAFE AFTER 10,000 FOOT LEAP

Parachute Lands Man Without Injury; In Air Fifteen Minutes.

Colonel Maitland of the British royal naval air service jumped with a parachute from an aeroplane which was 10,000 feet in the air. He landed safely. The officer has been experimenting with projected developments of the aerial service and arrived at the point where it was necessary to determine whether an air man could land safely by parachute from such a height.

"Some one has to do it," he said. "There is only one person I care to ask. I will make the attempt myself."

It took the colonel fifteen minutes to make the descent, but he solved his problem satisfactorily.

MINOR MEASURES TO BE CONSIDERED BY CONGRESS

Several Treaties to Be Ratified—Suffrage and Prohibition Hosts on Hand.

While the preparedness measures and means of raising additional revenue will occupy a greater part of the time of congress, other measures less important will also be considered. The Colombian treaty, which carries $25,000,000 and an apology for the land taken by the United States for the Panama canal zone and for the action of President Roosevelt, may be disposed of by the senate. Senator Stone, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, is in favor of ratifying it, but it is feared now by friends of the treaty that there will be enough opposition to defeat it. Senator Borah, a Republican member of the foreign relations committee, has repeatedly said that he would use all his power to prevent ratification.

The Nicaraguan treaty, which provides $3,000,000 for a canal right of way, will be stoutly opposed by Senator Smith of Michigan and others and may never be ratified.

A new treaty with Haiti providing for supervision of that country by the United States will be presented.

The attitude of this country toward Mexico will be discussed in the senate. But if President Carranza succeeds in crushing Villa and bringing about peace congress will not devote much time to that country.

The bill to provide a more liberal government for the Philippines may be passed at this session. The house passed the Jones bill last winter, but it did not get out of the senate committee.

The two spectacular issues before congress will be that of woman suffrage and prohibition. Large numbers of woman suffrage and prohibition advocates are coming here from the various states to make determined efforts to get votes for women and to make the capital dry. It is estimated that 300 or 400 women will frequent the corridors of the capitol for months to urge congressmen to support the proposed amendment to the constitution. The prohibitionists are quite as determined that their proposition to drive liquor out of Washington shall be accepted.

Saving Trouble.

"Can you tell me," said the good natured old gentleman, "why those golfers over there called me all those frightful names just now?"

"Why, what happened?"

"Oh, when they hit their ball over here I picked it up and threw it back to them to save them the trouble of coming for it."—Christian Register.

MAY STANDARDIZE PRODUCTS OF FARM

Quality and Quantity Should Be Under Federal Control.

WOULD AVOID ALL MISTAKES

Chief of Bureau of Markets Says That Size of Containers Varies In Different Localities—Retailers Accused of Repacking Boxes and Giving Consumer the Short End.

Charles J. Brand, chief of the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, told the national conference on marketing and farm credits, in session in Chicago, that standardization of farm products as to quality and as to size and type of package is necessary as an accurate basis for price quotation. He said that accuracy of standards in selling products means a smaller margin between the price paid by consumers and the price received by producers. He thought standardization of containers a proper subject for federal legislation under the weights and measures power of the constitution. He said in part:

"We never can have much progress until the buyer and the seller are discussing the commodity in the same terms, and that means that we must have grades and standards not only as to quality, but as to packages and containers. In order to get an accurate idea of the diversity which prevails in this latter regard C. T. More of the department of agriculture has made a collection showing the size and types of packages and containers current in the trade. I assure you it is a motley horde and is in itself a complete argument for standardization.

No Boxes the Same.

"New York has one set of grape baskets, Michigan another and still other grape territories other kinds. Some of them look very much like others, but contain less. Such confusion furnishes endless opportunity for manipulation and even dishonesty.

"In the case of strawberry boxes not only is there exceedingly great variation in the cubic contents, but it is a common practice to repack from containers of greater capacity to those of less in distributing in and to the retail trade. Likewise with peaches. The successful commercial orchardist packs his peaches according to the size of the fruit, and often when he buys his own fruit he finds that where he had packed as high as thirty-six to forty-five in each four quart basket the retailer has repacked only nineteen to twenty-five peaches in the same basket.

"Under the weights and measure power of the constitution congress has recently established the standard barrel for apples, cranberries and certain other fruits. This act becomes effective July 1, 1916. Undoubtedly this barrel will replace a large number of short measure packages which are used for potatoes, truck crops, fruit and other things, and which vary in capacity from two bushels up to ten or twelve pecks. The standardization of apple boxes, berry crates and cups and other containers is under consideration, and we may look forward to progress with reference to these."

The Eskimo Baby.

The clothing of the Eskimo baby is often very scanty. In fact, one occasionally sees a baby being carried in its mother's hood with only a cotton shirt on, despite the fact that the thermometer registers 20 degrees below zero. The mother's hood is the baby's cradle. Being made of seal or deer skin, it is warm and wind proof. The infant also has the benefit of the heat of its mother's body and is out of harm's way. If it were laid in a basket cradle in the tent it would be very much in the way and would always be in danger of falling a prey to the wolfish Eskimo dogs that prowl round the door by day and night, ever ready to pick up a dainty morsel.

AWE OF DEATH IS ROUTED BY WAR

Twist of Nature Places Horrors In a New Light.

PITY IS NOT DRIVEN AWAY.

Unless Soldiers at Front Learn to Overlook Bloodshed and Death They Would Soon Lose Their Minds—A Joke Is the Only Antidote—Power of Appreciation Nullified.

"How can they stand it? I should think the soldiers living with death and the dead about them all the time would go insane."

One frequently hears that. The answer is easy. The men very quickly get used to it all, says a correspondent from the French front. Take this example:

As our party returned to the motors at sundown, after walking over the Champagne battlefield, two carts pushed quickly past us. On a canvas stretcher beneath the horseshoe axle of each lay a soldier, fully clothed.

"Wounded?" some one asked.

"Yes," said an officer, and changed the subject. But the soldiers pushing the carts were strangely careless with the wounded men. They walked rapidly and took no pains to keep the wheels out of the smaller shell holes. The forms rocked and pitched and swayed. The odd attitude of one of them fascinated me. He was on his back, his arms crossed before, but not touching his face, nor touching each other. With every lurch of the cart his arms waved about rigidly and stuck just where they were.

"Kidding" Each Other.

A second man accompanied each vehicle, and these two were "kidding" each other. The first threw a clod at the second, and the second replied by flinging his metal helmet at the first. There was a burst of laughter, and as the carts stopped to permit the pushers to mop their perspiring brows the two youngsters—they were about twenty—began to chase each other round and round the stretchers.

Meantime we drew up to the little procession. The soldier still lay with his arms crossed as though warding off a blow. The soldiers on the stretchers, of course, were dead, killed the night before in the front trenches, and now under cover of the twilight haze, a mixture of purple vapors and cannon smoke, their four fellows were taking the bodies to one of the new Champagne cemeteries at the rear. Lifting the torn cap from the face of the soldier with the crossed arms, some one asked in a hushed voice:

"How did it happen?"

"Stray bullet," the cart pusher responded laconically. "Whew, it's pretty warm today!"

The stiff armed soldier's death had been instantaneous. He suffered as he had fallen, his arms before his face. He had been a very young man. A small mustache flaxen light was on his upper lip. The cap was replaced, and we went our way, leaving the living and dead to go theirs.

Were Not Pitiless.

Now, don't misunderstand. These four men escorting their dead comrades to the graveyard were not unfeeling nor pitiless in the ordinary sense. Taken from refined homes probably where the sight of pain hurt them deeply and from an environment where the presence of the dead was depressing and awesome, they were suddenly plunged into war and slaughter and agony and death until their senses were deadened. Their power of appreciation had been nullified. Dead men no longer awed them, blood no longer sickened them.

Nature, which makes men fight and mutilate and kill each other, had provided its own antidote; otherwise these men instead of "kidding" each other would have been gibbering idiots.

One man—his wife and little girl live in Paris—after serving through the battle of Champagne had to be sent to a special hospital. He was not wounded. His nerves had been shattered, his mental balance upset. His brain had not been able to readjust itself. Nature had let him go on weighing and appreciating all the horror about him.

The other condition is the only possible safeguard against insanity. It is the war god's own anaesthetic.

"PADDLE HIS OWN KANUE."

Father of Boy Who Wanted to Join Marine Corps Reassured by Officer.

Fearing that his runaway son would carry out an often expressed desire to enlist in the United States marine corps, Morris Kanue of Leopold, W. Va., has written to the Pittsburgh recruiting office of the "sea soldiers" as follows:

> I hereby warn you not to employ or hire my son, Anthony Kanue, as a submarine of the navy. He has run away from home, and I think he has gone to Pittsburgh to enlist. He is only seventeen years old, in proof of which I am only thirty-nine myself. If he comes there, whale him within an inch of his life and send him back to me. His father,
> MORRIS KANUE.

Sergeant Michael DeBoo, in charge of the Pittsburgh recruiting office of the United States marine corps, has assured the anxious parent that the boy will not be enlisted should he apply, but that "whaling" him is out of the question and the father should "paddle his own Kanue."

WOUNDED CRY FOR MOTHERS.

Some Keep Up the Pitiful Pleadings Throughout the Night.

A psychological feature at Trieste that is similar to other fronts is that the wounded in the field always cry for their mothers. Officers who have fought on the western front say that the wounded who lay in the woods of Argonne and elsewhere on this front made the battlefield resound all night long with their cries for mother, and they observed particularly that both the Germans and French did the same and that this was particularly true of new troops and in the earlier part of the war.

Officers from the trenches said it was heartrending to hear the pitiable cries after charges, especially at night, those of the Italian soldiers crying "Mamma mia, mamma mia!" often mixing it with sobs and dying lower and lower as unconsciousness approached. But many kept up the call for hours.

The Ordeal

The pie is on the pantry shelf, where it was laid last night;
It bears no dents where certain teeth have nipped a furtive bite.
The cat sleeps on the sofa with a calm, untroubled brow;
She has no fear that any one will dock her whiskers now.
And in the kitchen there are heaps and heaps of kindling wood;
It's getting on toward Christmas time and Tommy's being good.

At half past eight he shuts his book and yawns and shakes his head
And says: "Good night to every one. It's time to go to bed."
And just about the time that dad is starting out for town
You hear him trotting down the stairs to shake the furnace down.
And yesterday his teacher said: "Your boy has changed somehow.
He's taking such an interest in the work he's doing now."

He folds his napkin every day. His clothes are clean and neat.
He never kicks the cans along when he goes down the street.
He still is running with his gang, but up to Friday night
For almost fifteen days on end he hadn't had a fight.
Still, we'll be glad when Christmas comes, for it is all too plain
That Tommy boy is staggering beneath a fearful strain.

MEXICO FACES DAMAGE CLAIMS

Many Millions Will Be Asked by Railroads and Miners.

SMALL INDIVIDUALS ARE HIT

No Record of Losses Inflicted During Revolution on Owners of Private Factories—Railroads Have the Largest Bills—Carranza Government to Be Called on to Pay.

Some of the American interests in Mexico which suffered heavy losses as a result of the revolutions are wondering what course will be pursued in arriving at a settlement of their claims. In a great number of instances it was impossible for the losers to prepare and file an inventory of their losses with the United States consul of their respective district, a requirement which, it is said, the government of General Carranza will demand as a preliminary basis for recognizing claims.

It was recently stated that the Southern Pacific railroad of Mexico alone will present a claim for reimbursement of losses and damages to its property amounting to $12,000,000 gold. It is expected that the minority stockholders of the National Railways of Mexico, most of whom are Americans, will demand full payment for their pro rata of losses to that system and that it will not be less than $15,000,000 gold. The British owners of the Mexico Northwestern railroad, which was out of commission for many months at a stretch on account of revolutionary disturbances and destruction of track, will submit a bill for damages aggregating several millions, it is stated.

Miners Suffered Heavily.

The El Paso Milling company, which is extensively interested in the timber and lumber business in the state of Chihuahua, recently filed a statement showing that its losses since the Madero revolution have totaled $363,000.

While the investments of the American Smelting and Refining company in Mexico aggregate several millions, it is understood that its bill for damages will be comparatively small. Despite the disturbance, the company was able to operate its smelting plants and mines a good part of the time.

Many individual Americans and American companies that own mines, ranches, farms, manufacturing plants, mercantile establishments and a variety of other property in Mexico were made the victims of bands of looters and vandals, and these losses, which aggregate millions, are charged up to the government. The American oil interests in the Tampico territory were losers to the amount of many millions on account of the revolutions. These claims are said to be shipshape, a careful account having been kept of all losses by men who have remained on the ground for that purpose.

It is the small American loser in Mexico who probably will have the most difficulty in getting his claim acted upon. There are scores of farmers and other small property owners who were robbed of practically all their movable effects, including cattle, horses, crops, etc. The nearest American consul was perhaps two or three hundred miles away, too far for filing an itemized account with him. How these small claims will be treated remains to be seen. That a great number of them will be presented for payment is certain.

The Safe Spot.

"So when you had 200 feet start to escape you ran instead directly up to the bear when your gun failed to work? I don't know whether you were a foolhardy hero or a rattled fool," declared the doctor as he sewed up Smith's numerous wounds.

"I was neither," explained Smith. "I used remarkable judgment at a critical moment. You see, the bear was between Jones and myself. I saw Jones was about to fire, so I took shelter at the safest spot—with the bear."

Allied Powers Sign Declaration Which Binds to Joint Peace

London.—A prompt and decisive answer has been given by the Allies to the German peace manoeuvres. All five of the allied Powers, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan and Russia, have signed a treaty in which they engage not to conclude a peace separately. It is published on the eve of the peace debate in the German Reichstag, the object of which seems to be to rally German public opinion to the German government, which doubtless will insist it is prevented from concluding peace by the wickedness of the Allies, who refuse to recognize they are beaten.

Despite admitted blunders, the whole press of England insists that non peace be signed until Germany, crushed, begs for it.

As for Mr. Henry Ford's "Noah's Ark," the attitude of the British press is described by the Weber-Fields phrase, "It is to laugh."

The declaration of the Allies to stand together in all peace questions was signed in London last week by the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, and the French, Italian, Japan and Russian Ambassadors at London. Following is the text:

"The Italian government having decided to accede to the declaration between the British, French and Russian governments, signed in London on September 5, 1914. which declaration was acceded to by the Japanese government on October 19, 1915, the undersigned, duly authorized thereto by their respective governments, hereby declara as follows:

"The British, French, Italian, Japanese and Russian governments mutually engage not to conclude peace separately during the present war.

"The five governments agree that when terms of peace come to be discussed no one of the Allies will demand conditions of peace without previous agreement of each of the other Allies."

Commenting on the agitation in Germany for an end to the war, the Morning Post says editorially:

"Germany can have peace as soon as she likes, but only on the terms of the Allies.

"The right answer to the German peace conspiracy," the editorial continues, "is for the Allies to determine what shall be the terms of peace to be dictated when the right moment comes. In the case of Great Britain representatives from the overseas dominions must be called into council."

The Morning Post's Budapest correspondent dwells on the peace talk there.

"In political circles in Hungary," the correspondent says, "one hears nothing else but an early conclusion of the war. The return of Count Albert Apponyi from Copenhagen is eagerly awaited. He has been taking part in the Red Cross conference and also had an unofficial mission regarding peace possibilities. The Ford peace mission is highly lauded in Hungary, the Pesti-Hirlap saying Mr. Ford is the first American millionaire to invest money in a respectable scheme for humanitarian aims."

The Hungarian Grand Lodge of Masons has voted to begin a ceaseless work in favor of peace. The Feminist Society, at a meeting held in honor of thel ate James Keir Hardie, has issued an appeal for peace on economic grounds, stating "we have had enough of murder and staravation."

Myron Rudd Hurt In Fall From Roof of Elks' Building

Mr. Myron Rudd, whose home is at 210 Academy st., and who is employed by the Palmer-Hope Hardware company, fell from the roof of the main building of the Elks' home this afternoon and was severely injured.

Mr. Rudd was engaged in making repairs to the roof of the building. His feet slipped and lodged against the spanting, but the momentum of his body was too great to be resisted by the tin spanting and he fell to the roof of the one story building in the rear of the home. When picked up he wasu nconscious. A telephone message took to the place of the accident Messrs. Hope and Palmer of the firm for whom he worked and they pressed a taxicab into service, removing Mr. Rudd to his home.

Dr. Fessenden was called to accompany the party and he advised Mr. Rudd's removal to the hospital.

The extent of Mr. Rudd's injuries are not known at press hour.

Second Ford Peace Party to Leave Soon

New York—Not a word by dove or wireless from the Henry Ford peace squad aboard the Scandinavian steamship Oscar II. reached the Ford offices in the Biltmore Hotel yesterday. Mrs. Ford however, received a private message from her husband by wireless.

"We are all well. Everything splendid," it read, so far as she made known its contents tto Walter E. McFadden, of the Ford secretarial staff, who remained in charge of the Ford offices in the Biltmore

Frederick Bruce Davis, the Yale student from San Francisco, who was turned back on the gangplank of the Oscar II, a few seconds before that vessel began her voyage, will be sent to join the Ford party as a passenger aboard the Federick VIII., which will steam for Christiania next Wednesday. Any others of those invited by Mr. Ford to join his party, who decide before that daythat he wishes to follow will be provided with passage on board the Federick VIII., Mr. McFadden said yesterday.

The number of persons with hair combed and not talking to themselves in the corridors of the hotel leading to the Ford party's headquarters again went to 100 per cent yesterday. It had sagged nearly to zero several times in the last hours of preparation for hitching a jitney 'bus to the fate of battling nations to pull them out of the war ditch.

Mrs. Henry Ford and her son, Edsel Ford, remained in New York and spent yesterday in calling on friends in this vicinity.

Jesse Beeman and Martin James, Men Killed by Train

Complete identification of the bodies of the two men who were struck by a southbound N. Y. C. train, Saturday night, were identified beyond a doubt this morning.

From the time that news reached police headquarters until the task had been completed, Chief of Police Dyer and his men were kept busy running out clues that might lead to the identification of the men. At a late hour last evening Captain Norton was informed of the presence of a rig standing in a shed belonging to the Gilbert & Nichols company, and which it was believed might belong to the men. The clue was followed and it led to the home of Jesse Beeman and Martin James at North Hannibal. The men were farmers, and Mrs. Levina Roberts of 710 Erie st., this city, Mr. Beeman's sister, completed the identification.

Mrs. Roberts went to the undertaking rooms of Young & Hill this morning where the bodies were taken Saturday night. She immediately recognized the clothing of one man as belonging to her brother. Mrs. Roberts spent the week-end with her mother at Hannibal and when Beeman and his boarder, James, failed to return from their trip to Fulton she went to the undertaking rooms to investigate. Later her identification was substantiated by several persons who were acquainted with the men and who had seen them in the city on Saturday.

Beeman owned a farm in North Hannibal and James boarded with him.

The men drove to this city Saturday and the rig they came here in was left in a shed at the Gilbert & Nichols mill, which is usually crowded with teams each Saturday night.

The first information to reach the police department that an accident had occurred came when the 10:45 train reached Cayuga st. station. A boy standing at the station saw the body of a man clinging to the locomotive pilot, and City Hall was notified immediately. When Chief Dyer arrived at the station he was told of the finding of a man's body on the railroad tracks near the E-Z Opener Bag company plant. Coroner Cusack was notified and the investigation began. Hundreds of persons viewed the bodies yesterday, but the badly mutiliated faces made identification impossible of accomplishment.

Martin James, who was about 40 years old, has a sister, Mrs. Bowes, living near the scene of the accident.

Beeman is survived by a wife, sister and mother, who is Mrs. Lottie Beeman of North Hannibal. He was about 22 years old. His funeral will occur at Fairdale cemetery tomorrow. William James, father of Martin James, lives at Hannibal.

ORGANIZING THE FARM BUSINESS

It is a tremendous project which the National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits has fathered—nothing less than the organization of all the farmers of the country into co-operative societies dealing with every farm product. No country in the world today has anything just like it in operation. Perhaps the farmers' unions of Germany, with their intricate semi-official organization, come nearest to it. If it is to be worked out, America will have to be the pioneer.

Whether anything remotely approching the ideal expressed by the conference can be achieved in this generation, the scheme is well worth working at. The benefits realized for the farmers who have formed associations for the co-operative marketing of apples, grapes, citrus fruits and the like in various parts of the country are considerable, and there are also distinct advantages for consumers growing out of such organizations, notably the fact that the organization guarantees the grade of the output and keeps it up to standard. Grain growers in the West and Northwest who have combined to pool their crop have found it vastly to their advantage. It has been estimated that the farmer of this state receives about 40 cents of each dollar paid for the produce he sells; the rest goes to various middlemen and transportation companies. That is unwholesome for him and the community.

Cooperation on the big scale proposed would far outrun the scope or possibilities of any of the local organizations this country is becoming familiar with. Its advantages might be correspondingly great. There is no business so unsystematized, so lacking in standards, in information, in accurate knowledge, as agriculture, despite the splendid work of agricultural schools and colleges, experiment stations, state and Federal departments. The farmers have trouble in buying supplies, in getting credits, in finding markets. For all this the consumers pay. Fruit rots on the ground fifty miles from New York, while the poor of the city are unable to pay the prices asked for what finds its way into the markets here. In the kind of co operative societies proposed by the National Conference, transmitting to members information about supply and demand, prices and the like through educational centers, spreading information about the buying of supplies and the shipping of goods, serving as clearing houses for individual farmers, there lies the hope of better and more stable conditions for the men who grow the produce and for the people who eat it.

The country which has seen the steel industry reach its present estate ought to be ashamed that the farms, with their untold present wealth and incalculable possibilities, are, save in individual cases, not greatly beyond the infancy of the business.—N. Y. Tribune.

AMERICAN SCHOOLBOOKS "MADE IN JAPAN"

American schoolbooks are being printed in Japan and sent to this country at prices far below the cost of production here. Japanese compositors earn about 15 cents a day, and pressmen and binders are paid in the same proportion. This is about one-twentieth the wages paid in similar employments in the United States.

Paper can be made in Japan for less than one-half the American cost of production. A world tourist, lately returned from the Far East, found that American schoolbooks, for the use of American boys and girls, were being reproduced in Japan and exported to the United States at 7 cents apiece. The American wholesale price for the same book is 33½ cents. School books are admitted free of duty under our present Free-Trade Tariff. rPevious to October 3, 1913, they were dutiable. We wonder what American publishers, American printers, pressmen, bookbinders and paper makers think of schoolbooks for American children "made in Japan." One would conclude that there would be a unanimous vote for Protection candidates in next year's elections cast by the printing, publishing and paper making trades, employers and employes alike.—The Economist.

"THE GOOD FELLOW"

A somewhat hazy conception of some men who figure as the political leaders of a community is full of appreciation for them, because it describes the men as "good fellows." The Evening Times does not profess to know exactly the origin of the term "good fellow," but in its application to the man who goes about stirring up strife that he may attain his selfish ends, we do not like it. The "good fellow" in politics is not always connected with goodness. He is the hale, hearty fellow-well-met, with one face for one thing and another face for another; the man who takes his feet from one place to enter the abode of schemers; the man who has a smirk and a smile and a ringing welcome for the illiterate voter, and a meek "YES" for the men who occupy responsible positions higher up and enjoy the confidence and respect of decent people. As a rule you will find the "good fellow" lacking in backbone. He smiles upon one thing and blinks at another. He is without moral code. HE PRETENDS TO BE WITH YOU AND FOR YOU, AND ONE CHARACTER, BUT IN REALITY AND ULTIMATELY AGAINST YO[illegible] —AND, ANOTHER CHARACTER. HE IS THE ESCENC[illegible] AND THE CONSUMMATION OF HYPOCRICY OF T[illegible] COMMUNITY.

The Evening Times hates to think of a man in this comm[illegible] in this fashion; we would like to believe all men are excellent me[illegible] that they are the choice of the finest people. But this city has s[illegible] a man, and to describe him in other language than we have u[illegible] would confirm in the minds of his misguided adherents an errone[illegible] conception of what is meant by "the good fellow."

One hundred dollars of real [illegible] in a reliable savings bank is worth one thousand dollars of "p[illegible] profits" in a patent that may make millions.—Silent Partner.

CAPTAINS BOY-ED AND VON PAPEN

"If, as stated in some of this morning's dispatches, the United States government's demand for the recall of Captains Boy-Ed and Von Papen, has taken Washington by surprise, it is hard to see why this should have been the case. Matters have been tending that way for a long time.

Naturally the incident suggests some comparison with the retirement of Dr. Dumba. But a request for the withdrawal of two attaches has by no means the international significance of a demand for the recall of an ambassador, and, contrary to certain of the newspaper opinions expressed this morning, THE TIMES does not believe the affair will cause any serious complication with Germany.

Whatever may have been the innerdness of the actions of Capt. Von Papen and Capt. Boy-Ed, it has been apparent for a considerable while that their usefulness in the capacities in which they have been serv[illegible] Washington, was at an end. [illegible] part of the business of sub[illegible] of embassies to the United S[illegible] make themselves acceptable [illegible] public and our government [illegible] as their own. We think [illegible] will take this obvious and [illegible] view of the business.

After the gravity of the f[illegible] is through which the coun[illegible] cessfully been conducted [illegible] ident and the Department [illegible] is sheer alarmism to get [illegible] the demand for the reti[illegible] couple of attaches. Thou[illegible] and Von Papen go, Ambas[illegible] Bernstorff remains, and [illegible] storff has, take it all in a[illegible] valuable factor in preser[illegible] ble relations between [illegible] States and Germany.—Bu[illegible]

TO EXPLAIN TH[illegible]

The Washington Chapter of the American Institute of Banking is to launch a campaign of thrift designed to interest school children. When "savings" are referred to the average child has a vision of money being piled up in a larger and more widely used receptacle, which serves about the same purpose as does his penny bank. By the same process of reasoning the school child, and even some grownups, seem to regard wealthy men as those with large stacks of gold. The average person's ideas on the point are strangely rudimentary.

The idea of the bankers is to show the boy that the money he saves is loaned to a manufacturer or merchant that it is a part of the Capital upon which business is done which helps his city and frequently his own family. If school boys can be trained to save and to learn the rudiments of business and banking before they are to take on the responsibility as men, a great public service will be performed.—Watertown Standard.

The Geese Were Ducks.

Some geese had strayed on the railway in Yorkshire and were observed by a traveler, who, fearing that they might be run over, said to one of the porters on the platform:

"Who owns the geese, my man?"

"Them's Duck's," the porter replied.

Again the question was asked, with the same reply. Somewhat annoyed, the traveler called the station master and told him the story, stating that he full well knew the difference between geese and ducks.

The station master laughingly replied: "The man is quite right. Those geese are Duck's. They belong to Mr. John Duck, the farmer."—London Tit-Bits.

Christmas is comin'! I hear it a-hummin'
Up thru ther chimbly place outer ther flue!
Turkeys are smellin' it; old hens are tellin' it;
Every one's feelin' it plumb thru an' thru!

Scour up ther pewter an' copper an' brass.
Fetch out ther kittle with porcelain linin'
An' pick up ther quinces fer turn inter sass.

Look up ther Christmas green, hang up ther holly;

SEVEN YEARS TO SERVE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

One day in June, 1860, I was ordered by a circuit judge to stand up and hear my sentence, and when I sat down again it was with the knowledge that I had seven years to serve in prison. The crime? Well, let that go. I was only twenty-three years old then, and a young man is more easily led off than an old one.

I expected from seven to ten years. I made up my mind to obey carefully every rule and regulation of the prison. No "good time" was allowed in those days, but if I conducted myself to the satisfaction of the warden for five years he would be quite willing to ask the governor to shorten my sentence. I had not been in prison more than an hour, however, when I made a change in my program. Such a loneliness came over me—I felt such a horror at being shut out from the world—that I determined to escape at the first opportunity.

I was a fine machinist, and after awhile I was placed in charge of all the machinery in the prison—that is, I [illegible]

[illegible] came creeping along to the [illegible] cells at odd times during the night, and I should certainly have been caught. It got so at last that I couldn't work in the tunnel over fifteen minutes before the want of air drove me out, and along toward the end my health failed me and I lost strength. I dug under the stones and upward about a foot on either side and then I was sick for five weeks. Before I got to work again June had come, and it was a dark and rainy night on the 22d of that month that I took a farewell leave of my cell and crawled into my tunnel. I had three or four feet of earth to dig away, and I was almost perishing for want of air as I got to the crust.

It was about half past 12 when I crawled out of the tunnel into the storm and luckily no one was abroad to catch sight of me.

I lost no time in getting away from the neighborhood of the prison, and long before my cell was unlocked in the morning I was safe with friends. Yes, I was hunted and a reward was offered for my capture, but they never got me.

"Have you been good boys?"

Silence.

"Have you been good boys?"

"No, papa. I called grandma a bad word," said the five-year-old, turning scarlet.

"Is it possible? What did you call your grandma?"

"I called her a human being."

The father, with a mighty effort, maintained his gravity and closed the scene decorously. "I must forgive you for once, but remember if you ever call your grandmother a human being again I shall have to spank you."—London Telegraph.

London's Windmill.

New Zealand, we are informed, now boasts only a single windmill. In this respect London is equal with the Antipodes. On Brixton hill, just by the waterworks and only a few yards from the main road, stands an old mill intact with the exception of the sails, and still in use, though now electricity takes the place of wind as motive power.

New Skirt With Hip Yoke and Pockets

Women of fashion are showing enthusiasm over the delightfully smart skirts that continue to appear in unbroken succession in the world of fashion. One of the newest effects is the hip-yoke, with pointed pockets at the side, used on five-gored models such as is shown here. The skirt closes at the center-back, and the yoke is capable of charming variation, especially as regards the finish of its lower edge. In medium size the skirt requires [illegible] yards 54-inch material, with [illegible] yard less if the hip yoke is omitted.

In cutting out the skirt mistakes may be avoided by closely following the cutting guide. It will be noticed that the front gore is laid on the lengthwise fold of the material, just to the right of the back gore, which is on a lengthwise thread. The side gore is placed next to the back gore, the upper edges almost meeting, and in the space created by sloping the side gore the pocket is laid on a lengthwise thread. The yoke, which is placed to the extreme right of the goods, is laid on a lengthwise fold.

If the home dressmaker prefers a deep yoke with rounded lower edge, cut off the lower edge on small "o" perforations. The short yoke is obtained by cutting off the lower edge of the pattern on double "oo" perforations.

This is a type of skirt that will look well at all times. As a part of a three-piece suit it is stylish and as a separate model nothing more chic could be desired. The ingenious woman readily sees the possibilities offered for trimming the skirt. A band of fur may finish the lower edge, or deep folds of velvet may be stitched above the hem. A braid trimming is also effective.

Potato Yeast.

Potato yeast is made with less trouble than other kinds, the bread made with it keeps moist longer, and there is no danger of injuring the flavor by using too much. One pint of potato yeast, one-half pint (one teacupful) of hop yeast or a yeast cake is equal in strength. Potato yeast will keep for several weeks in a cold place, but either extreme heat or freezing will kill the germ. Never add soda to yeast. If it becomes sour it will do to start fresh yeast, but will never make good bread. Always stir yeast well before using. To four good sized potatoes peeled, boiled and mashed fine, add four tablespoonfuls of white sugar, one of ground ginger, one of salt and two cupfuls of flour (the flour and other dry ingredients should be well mixed together first, then thoroughly incorporated with the potato); pour over one pint of boiling hot potato water and beat until smooth. After it has cooled to only blood heat add one cupful of good yeast or one yeast cake dissolved in a cupful of warm water and set away to rise. When light, cover and put in a cold place.

Potato Pasty.

[illegible] onion or sweet peppers. Add enough water to make gravy and a bit of butter if the meat is not fat. [illegible] gether one large cupful of mashed potato, one cupful of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of shortening, two cupfuls flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls baking powder until it can be rolled into a thick sheet (the softer the better). Spread over the meat like a pie crust. Bake in a moderate oven till a golden brown.

Ham En Casserole.

Select a slice of ham about two inches thick, dredge with flour and saute brown in its own fat. Brown two sliced onions in this fat, also a carrot scraped and sliced. Place the ham in the casserole, cover with the vegetables, add one turnip pared and cut into small cubes. Add half a teaspoonful of pepper, then pour on a cupful of boiling water, cover and cook for three hours in a moderate oven. Half an hour before the cooking is finished add a cupful of strained tomatoes.

Mock Cream Pie.

One cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, yolks of two eggs, one pint of hot milk, pinch of salt, one teaspoonful of butter. Beat the yolks of the eggs, add the sugar and cornstarch (well mixed), stir in the hot milk slowly and add the salt and butter. Turn into a crust already baked. Grate nutmeg on the top. Bake till firm. Cover with meringue and brown.

Care of the Complexion.

Face masks are anything but helpful to the complexion. They create the evils they are supposed to cure and which beauty specialists endeavor so heroically to combat. The pores become constricted, and the poisonous deposits are shut in when they should come away freely. All heavy pastes are bad.

Escaloped Potatoes.

Peel and slice raw potatoes thin. Butter, salt, pepper, sprinkle with flour, then another layer of potatoes, and so on until the pan is filled. Just before putting into the oven fill the dish with cream or milk.

Whalebone Renewed.

Bent whalebones can be straightened by soaking them in boiling water for a few moments and then ironing them straight.

In the Wake of Christmas

An aftermath of Christmas which people would fain ignore is the necessity of writing notes of thanks to all who have sent gifts. Just why it should be such a task to spare a few minutes in fulfilling an act of courtesy in return for a favor it is difficult to say, but probably it is the number of such notes to be written which terrifies the would-be polite.

To children the joys of Christmas are absolutely dulled by the prospect of [illegible] to [illegible] of town relatives and friends, and one small girl used to devote the entire day on New Year's to this gigantic task, for she invariably enumerated the entire list of the presents she had received in every letter she wrote. Her epistles used to read somewhat as follows:

Dear Aunt Jane—I thank you very much for the beautiful gift you so kindly sent me. I received also eight books, three school companions, a [illegible] breastpin, a box of candy, a gold pencil, two pictures and a paint box. Thanking you again for the doll, I am your loving niece.

With slight variations this note was sent to many people every year before the writer grew old enough to know that other people were not so interested in her affairs as she was herself, and as her years increased her discretion grew until, for her own sake, she began to shorten her notes of thanks down to—

Dear Aunt Jane—Your lovely gift received. Accept my thanks. With much love, from your affectionate niece.

It is to be feared that nowadays people are as remiss about acknowledging gifts as they are in answering invitations, about which there is more than a crying need for reform. It is still worse to delay writing a few words in return for a gift which has cost the sender some trouble and thought. Such should be answered verbally or by a letter at the earliest opportunity.

"But, oh, it is hard to write when one has to give thanks for some crazy thing one does not want!" cries the modern miss. "I don't mind thanking people for what I did like, but I can't be hypocritical." And forthwith she sits down at the telephone with a list in her hand and calls up in turn all those of her friends and relatives who have telephones and who have sent her presents.

This is a labor saving device which saves some note paper and stamps, but which does not really save much time. The telephone may have put letter writing out of fashion, but it never was intended to dispense with polite usages in society.

So, unlike the little girl previously quoted, do not postpone your notes of thanks for a New Year's task. Begin [illegible] with a clean slate as far [illegible] are concerned as well as in other matters.

These French Hats.

Tall, square crowns are to the fore, and the material is panne velvet or silk beaver, which, of course, adds much to the smart effect. Beaded flowers are tucked away in small hats composed entirely of fur. Flowers of feathers are so cleverly made that they defy any one versed in this business to tell of what material they are fashioned. Feathers, too, as well as wings and ribbon, are to play a prominent part in the trimming of the hats for winter. Coque heads are considered smart and a change from the popular owl's head. The only case when crowns are low is when the sailor's brim is wide, as many brims are. Otherwise it is safe to say that all crowns are high and the higher the smarter. The return of the ostrich feather means that the picture hat will be a thing of beauty. The beret, too, is still to remain in all its chic adaptations.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Hard Wax in the Ears.

Impacted cerumen in the ears interferes with hearing. Some cases of deafness are due wholly to the external auditory canal being stuck up with hardened cerumen, and after this has been removed the hearing is restored. Where it is not convenient or possible to call upon a physician to have the wax taken out of the canal some one at home may give the necessary treatment, which is quite simple. Buy an ounce of glycerin and a medicine dropper. At bedtime drop five drops of the glycerin in the ear when lying down, with the afflicted ear uppermost. After dropping in the glycerin lie still in the same position for ten minutes. Then treat the other ear in the same manner if it needs attention. Continue this treatment for three consecutive nights. The morning of the fourth day syringe out the affected ear or ears (use a soft rubber ear syringe) with warm water, or [illegible], in which one teaspoonful of phenol sodique has been stirred. This will bring away the wax, which has been softened and dislodged by the glycerin applications.

ORGANIZING THE FARM BUSINESS

It is a tremendous project which the National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits has fathered—nothing less than the organization of all the farmers of the country into co-operative societies dealing with every farm product. No country in the world today has anything just like it in operation. Perhaps the farmers' unions of Germany, with their intricate semi-official organization, come nearest to it. If it is to be worked out, America will have to be the pioneer.

Whether anything remotely approching the ideal expressed by the conference can be achieved in this generation, the scheme is well worth working at. The benefits realized for the farmers who have formed associations for the co-operative marketing of apples, grapes, citrus fruits and the like in various parts of the country are considerable, and there are also distinct advantages for consumers growing out of such organizations, notably the fact that the organization guarantees the grade of the output and keeps it up to standard. Grain growers in the West and Northwest who have combined to pool their crop have found it vastly to their advantage. It has been estimated that the farmer of this state receives about 40 cents of each dollar paid for the produce he sells; the rest goes to various middlemen and transportation companies. That is unwholesome for him and the community.

Cooperation on the big scale proposed would far outrun the scope or possibilities of any of the local organizations this country is becoming familiar with. Its advantages might be correspondingly great. There is no business so unsystematized, so lacking in standards, in information, in accurate knowledge, as agriculture, despite the splendid work of agricultural schools and colleges, experiment stations, state and Federal departments. The farmers have trouble in buying supplies, in getting credits, in finding markets. For all this the consumers pay. Fruit rots on the ground fifty miles from New York, while the poor of the city are unable to pay the prices asked for what finds its way into the markets here. In the kind of co operative societies proposed by the National Conference, transmitting to members information about supply and demand, prices and the like through educational centers, spreading information about the buying of supplies and the shipping of goods, serving as clearing houses for individual farmers, there lies the hope of better and more stable conditions for the men who grow thep roduce and for the people who eat it.

The country which has seen the steel industry reach its present estate ought to be ashamed that the farms, with their untold present wealth and incalculable possibilities, are, save in individual cases, not greatly beyond the infancy of the business.—N. Y. Tribune.

AMERICAN SCHOOLBOOKS "MADE IN JAPAN"

American schoolbooks are being printed in Japan and sent to this country at prices far below the cost of production here. Japanese compositors earn about 15 cents a day, and pressmen and binders are paid in the same proportion. This is about one-twentieth the wages paid in similar employments in the United States. Paper can be made in Japan for less than one-half the American cost of production. A world tourist, lately returned from the Far East, found that American schoolbooks, for the use of American boys and girls, were being reproduced in Japan and exported to the United States at 7 cents apiece. The American wholesale price for the same book is 33½ cents. School books are admitted free of duty under our present Free-Trade Tariff. rPevious to October 3, 1913, they were dutiable. We wonder what American publishers, American printers, pressmen, bookbinders and paper makers think of schoolbooks for American children "made in Japan." One would conclude that there would be a unanimous vote for Protection candidates in next year's elections cast by the printing, publishing and paper making trades, employers and employes alike.—The Economist.

"THE GOOD FELLOW"

A somewhat hazy conception of some men who figure as the political leaders of a community is full of appreciation for them, because it describes the men as "good fellows." The Evening Times does not profess to know exactly the origin of the term "good fellow," but in its application to the man who goes about stirring up strife that he may attain his selfish ends, we do not like it. The "good fellow" in politics is not always connected with goodness. He is the hale, hearty fellow-well-met, with one face for one thing and another face for another; the man who takes his feet from one place to enter the abode of schemers; the man who has a smirk and a smile and a ringing welcome for the illiterate voter, and a meek "YES" for the men who occupy responsible positions higher up and enjoy the confidence and respect of decent people. As a rule you will find the "good fellow" lacking in backbone. He smiles upon one thing and blinks at another. He is without moral code. HE PRETENDS TO BE WITH YOU AND FOR YOU, AND ONE CHARACTER, BUT IN REALITY AND ULTIMATELY AGAINST YOU—AND, ANOTHER CHARACTER. HE IS THE ESCENCE AND THE CONSUMMATION OF HYPOCRICY OF THE COMMUNITY.

The Evening Times hates to think of a man in this community in this fashion; we would like to believe all men are excellent men—that they are the choice of the finest people. But this city has such a man, and to describe him in other language than we have used would confirm in the minds of his misguided adherents an erroneous conception of what is meant by "the good fellow."

City officials complain of no funds and that economy is practiced in every department, yet one fails to see the advisability and necessity of allowing awnings to remain exposed to winter's storm and sunshine.

PERHAPS PROFITS

How many men do you know who have tried to make a few hundred make them rich? The man with a small income must let his contentment of mind make up for his lack of a lot of money, and all of the entangling alliances that go with quick riches.

When you know your savings are secure, you have a considerable sum to call. When you have a fortune on the wheel of chance, or in an unsound institution, you may be more than poor; you may be piling up the appearances of prosperity, without any foundation under you when the crash comes. One hundred dollars of real money in a reliable savings bank is worth one thousand dollars of "perhaps profits" in a patent that may make millions.—Silent Partner.

CAPTAINS BOY-ED AND VON PAPEN

If, as stated in some of this morning's dispatches, the United States government's demand for the recall of Captains Boy-Ed and Von Papen, has taken Washington by surprise, it is hard to see why this should have been the case. Matters have been tending that way for a long time.

Naturally the incident suggests some comparison with the retirement of Dr. Dumba. But a request for the withdrawal of two attaches has by no means the international significance of a demand for the recall of an ambassador, and, contrary to certain of the newspaper opinions expressed this morning, THE TIMES does not believe the affair will cause any serious complication with Germany.

Whatever may have been the inwardness of the actions of Capt. Von Papen and Capt. Boy-Ed, it has been apparent for a considerable while that their usefulness in the capacities in which they have been serving in Washington, was at an end. It is a part of the business of sub-officials of embassies to the United States, to make themselves acceptable to our public and our government, as well as their own. We think Germany will take this obvious and reasonable view of the business.

After theg ravity of the foreign crisis is through which the country has successfully been conducted by the President and the Department of State, it is sheer alarmism to get worried over the demand for the retirement of a couple of attaches. Though Boy-Ed and Von Papen go, Ambassador Von Bernstorff remains, and Von Bernstorff has, take it all in all, proven a valuable factor in preserving amicable relations between the United States and Germany.—Buffalo Times.

TO EXPLAIN THRIFT

The Washington Chapter of the American Institute of Banking is to launch a campaign of thrift designed to interest school children. When "savings" are referred to the average child has a vision of money being piled up in a larger and more widely-used receptacle, which serves about the same purpose as does his penny bank. By the same process of reasoning the school child, and even some grown-ups, seem to regard wealthy men as those with large stacks of gold. The average person's ideas on the point are strangely rudimentary.

The idea of the bankers is to show the boy that the money he saves is loaned to a manufacturer or merchant that it is a part of the Capital upon which business is done which helps his city and frequently his own family. If school boys can be trained to save and to learn the rudiments of business and banking before they are to take on the responsibility as men, a great public service will be performed.—Watertown Standard.

LETTER SAID TO BE WRITTEN BY CHRIST

The following is sent in by a Times reader with an appeal that it be printed. Far be it from us to do anything which may add to our own or any other persons ill fortunes [illegible] both of us may view [illegible] equanimity, the [illegible] given space as [illegible]. The clipping, just as we received it, reads as follows:

The original letter, said to have been written by Christ, was found in the early days of Christianity by a child.

There is a promise that whoever may have a copy of this letter in their possession will prosper and be followed by good fortune, if they publish it, but if they do not heed the command, bad luck and misfortune will follow them until it is made public.

From the hands of the child who found it the letter is said to have passed into the possession of a convert to the Christian faith. For some reason this convert failed to have the letter published. He kept it, however, as a sacred memento of Christ and it passed on to his eldest son and on down through many generations, but never was published.

The tradition being that when it finally was given publicity it had been in this one family for more than a thousand years.

During all this period of time, the story goes, the family suffered repeated and continuous misfortune.

Discouraged members of the family migrated to countries other than where the letter was found, which was evidently Palestine, and finally one of them came to America, bringing the fateful letter with him.

The family having possession of it settled in Virginia, still keeping the fact of the letter a secret.

Descendants of the family moved farther south, still followed by misfortune.

Finally, as the last member of the family lay on her death bed she called a neighbor woman named Thompson and gave the letter to her, relating its history.

The Thompson woman's attempts to have it published were rewarded when it appeared in the Rome (Ga.) Tribune, October 31,1891. From there it was reprinted in the Dalton (Ga.) Citizen and Mrs. Fannie Wortman of Marion, Ind., clipped it from the paper, keeping it in her possession for many years. Recently Mrs. Wortman had it republished in a Marion paper, stating that during the time she had retained the letter in her possession without having it published, or attempting to, she has had a species of bad luck which she attributes to her failure to secure publicity for the letter.

It is my prayer that this be published.

Here is the letter:

"Whosoever work on the Sabbath day shall be cursed. I command you to go to church and keep holy the Lord's day without any manner of work. You shall not idle or misspend your time in bedecking yourselves in superfluities of costly apparel and vain dressing, for I have ordered it a day of rest. I will have that day kept holy that your sins may be forgiven you.

"You will not break by commandments, but observe and keep them, they being written by my hand and spoken from my mouth.

"You will not only go to church yourself, but also your man servant and maid servant. Observe my words and learn my commandments. You shall finish your work every Saturday at 6 o'clock in the afternoon, at which hour the preparation for the Sabbath begins. I advise you to fast five Fridays in the year, beginning on Good Friday and continuing the Fridays following, in remembrance of the five blood wounds I received for you and mankind.

"You shall love one another, and cause them that are not baptized to come to church and receive the holy sacrament—that is to say baptism, and then the supper of the Lord, and be made a member thereof, and in so doing I will give you long life and many blessings. Your land shall be replenished and bring forth abundance, and I will comfort you in the greatest tempation, and surely he that doeth to the contrary shall be cursed.

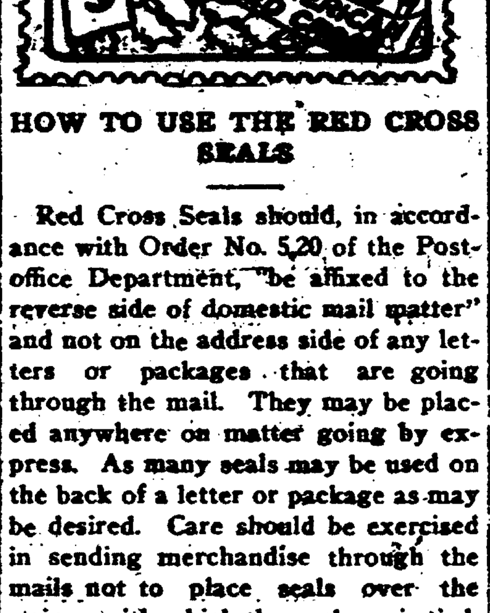
"I will also send hardness of heart on them, and especially on hardened and impenitent unbelievers. He that hath given to the poor shall, find it probable.

Sabbath day injunction:

"Remember to keep holy the Sabbath day. For the seventh day I have taken as a resting day to myself.

"And he that hath a copy of this letter from my own mouth and keepeth it, without publishing it to others, shall not prosper, but he that publisheth it to others shall be blessed by me, and if their sins be as many as the stars at night, and if they truly believe they shall be pardoned, and they that believe not this writing and my commandments will have my plague upon you, and you will be consumed with your children, goods, cattle, and all other worldly enjoyments that I have given pou. Do but once think or what I have suffered for you; if you do, it will be well for you in this world and in the world which is to come.

"Whosoever shall have a copy of this letter and keep it in their house, nothing shall hurt them, neither pestilence, lightning, nor thunder, and if any woman be in birth and put her trust in me she shall be delivered of her child. You shall have no more news of me except through the Holy Scripture, until the day of judgment. All goodness and prosperity shall be in the house where a copy of this letter shalf be found. Finished."



HOW TO USE THE RED CROSS SEALS

Red Cross Seals should, in accordance with Order No. 5,20 of the Post-office Department, "be affixed to the reverse side of domestic mail matter" and not on the address side of any letters or packages that are going through the mail. They may be placed anywhere on matter going by express. As many seals may be used on the back of a letter or package as may be desired. Care should be exercised in sending merchandise through the mails not to place seals over the strings with which the package is tied, since this closes the package against inspection and subjects it to first class postage rates. Users of Red Cross Seals are cautioned against indiscriminate use on foreign mail. Red Cross Seals in normal times may be used on the reverse side of mail matter sent to Austria, Germany, Great Britain and most of the British colonies, except India and Austrialia, Guatemala, Uruguay and Portugal refuse to admit mail bearing nonpostage stamps. Certain European countries will return to the sender any mail bearing Red Cross Seals on the address side. Mail addressed to any of the belligerent countries in Europe should not bear Red Cross Seals on the address side. Red Cross Seals may be used on the face of checks, bills, on legal documents and on any commercial paper. The Christmas Seals are not good for postage. They will not carry any mail matter, but any kind of mail matter will carry them.

TO PAY $48,490,000 IN TAXES

Assessment of the Reichsbank Under Terms of New Law.

The computation is made by the Overseas News agency of Berlin that the assessment for 1915 on the Reichsbank under the new law taxing war profits will amount to 193,960,000 marks ($48,490,000). Under the terms of the law the tax will not be collected during the war.

The law applies to the Reichsbank as follows: It must pay 100,000,000 marks saved in 1915 by the abolition of the former tax on circulating notes. It must pay 14,300,000 marks on extra profits in 1914 and 33,800,000 marks on war profits in 1915. The regular taxes, amounting to 46,060,000 marks, bring the total to 193,960,000 marks.

The Geese Were Ducks.

Some geese had strayed on the railway in Yorkshire and were observed by a traveler, who, fearing that they might be run over, said to one of the porters on the platform:

"Who owns the geese, my man?"

"Them's Duck's," the porter replied.

Again the question was asked, with the same reply. Somewhat annoyed, the traveler called the station master and told him the story, stating that he full well knew the difference between geese and ducks.

The station master laughingly replied: "The man is quite right. Those geese are Duck's. They belong to Mr. John Duck, the farmer."—London Tit-Bits.

Christmas Coming

Christmas is comin'! I hear it a-hummin'
Up thru ther chimbly place outer ther flue!
Turkeys are smellin' it; old hens are tellin' it;
Every one's feelin' it plumb thru an' thru!

Rub up ther andirons, keep 'em a-shinin';
Scour up ther pewter an' copper an' brass.
Fetch out ther kittle with porcelain linin'
An' pick up ther quinces ter turn inter sass.

Look up ther Christmas green, hang up ther holly;
Nail up ther mistletoe over ther door.
Every one's goin' ter perk up an' be jolly,
Jest as we allus hev done heretofore.

'Tain't no use thinkin' of trouble an' sorrer;
Things that's gone by ain't no place in our hearts.
Christmas is comin' a week from termorrer,
An' right from this minnit ther frolickin' starts!

Eye Strain and the Movies.

The common practice of flashing written letters and printed matter on and off the screen with almost lightning rapidity is condemned as putting the greatest strain of all upon the eyes. The audience, in its eagerness to get an intelligent understanding of the action, makes a strong effort to read the lines, but it is given no opportunity to read all of them in many instances and is kept on a strain in a strenuous effort to grasp them at a fleeting glance.

Another effect of watching moving pictures worth mentioning in this connection, although it is not injurious to the eyes, is a pronounced hypnotic experience that many people have, particularly when the performance is prolonged to more than one or two hours and is not of a very exciting nature. The drowsiness that comes over some of the audience is so complete as to induce loss of consciousness in sleep for short periods of time, in spite of all efforts to keep awake, even in well ventilated theaters.

His Maternal Grandma.

A devoted father after a day's absence was met by his two little sons.

"Have you been good boys?"

Silence.

"Have you been good boys?"

"No, papa. I called grandma a bad word," said the five-year-old, turning scarlet.

"Is it possible? What did you call your grandma?"

"I called her a human being."

The father, with a mighty effort, maintained his gravity and closed the scene decorously. "I must forgive you for once, but remember if you ever call your grandmother a human being again I shall have to spank you."—London Telegraph.

London's Windmill.

New Zealand, we are informed, now boasts only a single windmill. In this respect London is equal with the Antipodes. On Brixton hill, just by the waterworks and only a few yards from the main road, stands an old mill intact with the exception of the sails, and still in use, though now electricity takes the place of wind as motive power.

SEVEN YEARS TO SERVE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

One day in June, 1860, I was ordered by a circuit judge to stand up and hear my sentence, and when I sat down again it was with the knowledge that I had seven years to serve in prison. The crime? Well, let that go. I was only twenty-three years old then, and a young man is more easily led off than an old one.

I expected from seven to ten years. I made up my mind to obey carefully every rule and regulation of the prison. No "good time" was allowed in those days, but if I conducted myself to the satisfaction of the warden for five years he would be quite willing to ask the governor to shorten my sentence. I had not been in prison more than an hour, however, when I made a change in my program. Such a loneliness came over me—I felt such a horror at being shut out from the world—that I determined to escape at the first opportunity.

I was a fine machinist, and after awhile I was placed in charge of all the machinery in the prison—that is, I kept everything in repair, and it was an occupation in which I delighted. I had a little shop in the engine room, and I looked after my work so well that I soon had the confidence of the prison officials. The man who ran the big stationary engine was a "free man" or an outsider hired by the month, as was also the fireman. While both treated me kindly and well, they no doubt felt it their duty to watch me and report anything suspicious. My little shop had no door to it, and while working in it I was under the eye of the engineer—that is, if he sat on his chair in the usual place he could see my every movement. My room had a window looking out on the garden of the prison. From the first day I entered the little shop I determined to escape by that window.

The engineer came on duty fifteen minutes before I did and remained fifteen minutes later, while the fireman slept at the prison and was aroused about half past 5 o'clock. I had to leave the shop at 5:55 to march in to supper with my gang. To attempt to leave by daylight would be foolishness, as I would be seen by the guards stationed on the walls. I must have some excuse for lingering in my room until after dark, and I had just planned it when an unforeseen circumstance knocked me out. I was going to disable the donkey engine just before 6 o'clock, knowing that I would be called back to help repair it after supper, when the prison authorities gave the wagon contractor leave to occupy a portion of the garden with his lumber. A great lot of it was hauled in and piled up directly before my window, obliging me to use a lamp to work by and cutting off my chance to escape. I made some cautious inquiries and found that it was all green stuff and might be left there four or five years to season.

It was a bitter disappointment.

The prison had been overcrowded and a new wing was being built. This took thirteen months, and I was one of the men transferred to it. I was put in cell No. 7, which was the last on the left hand side and at the corner of the building. I knew all about this wing before we occupied it. The east wall, which contained the windows, was still in the prison yard, while the north wall ran along a public street. Under the window nearest my cell was piled a lot of wornout machinery and refuse lumber.

I had no sooner entered my cell than I determined to make it the basis of operations.

As the cement was not fully hardened, as I knew, I decided to tunnel out.

That week I spent in raising one of the flagstones in my cell, which was about three feet square, and then started the hole. I went down perpendicularly two feet and then drifted down toward the north wall at a slant so as to strike the foundation. I was, however, greatly troubled to get fresh air down in my tunnel, and the cramped position in which I worked kept me sore and lame. While working at night I had to be in bed regularly every hour as the guard came around and every morning the stone had to be replaced and the crevices filled in with breadcrumbs.

I knocked off work the next week, and it was well I did, as the guard came creeping along to the different cells at odd times during the night, and I should certainly have been caught. It got so at last that I couldn't work in the tunnel over fifteen minutes before the want of air drove me out, and along toward the end my health failed me and I lost strength. I dug under the stones and upward about a foot on either side and then I was sick for five weeks. Before I got to work again June had come, and it was a dark and rainy night on the 22d of that month that I took a farewell leave of my cell and crawled into my tunnel. I had three or four feet of earth to dig away, and I was almost perishing for want of air as I got to the crust.

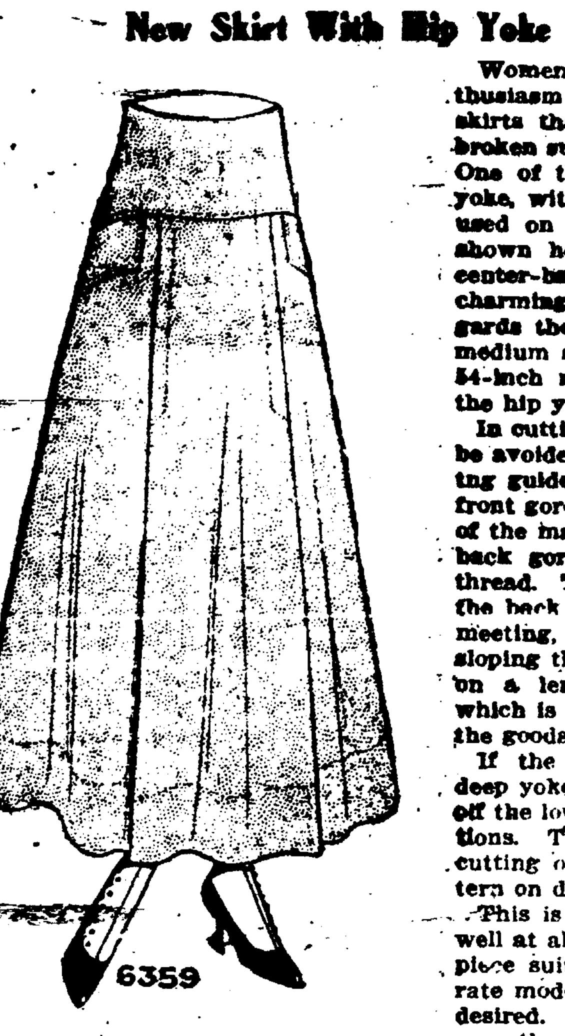
It was about half past 12 when I crawled out of the tunnel into the storm and luckily no one was abroad to catch sight of me.

I lost no time in getting away from the neighborhood of the prison, and long before my cell was unlocked in the morning I was safe with friends. Yes, I was hunted and a reward was offered for my capture, but they never got me.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

New Skirt With Hip Yoke and Pockets.



A five-gored skirt of unusually good design, trimmed with a hip-yoke and pockets, the lower edge of the yoke having a pointed outline.

Women of fashion are showing enthusiasm over the delightfully smart skirts that continue to appear in unbroken succession in the world of dress. One of the newest effects is the hip-yoke, with pointed pockets at the side, used on five-gored models such as is shown here. The skirt closes at the center-back, and the yoke is capable of charming variation, especially as regards the finish of its lower edge. In medium size the skirt requires 3 yards 54-inch material, with ⅝ yard less if the hip yoke is omitted.

In cutting out the skirt mistakes may be avoided by closely studying the cutting guide. It will be noticed that the front gore is laid on the lengthwise fold of the material, just to the right of the back gore, which is on a lengthwise thread. The side gore is placed next to the back gore, the upper edges almost meeting, and in the space created by sloping the side gore the pocket is laid on a lengthwise thread. The yoke, which is placed to the extreme right of the goods, is laid on a lengthwise fold.

If the home dressmaker prefers a deep yoke with rounded lower edge, cut off the lower edge on small "o" perforations. The short yoke is obtained by cutting off the lower edge of the pattern on double "oo" perforations.

This is a type of skirt that will look well at all times. As a part of a three-piece suit it is stylish and as a separate model nothing more chic could be desired. The ingenious woman readily sees the possibilities offered for trimming the skirt. A band of fur may finish the lower edge, or deep folds of velvet may be stitched above the hem. A braid trimming is also effective.

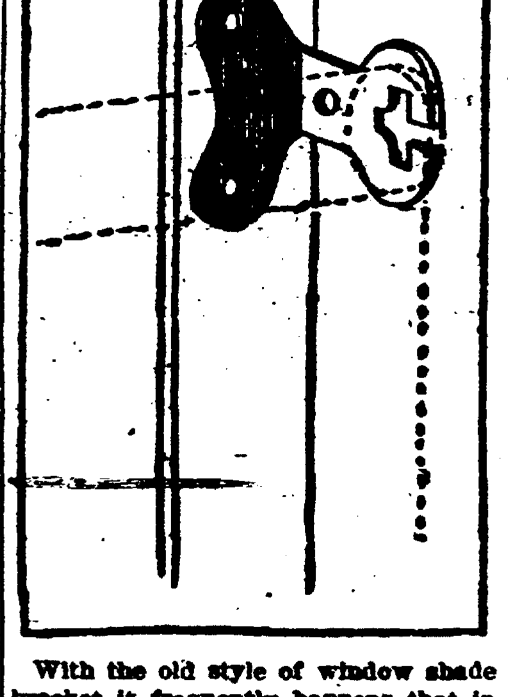
HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Bracket Holds Window Shade Roller Secure.



With the old style of window shade bracket it frequently happens that in the manipulation of the window sash the roller is knocked out of its resting place and falls to the floor, often being seriously damaged as the result of the experience. At the best it is necessary to climb up on a chair and replace the shade and then readjust it. It will be observed from the drawing that the bracket is provided with a novel arrangement of receiving recess with relation to the opening of the bracket and a recess in alignment with the opening, whereby the pintle can be inserted in a predetermined manner, but is incapable of accidentally releasing if the roller is subject to jolts or any other disturbing influence.

Potato Yeast.

Potato yeast is made with less trouble than other kinds, the bread made with it keeps moist longer, and there is no danger of injuring the flavor by using too much. One pint of potato yeast, one-half pint (one teacupful) of hop yeast or a yeast cake is equal in strength. Potato yeast will keep for several weeks in a cold place, but either extreme heat or freezing will kill the germ. Never add soda to yeast. If it becomes sour it will do to start fresh yeast, but will never make good bread. Always stir yeast well before using. To four good sized potatoes peeled, boiled and mashed fine, add four tablespoonfuls of white sugar, one of ground ginger, one of salt and two cupfuls of flour (the flour and other dry ingredients should be well mixed together first, then thoroughly incorporated with the potato); pour over one pint of boiling hot potato water and beat until smooth. After it has cooled to only blood heat add one cupful of good yeast or one yeast cake dissolved in a cupful of warm water and set away to rise. When light, cover and put in a cold place.

Potato Pasty.

Fill a baking pan with any left over meat chopped fine and seasoned with onion or sweet peppers. Add enough water to make gravy and a bit of butter if the meat is not fat. Work together one large cupful of mashed potato, one cupful of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of shortening, two cupfuls flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls baking powder until it can be rolled into a thick sheet (the softer the better). Spread over the meat like a pie crust. Bake in a moderate oven till a golden brown.

Ham En Casserole.

Select a slice of ham about two inches thick, dredge with flour and saute brown in its own fat. Brown two sliced onions in this fat, also a carrot scraped and sliced. Place the ham in the casserole, cover with the vegetables, add one turnip pared and cut into small cubes. Add half a teaspoonful of pepper, then pour on a cupful of boiling water, cover and cook for three hours in a moderate oven. Half an hour before the cooking is finished add a cupful of strained tomatoes.

Mock Cream Pie.

One cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, yolks of two eggs, one pint of hot milk, pinch of salt, one teaspoonful of butter. Beat the yolks of the eggs, add the sugar and cornstarch (well mixed), stir in the hot milk slowly and add the salt and butter. Turn into a crust already baked. Grate nutmeg on the top. Bake till firm. Cover with meringue and brown.

Care of the Complexion.

Face masks are anything but helpful to the complexion. They create the evils they are supposed to cure and which beauty specialists endeavor so heroically to combat. The pores become constricted, and the poisonous deposits are shut in when they should come away freely. All heavy pastes are bad.

Escaloped Potatoes.

Peel and slice raw potatoes thin. Butter, salt, pepper, sprinkle with flour, then another layer of potatoes, and so on until the pan is filled. Just before putting into the oven fill the dish with cream or milk.

Whalebone Renewed.

In the Wake of Christmas

An aftermath of Christmas which people would fain ignore is the necessity of writing notes of thanks to all who have sent gifts. Just why it should be such a task to spare a few minutes in fulfilling an act of courtesy in return for a favor it is difficult to say, but probably it is the number of such notes to be written which terrifies the would-be polite.

To children the joys of Christmas are absolutely dulled by the prospect of dutiful letters to be indited to out of town relatives and friends, and one small girl used to devote the entire day on New Year's to this gigantic task, for she invariably enumerated the entire list of the presents she had received in every letter she wrote. Her epistles used to read somewhat as follows:

Dear Aunt Jane—I thank you very much for the beautiful gift you so kindly sent me. I received also eight books, three school companions, a muff, a breastpin, a box of candy, a gold pencil, two pictures and a paint box. Thanking you again for the doll, I am your loving niece.

With slight variations this note was sent to many people every year before the writer grew old enough to know that other people were not so interested in her affairs as she was herself, and as her years increased her discretion grew until, for her own sake, she began to shorten her notes of thanks down to—

Dear Aunt Jane—Your lovely gift received. Accept my thanks. With much love, from your affectionate niece.

It is to be feared that nowadays people are as remiss about acknowledging gifts as they are in answering invitations, about which there is more than a crying need for reform. It is still worse to delay writing a few words in return for a gift which has cost the sender some trouble and thought. Such should be answered verbally or by a letter at the earliest opportunity.

"But, oh, it is hard to write when one has to give thanks for some crazy thing one does not want!" cries the modern miss. "I don't mind thanking people for what I did like, but I can't be hypocritical." And forthwith she sits down at the telephone with a list in her hand and calls up in turn all those of her friends and relatives who have telephones and who have sent her presents.

This is a labor saving device which saves some note paper and stamps, but which does not really save much time. The telephone may have put letter writing out of fashion, but it never was intended to dispense with polite usages in society.

So, unlike the little girl previously quoted, do not postpone your notes of thanks for a New Year's task. Begin the new year with a clean slate as far as debts of courtesy are concerned, as well as in other matters.

quite evenly if a strong thread is run along the top edge as a ruffle string. A set of six, with one enlarged as a centerpiece, would make an acceptable present.

These French Hats.

Tall, square crowns are to the fore, and the material is panne velvet or silk beaver, which, of course, adds much to the smart effect. Beaded flowers are tucked away in small hats composed entirely of fur. Flowers of feathers are so cleverly made that they defy any one versed in this business to tell of what material they are fashioned. Feathers, too, as well as wings and ribbon, are to play a prominent part in the trimming of the hats for winter. Coque heads are considered smart and a change from the popular owl's head. The only case when crowns are low is when the sailor's brim is wide, as many brims are. Otherwise it is safe to say that all crowns are high and the higher the smarter. The return of the ostrich feather means that the picture hat will be a thing of beauty. The beret, too, is still to remain in all its chic adaptations.

PIONEER IN NEED.

Discoverer of Finlayson River Files Application For Pension.

Seattle.—John Finlayson, aged 103, discoverer of Finlayson river and Finlayson lake, in Yukon territory, has applied to the board of trustees of the Pioneers' home at Sitka, Alaska, for a pension under the Alaska territorial law providing for aged pioneers.

Finlayson prospected and mined gold in California and Oregon until he was sixty-six years old, then went to British Columbia and Yukon territory and explored large areas into which white men had never penetrated.

He retired with what he supposed would be enough money to care for him all his life, but had not expected to attain such a great age, and the years have now exhausted his hoard.

The Only Spot.

"So when you had 200 feet start to escape you ran instead directly up to the bear when your gun failed to work? I don't know whether you were a foolhardy hero or a rattled fool!" declared the doctor as he sewed up Smith's numerous wounds.

"I was neither," explained Smith. "I used remarkable judgment at a critical moment. You see, the bear was between Jones and myself. I saw Jones was about to fire, so I took shelter at the safest spot—with the bear."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Hard Wax In the Ears.

Impacted cerumen in the ears interferes with hearing. Some cases of deafness are due wholly to the external auditory canal being filled up with hardened cerumen, and after this has been removed the hearing is restored. Where it is not convenient or possible to call upon a physician to have the wax taken out of the canal some one at home may give the necessary treatment, which is quite simple. Buy an ounce of glycerin and a medicine dropper. At bedtime drop five drops of the glycerin in the ear when lying down, with the afflicted ear uppermost. After dropping in the glycerin lie still in the same position for ten minutes. Then treat the other ear in the same manner if it needs attention. Continue this treatment for three consecutive nights. The morning of the fourth day syringe out the affected ear or ears (use a soft rubber ear syringe) with warm water, a tumblerful, in which one teaspoonful of phenol sodique has been stirred. This will bring away the wax, which has been softened and dissolved by the glycerin applications.

Mutiny on Board Big Chinese Battle-Cruiser

Shanghai.—The crew of the Chinese cruiser Chao-ho mutinied last night and opened fire on two other war ships and the arsenal. The fire was returned, the engagement lasting for an hour. Several shots fell in the foreign concession.

Apparently the outbreak has been confined to the Chao-ho. The Chinese authorities announce that she will be shelled sunk at daybreak

Conflicting accounts of the nature of the outbreak are currant, and owing to strict measures thaken by the authorities it has been impossible thus far to obtain official information. It appears, however, that at two o'clock yesterday afternoon twenty men set forth from the foreign settlement in a launch and went alongside the Chao-ho, which is lying opposite the Kiang-nan arsenal.

On the arrival of the launch the crew of the Chao-ho mutinied, apparently by prearrangement. At about six o'clock the mutineers opened fire on the arsenal, the cruiser Hai-chi and the gunboat Tung-ching.

The Hai-chi and Tung-ching replied, and there was lively cannonading of light and heavy guns for an hour. At least half a dozen 3-pound shots fell in thef oreign concessions. The city and countryside were thrown into panic.

After the firing ceased the Chao-ho remained at anchor, keeping watch on the other war ships.

The arsenal authorities notified the senior consul of the foreign settlement that the Chao-ho would be shelled and sunk at day break.

Attempts to investigate the outbreak met with only partial success. A correspondent endeavored to reach the arsenal in a launch, but was challenged by the Tung-ching and ordered to turn about. Notwithstandinf immediate compliance with this order, the gunboat opened fire, damaging the launch slightly.

Three subsequent attempts to reach the arsenal by automobile were unavailing. On each occasion the outer pickets were passed; after a strict examination, but the inner guards turned back the automobile at the point of their rifles.

At the time of the last attempt, at two o'clock this morning, there was a heavy outbreak of firing.

London Papers Demand Dispatch of 500,000 Men to Aid Serbians

London.—Though the attitude of Greece still is a subject of solicitude to the Entente Powers, I am informed that the negotiations have reached, in one respect at least, a satisfactory end. This is evidenced by Greece permitting elements of the Serbian army to form a junction with the Anglo-French forces. Further, I am told that, despite all reports to the contrary, the Serbian northern and southern armies, nearly intact, have retired into Albania, where, when they are succored and re-equipped by France and Great Britain, they will strike again.

The newspapers this morning, emphatically indorsing the expeditions to Salonica and Gallipoli, demand that the government shall send at least half a million men to this theatre of war in order to insure the adherence of Roumania to the Entente cause.

Despite the maunderings of the pessimists there is an ineradicable belief that though Serbia is overrun, the Central Powers have dismally failed in the Balkans as well as on the eastern and western fronts. No doubt we are on the eve of tremendous developments. All the military experts, including those who have been the most pessimists, agree that thef orces of the Central Empires are beginning to crumple up, despite their ephemeral triumphs.

The action of Greece is submitting to the Allied demands and permitting the use of Greek soil for Serbian reorganization, while it eliminated one cause of unrest, has not settled other questions. On these matters the negotiations sill drag on at Athens, new hitches seemingly arising as the old one are smoothed out. One day it is reported a settlement has been reached, only to be followed the next by denial or accounts of fresh difficulties confronting the diplomatists.

An Athens desptach says that after the Premier, Mr. Ckouloudis had conferred with the French and British Ministers on Saturday he called a meeting of the Cabinet and then conferred with King Constantine. It is reported in Athens the message says, that the subject under consideration by the Cabinet was af resh proposal made by the Entente Powers in the hope of reaching some definite agreement on all points in controversy.

The people of the allied countries, particularly those of France and Italy, are becoming impatient over the continual delays, and the press is demanding that stern action be taken to demonstrate to King Constantine and his Ministers the determination of the Quadruple Entente to obtain al the assurances demanded.

LABOR SUPPORTS COMMISSION

New York—The State Federation of Labor has pledged itself to support the work of the State Industrial Commission. A meeting of the body was held in New York on Saturday, when indorsement of the commission was embodied in the following resolution:

Whereas, I.t is apparent that an attempt is being made to use the Williamsburg factory tragedy to embarrass and oust the State Industrial Commission, especially the labor members thereof, John Mitchell and James M. Lynch; and,

Whereas, At the Buffalo convention of the State Federation of labor resolutions were adopted thanking the Governor for appointing Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Lynch, and taking the position that the law consolidating the State Labor Department and the Workmen's Compensation Commission should be given an opportunity to demonstrate its ability and effectiveness; therefore, be it,

Resolved, That the Executive Council stands in support of the State Industrial Commission, especially the labor members thereof, and urges the Governor that no action be taken that will in any way embarrass the commission or retard or impede the effective work that the commission is now doing.

The following telegram was sent to Governor Whitman:

"The Executive Council of the New York State Federation of Labor, meeting here today, representing 700,000 organized men and women, adopted resolutions expressing confidence in the State Industrial Commission and opposing any action that in any manner would hamper or impede the commission in its work of consolidating and making effective the New York State Labor Department. The organized wage-earners are suspicious as to the motives behind the demands of those who are at present attacking the commission. We take this position in line with resolutions adopted by our Buffalo convention that the new law should be given a fair trial.

The telegram was signed by the following members of thec ouncil; James P. Holland, president; Edward W. Bates, secretary and treasurer; T. M. Guerin, Charles Haustein, Thomas J. Curtis, George C. King, Emanuel Koveleski, Joseph, A. Mullaney, George T. McGuire, John C. Clark, Joseph Dehan, Harry A. Engle, Nellie Kelly.

Carthage's Great Snake.

The ancients firmly believed in monster serpents of all kinds and of both the land and marine species. During the wars with Carthage a great snake is said to have kept the Roman army from crossing the Bagrados river for several days. The monster swallowed up no less than seventy Roman soldiers during this combat and was not conquered until a hundred stones from as many different catapults were fired upon it all at one time. The monster's skull and skin were preserved and afterward exhibited in one of the Roman temples. The dried skin of the creature was 120 feet in length, according to Pliny.

PREPAREDNESS IN BUSINESS URGED

National Co-operation Campaign Is Now On.

NEED GREATER UNIFORMITY

Colonel Pope, President of the National Association of Manufacturers, Declares Attacks and Hostility Toward Industrial and Business System Retard Development and Growth.

New York.—Presidents of five of the most influential manufacturers' associations in the country, representing industries capitalized approximately at $14,000,000,000 and giving employment to about 6,000,000 workmen, were sponsors at a recent baptism in this city of the national business co-operation campaign.

These captains of industry gathered to discuss the nation's business, present and future, and chiefly to safeguard present industrial conditions which may be threatened when the war ends.

From the same platform in less than three hours the manufacturing industries of the country were dissected and put together again by William H. Barr, president of the National Founders' association; H. H. Rice, president of the National Metal Trades association; Colonel George Pope, president of the National Association of Manufacturers; John P. Wood, president of the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers, and Albert G. Duncan, president of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers.

COLONEL GEORGE POPE.

The prosperity the country is enjoying from big crops and the boom in war orders were gone over thoroughly. Both capital and labor were urged to work in the common interest of the nation's welfare.

"Shortly after the war," Barr said, "by the time the foreign governments can reconstruct their manufacturing industries, the United States will face the greatest competitive struggle in its history.

"We should husband our resources: the people generally should be more thrifty and more economical; we should improve our machinery appliances in our plants.

"Further than that," he continued, "from a purely manufacturing viewpoint, we might assume that the foreign countries may during the early reconstruction period follow their mobilization plan in industry, as they have in arms, which from a production standpoint would mean the lowest possible cost."

Colonel Pope talked earnestly to the manufacturers on "industrial preparedness." He said American industry needs greater uniformity and standardization.

Colonel Pope said American industry requires preparedness in its sphere exactly as in their spheres the army and navy require preparedness. The method and means are different, he asserted, but the underlying principles are the same.

Colonel Pope said that from many quarters there constantly arise misguided, unfair attack and hostility toward industrial and business systems that retard development and growth seriously, and they should be guarded against.

Referring to the attacks made on business through politics, Pope said:

"Politics should mean a fair and frank discussion as to the best ways by which our commonwealth may be advanced and the welfare of our citizens promoted. Would that this were true! Politics, however, often degenerates into a systematic method of attack, arraignment, indictment, charge and accusation.

"Almost there exists at times a war zone in the field of American business. Industry is thus put on the defensive, and this situation cannot continue without disastrous results to those who are sincerely interested in our national industrial progress and who are at heart as patriotic as any group of men in the world."

ROYAL MUMMY HEAD A HOODOO

Widow Blames It For Death of Husband and Son.

IS DONATED TO MUSEUM.

Declares She Believes That Mummy Skull of an Egyptian Queen Worked a Spell Over Her Family—Hopeful That She Can Break This by Giving Head Away.

Pittsburgh.—Because her husband and son have died since the acquisition of the mummy skull of an Egyptian queen nearly 3,500 years old Mrs. Jere Bauman of 406 Neshannock avenue, Newcastle, has donated the head to the Carnagie museum.

Mrs. Bauman says she believes that the mummy worked a spell upon the members of her family, and she is hopeful that she can break this by giving the head away. Her son died four years ago, and her husband died last month.

The skull is that of Queen Hatshepsutt, or Natasu, of the line of Thothmes. It was unearthed by Mr. Bauman in September, 1909, while he and his wife were traveling in Egypt. The head weighs about five pounds and is covered with a brown black cloth, which is glued tight to the flesh. Openings in the cloth show glistening eyes, and it is believed that they are polished agates. The ears and markings of the face show distinctly.

Queen Hatshepsutt, according to Mrs. Bauman, ruled about 1578 B. C. She followed the reign of Amasis, of the eighteenth dynasty, who overthrew the Hyksos, or shepherd kings. Amasis' son Amenophis, or Amenhotep I., became the patron saint of the Theban Necropolis, Thutmosis, or Thothmes I., next to rule, penetrated into Nubia beyond the Third cataract and also into Syria as far as the Euphrates.

Queen Hatshepsutt followed her father and ruled with her brother, Thothmes II., and independently. She is characterized in history as a most energetic ruler and one accustomed to have her way.

"Tradition tells us that moving a body from its native soil and tomb will bring ruin to the holder," said Mrs. Bauman. "I did not give this much thought. I did not like the head, but my husband seemed to place no belief in the superstition.

"The eyes seemed so penetrating. They were a kind of agate and sparkled dimly out of the folds of cloth. Four years ago my son died here while my husband and I were traveling in Germany. We came home at once. This may have been a warning.

"Recently my husband was taken ill. One night while sitting in his chair he called my name, and five minutes later he was dead.

"I am through with the head—in his notes of the Egyptian trip Mr. Bauman called the head a 'treasure'—and I will feel safer with it out of my home. It seems to have worked its evil spell here."

The famous Chaco canyon ruins of New Mexico are in a lamentable state of deterioration, and steps should be taken at once to prevent further decay, Professor Nelson declared. He has conducted extensive excavations in various parts of New Mexico.

Pioneer Thinks They Helped Him In Reaching Green Old Age.

Grant, Mich.—Hinson Cole, a pioneer of Muskegon and Newaygo counties, who recently passed his one hundred and first milestone, thinks that his green old age is accounted for in part by the fact that for the last eighty years he has used tobacco moderately and always spent a goodly share of his time fishing.

Cole wanted to enlist for the civil war, but was turned down by Uncle Sam, as he was past forty-six years of age and too old for active duty. For eighty years Mr. Cole has enjoyed a local fame as the leading fisherman hereabouts.

National Preparedness Main Theme of President Wilson's Message, Submitted to Congress Today. "Greatest Danger to Our Country Comes From Within Our Borders."

FOLLOWING is the message of President Wilson delivered at a joint session of the senate and house at the beginning of the Sixty-fourth congress:

Gentlemen of the Congress—Since I last had the privilege of addressing you on the state of the Union the war of nations on the other side of the sea, which had then only begun to disclose its portentous proportions, has extended its threatening and sinister scope until it has swept within its flame some portion of every quarter of the globe, not excepting our own hemisphere, has altered the whole face of international affairs, and now presents a prospect of reorganization and reconstruction such as statesmen and peoples have never been called upon to attempt before.

The president tells how this country practiced neutrality and declares that he hopes that when the time comes for readjustment and recuperation this country will be of infinite service. Referring to Central and South American problems, the president declares that we should retain unabated the spirit which has inspired us throughout the whole life of our government and which was so frankly put into words by President Monroe.

We have been put to the test in the case of Mexico, and we have stood the test. Whether we have benefited Mexico by the course we have pursued remains to be seen. Her fortunes are in her own hands. But we have at least proved that we will not take advantage of her in her distress and undertake to impose upon her an order and government of our own choosing. Liberty is often a fierce and intractable thing, to which no bounds can be set and to which no bounds of a few men's choosing ought ever to be set. Every American who has drunk at the true fountains of principle and tradition must subscribe without reservation to the high doctrine of the Virginia bill of rights, which in the great days in which our government was set up was everywhere among us accepted as the creed of free men. That doctrine is, "That government is or ought to be instituted for the common benefit, protection and security of the people, nation or community;" that "of all the various modes and forms of government, that is the best which is capable of producing the greatest degree of happiness and safety and is most effectually secured against the danger of maladministration, and that when any government shall be found inadequate or contrary to these purposes a majority of the community hath an indubitable, inalienable and indefeasible right to reform, alter or abolish it in such manner as shall be judged most conducive to the public weal." We have unhesitatingly applied that heroic principle to the case of Mexico and now hopefully await the rebirth of the troubled republic, which had so much of which to purge itself and so little sympathy from any outside quarter in the radical but necessary process. We will aid and befriend Mexico, but we will not coerce her, and our course with regard to her ought to be sufficient proof to all America that we seek no political suzerainty or selfish control.

PAN-AMERICANISM HAS NONE OF EMPIRE'S SPIRIT.

Economic Adjustments Inevitable Within the Next Generation.

The moral is that the states of America are not hostile rivals, but co-operating friends, and that their growing sense of community of interest, alike in matters political and in matters economic, is likely to give them a new significance as factors in international affairs and in the political history of the world. It presents them as in a very deep and true sense a unit in world affairs, spiritual partners, standing together because thinking together, quick with common sympathies and common ideals. Separated, they are subject to all the cross currents of the confused politics of a world of hostile rivalries; united in spirit and purpose, they cannot be disappointed of their peaceful destiny.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S LATEST PICTURE.

(From snapshot taken on Nov. 26.)

This is pan-Americanism. It has none of the spirit of empire in it. It is the embodiment, the effectual embodiment, of the spirit of law and independence and liberty and mutual service.

The president calls attention to the meeting in Washington recently of representatives of the pan-American republics and says that economic adjustment is inevitable in the next generation.

No one who really comprehends the spirit of the great people for whom we are appointed to speak can fail to perceive that their passion is for peace, their genius best displayed in the practice of the arts of peace. Great democracies are not belligerent. They do not seek or desire war. Their thought is of individual liberty and of the free labor that supports life and the uncensored thought that quickens it. Conquest and dominion are not in our reckoning or agreeable to our principles. But just because we demand unmolested development and the undisturbed government of our own lives upon our own principles of right and liberty, we resent, from whatever quarter it may come, the aggression we ourselves will not practice. We insist upon security in prosecuting our self chosen lines of national development. We do more than that. We demand it also for others. We do not confine our enthusiasm for individual liberty and free national development to the incidents and movements of affairs which affect only ourselves. We feel it wherever there is a people that tries to walk in these difficult paths of independence and right. From the first we have made common cause with all partisans of liberty on this side the sea and have deemed it as important that our neighbors should be free from all outside domination as that we ourselves should be; have set America aside as a whole for the uses of independent nations and political freemen.

Out of such thoughts grow all our policies. We regard war merely as a means of asserting the rights of a people against aggression. And we are as fiercely jealous of coercive or dictatorial power within our own nation as of aggression from without. We will not maintain a standing army except for uses which are as necessary in times of peace as in times of war.

But war has never been a mere matter of men and guns. It is a thing of disciplined might. If our citizens are ever to fight effectively upon a sudden summons, they must know how modern fighting is done, and what to do when the summons comes to render themselves immediately available and immediately effective. And the government must be their servant in this matter, must supply them with the training they need to take care of themselves and of it. The military arm of their government, which they will not allow to direct them, they may properly use to serve them and make their independence secure, and not their own independence merely, but the rights also of those with whom they have made common cause, should they also be put in jeopardy. They must be fitted to play the great role in the world, and particularly in this hemisphere, for which they are qualified by principle and by chastened ambition to play.

It is with these ideals in mind that the plans of the department of war for more adequate national defense were conceived which will be laid before you, and which I urge you to sanction and put into effect as soon as they can be properly scrutinized and discussed. They seem to me the essential first steps, and they seem to me for the present sufficient.

They contemplate an increase of the standing force of the regular army from its present strength of 5,023 officers and 102,985 enlisted men of all services to a strength of 7,136 officers and 134,707 enlisted men, or 141,843 all told, all services, rank and file, by the addition of fifty-two companies of coast artillery, fifteen companies of engineers, ten regiments of infantry, four regiments of field artillery and four aero squadrons, besides 750 officers required for a great variety of extra service, especially the all important duty of training the citizen force of which I shall presently speak, 792 noncommissioned officers for service in drill, recruiting and the like and the necessary quota of enlisted men for the quartermaster corps, the hospital corps, the ordnance department and other similar auxiliary services. These are the additions necessary to render the army adequate for its present duties, duties which it has to perform not only upon our own continental coasts and borders and at our interior army posts, but also in the Philippines, in the Hawaiian Islands, at the isthmus and in Porto Rico.

By way of making the country ready to assert some part of its real power promptly and upon a larger scale should occasion arise the plan also contemplates supplementing the army by a force of 400,000 disciplined citizens, raised in increments of 133,000 a year throughout a period of three years. This it is proposed to do by a process of enlistment under which the serviceable men of the country would be asked to bind themselves to serve with the colors for purposes of training for short periods throughout three years and to come to the colors at call at any time throughout an additional "furlough" period of three years. This force of 400,000 men would be provided with personal accouterments as fast as enlisted and their equipment for the field made ready to be supplied at any time. They would be assembled for training at stated intervals at convenient places in association with suitable units of the regular army. Their period of annual training would not necessarily exceed two months in the year.

The president says it is up to the patriotic young men of the country to respond to this call.

COMPREHENSIVE PLAN FOR GREATER NAVY.

Always Looked to It as Our First and Chief Line of Defense.

The program which will be laid before you by the secretary of the navy is similarly conceived. It involves only a shortening of the time within which plans long matured shall be carried out, but it does make definite and explicit a program which has heretofore been only implicit, held in the minds of the committees on naval affairs and disclosed in the debates of the two houses, but nowhere formulated or formally adopted. It seems to me very clear that it will be to the advantage of the country for the congress to adopt a comprehensive plan for putting the navy upon a final footing of strength and efficiency and to press that plan to completion within the next five years. We have always looked to the navy of the country as our first and chief line of defense; we have always seen it to be our manifest course of prudence to be strong on the seas. Year by year we have been creating a navy which now ranks very high indeed among the navies of the maritime nations. We should now definitely determine how we shall complete what we have begun and how soon.

The program to be laid before you contemplates the construction within five years of ten battleships, six battle cruisers, ten scout cruisers, fifty destroyers, fifteen fleet submarines, eighty-five coast submarines, four gunboats, one hospital ship, two ammunition ships, two fuel oil ships and one repair ship. It is proposed that of this number we shall the first year provide for the construction of two battleships, two battle cruisers, three scout cruisers, fifteen destroyers, five fleet submarines,

BRITAIN WANTS WARRIORS IN PLACE OF ORATORS TO FIGHT AND WIN BATTLES

London—Responsibility for the repulse in Mesopotamia where the British forces, overwhemingly outnumbered, were driven back by the Turks a hundred miles from Bagdad; the disaster at Loos, where the British, on the edge of a great victory, were checked because the reserves were noe ready; the tragtdy at Suvla Bay, where the Anzacs were mowed down because the gallant landing parties, it is alleged, were not covered by the protecting fire of the war ships, and a lack of troops in the Balkans, where the Serbs have been crushed by the enemy, will be the subjects of questions in Parliament this week.

The British press and public and the military experts are still unshakeably convinced that the Allies will win the war, but there is a feeling, and it is growing, that those responsible for the British disasters in the war on land should be "scrapped" in order to make way for those who have shown initiative and won.

That there is something radically wrong with the organization which has permitted blunders to be piled up "like Pelion on Ossa" is the opinion of nine out of ten Englishmen, and while there is a firm belief that the organization of the supreme General Staff which is meeting in Paris made up of soldiers who have borne the brunt of the fighting will prevent a recurrence of theb lunders, there is a feeling that the men responsible for them, no matter how high, should be forced to make way for others who have tried on the battle fronts and not found wanting.

But while this feeling is dominant, and there is small wonder it should be, there is not the slightest evidence that Britain or her Allies think of making peace until Germany is thoroughly beaten.

I know personally that England is full of officers and soldiers eager to fight, that hundreds of thousands of trained me nare held at the bases, where they are "eating their heads off," and yet General Townshend had been compelled to retire before an overwhelming force of Turks, and General Sarrail and Mahon are hampered by a lack of reinforcements in Serbia.

With Greece wobbling because she fears to cast her lot with the Powers which has shown a lamentable lack of initiative; with Roumania overeager to join the forces of the Entente if these Powers can guarantee the despatch of forces which will insure the preservation of her integrity as a notion, there is an undownable feeling that the time has come when Britain, putting aside childish things such as depriving Hodge of his dinner hour glass of beer, shall do a full sized man's work in bringing the war to a successful conclusion, and that this will not be accomplished until military and naval experts and not smug civilians have full authority to decide upon the disposition of the troops in the field and the war ships at sea.

A vast army of fighting men is here, trained to the hour, and the only thing needed in order to avoid future defeats and to insure final victory, according to all the military experts, is the surrender of absolute power to the man who directs them.

Though the Allies are sure of final victory, it will come the sooner and be made the easier if the Bryans in the British government are shorn of their privilege of interfering with the strategy of the great conflict.

Britain has all the men, money and munitions needed, but in order to win speedily, according to responsible opinion, the direction of their employment where they will count the heaviest must be conferred on men who, though they cannot make speeches, know how to win battles.

Italian Citizens Want Church Services Held In Their Own Language

Announcement that the movement for the establishing of an Italian church in this city had met with flat failure was denied today by Mr. Frank Massaro, who acted as chairman of the meeting which was held in the City Hall Sunday night.

In discussing the meeting, Mr. Massaro said that no action had been taken, due to the enforced absence of the Rev. Father Ceremio, the chief speaker of the occasion, no formal discussion was held. Shortly after the Rev. Father Ceremio arrived at the hall he was summoned by the illness of one of his parishoners and was unable to return until too late an hour for the meeting to continue.

"Another thing," Mr. Massaro continued, "we have no thought of building a church in this city. This is out of the question as there are not enough adults to support it. We desire, however, to hold a separate service at the Church of the Immaculate Conception which will be attended entirely by Italians and the Oswego pastor is to occupy the pulpit. Permission has been granted to use the church basement and the meeting which we will hold will be simply for the purpose of talking the matter over and make arrangements for the attendance at the new service.

If, in time, the attendance is sufficiently large we may consider separate quarters similar to those of Oswego where the Italian residents of that city have only recently rented rooms in a downtown building and use this place for a church. We would proceed along the same lines."

HE DID HIS SHARE

How the Rich Man Changed His Mind When Tuberculosis Struck Home

Anthony Schofeld lived in Missouri and had made his money in copper and zinc. He had worked hard from a boy in the drift up to the rank of foreman, then to superintendent and finally to owner. Sickness never worried him. His six foot giant frame had stood many hard knocks, and was good for many more. A year ago in answer to a pretty girl who asked him to buy some seals to help the miners who had tuberculosis he replied gruffly: "Let 'em work and save, That's what I did when I was young ,and I've never been sick and have got enough to keep me now."

It was a different Schofeld who approached the Red Cross Seal girl at one of the booths yesterday, In 12 months his daughter had been stolen away by the monster Tuberculosis and his son, just graduating from college ,had been compelled to drop everything else in his search for health from this same disease. The doctor had said that the disease could be traced back probably to childhood, when his two children had been nursed by the consumptive daughter of a consumptive miner. The rickety, disease breeding tenements in which the miner was compelled to live were owned by Schofeld now. "I'd give my two eyes and both legs and arms to have my daughter with me and my son restored to health," he confided to the Red Cross Seal girl. I can't get away from the thought that my girl might be alive and my boy well if I'd given some attention to the prevention of this disease ten or fifteen years ago. Now it's too late for that, but I'll keep somebody else's son and daughter safe. Here, give me all the seals you've got and then go and get all you can find and charge them all to me. If money can make amends, which it can't, I'll do my share."

As the astonished girl handed over to him her entire supply of 20,000 seals and took his check in return she heard him mutter his daughter's name and repeat, "I'll do my share."

The Elder Booth.

A theatrical man, in an appreciation of Junius Brutus Booth, declares that "intellectually he stood above any actor of his own or any other time." In justification of this praise these claims are made. Booth had a knowledge of seamanship acquired as a midshipman, was an expert printer, had studied law and medicine, was an acute theologian and spoke eight languages fluently, besides being "the greatest actor who ever spoke the English language."—Exchange.

Saving Trouble.

"Can you tell me," said the good natured old gentleman, "why those golfers over there called me all those frightful names just now?"

"Why, what happened?"

"Oh, when they hit their ball over here I picked it up and threw it back to them to save them the trouble of coming for it."—Christian Register.

WHAT'S THE USE TALKING?

"Life is a gamble" someone once unwittingly said. It has been vigorously denied. Perhaps the one expressing the thought had in mind the conducting of a business in a city like Fulton.

But in speaking of a "gamble" many of Fulton's merchants are "gambling" on home trade, by using Syracuse newspapers to advertise their wares. Perhaps the shopping populace of our little city hasn't enough intelligence—we prefer to believe it has, to figure out that if local merchants lavishly devote their earnings to the building up of Syracuse there is no reason why they should n't go and do likewise. There is certainly one truth evident and that is if a city doesn't cooperate within itself it goes "bump." As a people we have to stand for cooperation for self preservation. If we are not loyal to home institutions then what's the use of so much talk. Rather pin a bit of crepe upon our cherished ambitions, and as a city turn our faces to the wall.

Either we will cooperate or we talk about it. Either we will get somewhere as a city or will fail.

AMERICANS FIRST

Within a comparatively brief period of time this country of ours has taken a place among the world powers, and is evincing a potential strength that will prove, almost before we know it, greater than that of any of the older countries on earth.

It is a crisis that calls for the highest human capabilities, the loftiest morals, the most distinguished material in men—loyalty unquestioned.

Not long ago the Atlantic coast was our cradle, then the banks of the Mississippi were the border lines of our ambition, and finally the Pacific marked the farthest field of our nationality, After a fleet sailed over the hidden mines and past the slumbering fortresses of that far-off island, a greater power was loaned; and now that the impulsive nations of the Old World are destroying one another, America stands out politically, commercially and morally with an influence of almost incalculable importance.

Wise men change their minds, but fools never. Politicians have a purpose, and cling to it.

My suggestion would be to the true Americans, to forget the traditions of the past, to renounce any allegiance to any class or clan that will attempt to crib, cabin or confine the spirit of Americanism. I say this in defiance of my party, or any man's party, be it political, social, fraternal or church.

The very form of our government is made after the fashion of humans. It is in close accordance with the laws of nature and of human nature. The plan of our government contemplates what is best for man. It is dedicated to mankind. For these big and humane reasons, we can reach the souls of men on the other side of the world and bring them here and benefit them. And this is why we are a great country. It is our national duty, our moral obligation, our great human object, to hand these men passports to prosperity.

But, they must remember, in coming to our great Republic, under these most favorable circumstances, that there is an obligation that they owe, and must respect. These new-made Americans, or the older but excitable Americans, must not forget that they are Americans first.

The flag that floated over Valley Forge is the emblem of the most masterful race in all the world. The stars and stripes that was unfurled at Saratoga, the colors that clung to the flag mast at Buena Vista, the red, white and blue that floated at Gettysburg, the flag that symbolized freedom at Santiago, the civilizing banner that brightened Manila Bay, represents a race that is self-disciplined by early want, long hardships. It represents the New World of men and women, who are schooled in the equity and fairness of life—people who are rapidly winning the confidence of the better class of all the world.

Should any set of men so far forget themselves as to fail to respect our flag, our country, I am persuaded that it would be well to let these traitors go the length of a reasonable leash, that we may know just what to expect of them in the future.

If these men do not represent the sentiments of their own tongues, then we shall expect, and very soon, too, their condemnation to be universal. We are waiting.—The Silent Partner.

Opinions

GOOD INTENTIONS

Mr. Ford's intention is good at any rate. Even if it is destined to failure it deserves appreciation. There is just a faint possibility that if he cannot bring about peace in Europe he can pave the way and make it easier to get peace when conditions become more favorable. He is backing his faith with some hundreds of thousands of dollars, and says he is not going to stop until the war is stopped. He will greatly be helped by the fact that Mr. Byran could not go with him, though the latter says he will join him at The Hague probably within a few weeks.—Watertown Times.

FINANCING THE BOY SCOUTS

The people of the city of Brooklyn take what is known as the Boy Scout movement quite seriously. It has been decided to endeavor to raise $200,000 in Greater New York during the present week to finance the movement, and Brooklyn's share of the fund has been fixed at $50,000. While the Brooklyn Eagle says that this sum was evidently fixed on the basis of ability to pay, rather than necessity, it fully indorses the movement and predicts that Brooklyn will do its share. It is urged by the Eagle that the Boy Scout movement meets the natural demand for clannishness, and supplies the leadership which the younger boy craves. It also provides a substitute for the gangs which, for lack of control and guidance, go wrong and ripen into organizations which menace the gangsters themselves as well as the community.That is to say: The Boy Scout movement is a corrective of the gang tendency.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

REASON THAT COTTON IS CONTRABAND OF WAR

The London Daily Mail bitterly complains that English markets are being flooded with cheap cotton gloves, marked "made in Holland", but really made in Germany and shipped through Holland. The Mail vigorously denounces the Government for permitting these German cotton manufactures to evade the blockade.

The point of interest to us Americans is the incidental disclosure that Germany has cotton to spare for the manufacture of goods to be sold in England.

If this is true, then the conditions upon which England justified making American cotton contraband of war do not exist and have not existed.

England asserted that Germany had only a limited supply of cotton with which to make ammunition, and that if further supplies of cotton were cut off Germany could not carry on the war. And now, months later,we learn from the Daily Mail that Germany has on hand such quantities of cotton that she is manufacturing cotton goods to ship abroad!

We know very well that if there was a shortage of cotton in Germany, or any danger of a shortage of cotton, Germany would not be using cotton to make goods for outside markets. She would be using every pound of cotton in making explosives.

The only reason cotton was put on the contraband list was to prevent American shipments and manufacture of cotton and cotton goods from growing while England was at war.

It is a significant fact that many American cotton cargoes which have been seized by British cruisers have been taken to Manchester and sold, thus furnishing Manchester factories with cheap cotton to be manufactured and sold to Americans!

A more unjustifiable mistreatment of a friendly neutral nation never occurred, and if the Administration had half the force and courage of many Administrations of the past it would not submit the country to such mistreatment.—N. Y. American.

RAISING PASSENGER RATES.

If the Public Service Commission of this state permits the New York Central railroad to raise its passenger rates over the present rates the people of New York should lose no time in making a complete reorganization of the Public Service Commission.

The determination of the New York Central to increase passenger rates is something which it is hard to fathom. The New York Central has just made what the Wall Street Journal calls a "radical departure from previous practice of publishing with the earnings statement for October and 10 months, complete income accounts showing the 'surplus after charges' for the month and period, but they reported much greater increases in gross and net for October than even the optimistic had expected to see."

The same paper goes on to say:

"These figures show (for the New York Central) a balance after charges for 10 months of $19,729,360 or 7.70 per cent. on $249,590,000 stock. This is equivalent to an annual rate of 9.48 per cent. —in other words, the New York Central is practically assured of earning upwards of 10 per cent. for its stock for the entire calendar year of 1915."

In the fact of such earnings the people of this state are asked to pay still higher passenger rates, and the public Service Commission is asked to aid the New York Central in this purpose.

Auburn and people of this section as well as of other sections off the main line of the New York Central have particular interest in the proposed increases, because they will be discriminated against, The charter of the main line between Buffalo and Albany requires that fare shall not be charged for passengers at a rate greater than two cents a mile, but because we are "off the main line" we are expected to pay two and a half cents a mile after January 8. Thus, instead of paying $6.59 for a ticket to New York you will have to pay $7.06 which many eventually help the unfortunate New York Central to raise that "practically assured earning of 10 per cent. to possibly still higher returns.

And the Lehigh Valley Railroad, which has long paid a 10 per cent. dividend also asks the Public Service Commission to allow it to raise its rates where the New York Central sets the pace. "It would be an illuminating discovery if the Public Service Commission were to destroy railroad competition by allowing any such outrage to be put into operation."

It is up to business men and travelers to make prompt opposition to this scramble of the railroads for still more revenue when they are already earning very substantial dividends.—Auburn Citizen.

FARMER FINDS GOOD BUSINESS IN SKUNKS

Expects to Market 400; May Net $4 Apiece.

Allentown, Pa.—A unique enterprise in Lehigh county is the skunk farm of Solomon Hausman, near Bittner's corner, in Lowhill township. A vigorous man of forty, Mr. Hausman looks more like a successful country doctor than a farmer and in addition to being a successful agriculturist is a prosperous dealer in skins. One of his cherished possessions is a valuable overcoat made of raccoon skins which he himself shot or trapped.

The growing scarcity of furs and their rapid increase in price were Mr. Hausman's motives in making the experiment of a skunk farm, cut out of ten acres of his estate. Last year he killed sixty skunks for market, but this year expects about 400.

He has been successful in bringing them around to the desired color and believes that by another year he will have 90 per cent of them pure black. The blacks are the most valuable, their skins at present commanding $3 each, while those striped or mixed with white are quoted at $1.50 and less.

The skunk farm is not a picturesque place, consisting chiefly of holes in the ground, with boxes here and there for houses. There is but one litter a year, which runs from eight to ten kittens. In December the fur bearers are ready for slaughter. The skunks must be fed once a day, and Mr. Hausman has discovered that the food they like best and on which they thrive best is boiled potatoes.

QUAIL IN POULTRY YARD.

Delaware Farmer Finds Fourteen, Who Make Themselves at Home.

Bridgeville, Del.—Henry Savage, a Nanticoke Hundred farmer, has a covey of quail and has become so attached to them that they will be spared from the hunter's gun, and he intends making a business of raising them for the market.

Recently Savage went out into his poultry yard and was astonished to find fourteen quail feeding with his chickens. At night they went in the poultry house and huddled in a corner, while the chickens took their accustomed roosts.

Eagle a Mascot in Navy.

Norfolk, Va.—A live American eagle has been added to the zoological collection of the navy. It is the only eagle in the navy and is the mascot of the crew of the battleship New Hampshire. The eagle was trapped by members of the crew in Dismal swamp.

Keen Scented Deer.

Under the most favorable atmospheric conditions deer can scent a man at the distance of a mile and a half. If he is smoking the range may be increased to two miles. They have been known to refuse to cross a man's track more than four hours after he had passed, but rain may destroy the scent in ten minutes.—St. James' Gazette.

Thunder at Sea.

The Astronomical Society of France has again taken up the discussion which has been before it on several previous occasions, and that is the statement that thunder is never heard at sea. The statement was originally attributed to Baron von Humboldt, and it has been frequently questioned, but those who insist that they have heard thunder at sea have also stated that the peals were not so loud as on land. A large number of seamen have been found to agree with the scientist, although it is suggested that the other noises prevailing on shipboard during a storm may be the reason why the thunder often passes unnoticed.

A Popular Disease.

What American is there who has not been or is not going to be a president of something? Time was when the number of societies, clubs, organizations, chapters, associations, etc., was so limited that only about one in ten thousand could be a president. Now nobody, no matter how humble he is, can avoid the office.—Life.

BE TACTFUL.

Talent is something, but tact is everything. Talent is serious, sober, grave and respectable. Tact is all that and more too. It is not a seventh sense, but is the life of all the five. It is the open eye, the quick ear, the judging taste, the keen smell and the lively touch. It is the interpreter of all riddles, the surmounter of all difficulties and the remover of all obstacles. Tact is a wonder worker.

MAX FIGMAN as "Blackie Daw"

MAX FIGMAN DOESN'T LIKE SKUNK FARMS—ONE EXPERIENCE PROVES A LIFE LESSON.

Say "Skunk Farm" to Max Figman and his usual good nature wears thin in certain places. By judicious questioning you find that there are certain very good reasons for this. Mr. Figman is playing "Blackie Daw" in Pathe's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford," a series based upon George Randolph Chester's well known stories. The pictures are being made at the Wharton Studios in Ithaca, N. Y., and one of them deals with high finance as applied to skunk farms.

To get the requisite local color it was necessary to take the company to Connecticut, where are located several examples of this infant and smelly industry. At first sight the company was enamored with the pretty black and white animals which look as innocent as so many kittens. The scenes were taken and the players were ready to depart. Mr. Figman leaned up against the wire netting of one of the enclosures to have a little chat with the skunk farmer. Somehow or other one of the skunks got peeved—result, a chorus of cuss words and a strict quarantine against the badly abused Mr. Figman. As a passenger on the train, our genial friend was impossible. It is rumored that he made his way back to Ithaca on foot via the Poughkeepsie Bridge.

OPPORTUNITY.

Every day brings to our door something that is good to do and that it never will come our way to do again. If we are blind and do not see it and then insist that our days are featureless, whose fault is it? Opportunity does its part, and we must likewise do our part.

OFFSPRING OF ALIEN PARENTS HARDIEST

Figures Show More Deaths Among Native Population.

New York.—Children under five years old who are born in this city of native parents die more quickly than children whose parents are foreigners, according to figures for 1914 made public recently by the health department. The compilation, which was made under the direction of Dr. William. H. Guilfoy, registrar of records, shows that out of every 1,000 children of native white parentage forty-four boys and thirty-five girls do not reach their fifth year, whereas on the same basis thirty-nine boys and thirty-two girls who are the offspring of foreigners die in early childhood.

The infant mortality figures for the native population are swelled to a greater disproportion when the records for negro children are considered. Among this class 112 male babies and ninety-five female die out of every 1,000. Added to the statistics for whites, these figures give an average of seventy-eight boys and sixty-five girls.

In the opinion of Dr. Charles F. Bolduan, director of the bureau of public health education, the foreign mother is more apt to remain at home and look after her child than the native mother, who is called away by a greater number of social duties. Although the native mother can read magazines which treat of the proper upbringing of children. Dr. Bolduan pointed out that the health authorities come into more personal contact with the foreign mothers.

The mortality among native white children, arranged according to the birthplace of the mother, gave the following results: Native mothers, 30 per 1,000; English, 26; German and Austro-Hungarian, 25; Swedish, 22; Russian and Polish, 20; Irish, 32; Italian, 33 and French, 35.

Among the babes of negro parents the only disease group that approximated the figures for white native children was that of the contagious diseases. All their causes of death, especially the respiratory, tuberculous and congenital, exhibited a mortality much higher than among the whites.

Curiosity.

Little Virginia, aged five, had been put to bed, but not to sleep. From her bedroom came a little voice:

"Daddy, come here. I want to tell you something."

Daddy wasn't anxious to be disturbed, so, thinking she was about to go to sleep, he said, "Well, wait till I eat this apple."

He read for fifteen or twenty minutes, when again she called out, "Daddy, how big is that apple?"—Indianapolis News.

Mighty in Titles.

The ruler of Turkey in addition to the titles sultan and kha-khan (high prince and lord of lords), also claims sovereignty over most districts, towns, cities and states in the orient, specifying each by name and setting out in each of his various titles "all the forts, citadels, purlieus and neighborhood thereof" in regular legal form. His official designation ends, "Sovereign also of diverse nations, states, peoples and races on the face of the earth." All this is in addition to his high position as "head of the faithful" and "supreme lord of all the followers of the prophet," "direct and only lieutenant on earth of Mohammed."

CAMERA REGISTERS ANALYSIS OF MOTION

METHOD PATENTED BY PATHE OPENS UP NEW FIELDS TO SCIENTIST.

PICTURES SHOWN ON SCREEN

Action of Champion Athletes Flashed in Graceful Slowness—Will Aid Sculptors.

A remarkable example of the value of motion pictures in science is afforded by a picture made by Pathe and given the title of "Human Movements Analyzed." Well-known scientists and educators who have seen the film unite in saying that it is positively unique and opens the door to a better understanding of muscular effort than pages of literary description. Efficiency experts see in the picture more than a mere hint as to how they may employ similar methods to eliminate superfluous movements in technical operations, and athletic coaches find in it an opportunity to teach their charges the form used by champion athletes. The first picture ever made of the kind was produced by Pathe about two years ago, and at that time secured some remarkable publicity.

Ordinary motion pictures, it will be remembered, are taken with a camera making sixteen pictures per second and are projected upon the screen at the same rate. With the "ultra rapid" method, patented by Pathe, a motor is attached to the camera and the pictures are taken at a rate of 120 to the second or even more. These pictures are projected at the ordinary rate with the consequence that animate objects in the film move so slowly that the naked eye easily has time to detect every contortion and muscular action which they make—an impossible feat under ordinary conditions. The hurdler running at a record pace is seen to crawl along. As he comes to the jumps his body rises from the ground like a thistledown, and he seems fairly to float over the barrier.

From "Human Movements Analyzed." The sprinter running a hundred yards in ten seconds fairly creeps along, and the difference between his stride and that of the distance runner who follows, is very clearly shown. The superb grace of the athletes is very evident, a quality which is unnoticed by the eye when it catches their movements at their true speed. The sculptor can find a wealth of material in the shot putter who in this picture, with every muscle swelling, hurls the heavy weight in such a manner that each movement, clearly perceived, is an art study.

Another picture of the same kind, "Animal Movements Analyzed," will be released by Pathe in December. It shows the muscular action of a jumping dog, a goat leaping over a fence, a cat falling from a height, a running horse, etc. For pure interest and educational value combined it would be hard to equal these pictures.

It is predicted that advanced educators will urge their pupils to seek opportunities to see these pictures.

$130,000,000,000 IS BRITAIN'S WEALTH.

At a rough estimate the capital wealth of the British empire is $130,000,000,000 and its yearly income $20,000,000,000.

This statement was made by Reginald McKenna, chancellor of the exchequer, in reply to an inquirer in the house of commons.

Dumas, Father and Son.

A story is told about the two Dumases, father and son, which illustrates the pleasant relations between the two. The son had written his first successful novel, and the father wrote him a letter of congratulation, which he began in the formal manner of "Dear Sir." This letter throughout read as though addressed to a total stranger and merely thanked the author for the pleasure the book had given him. Dumas fils answered in this manner:

Sir—I thank you most heartily for your kind letter. Praise from you is especially appreciated by me, as I have always heard of you as the most enthusiastic admirer of my father, who also makes some pretension of being a novelist.

How Packages May Be Sent to Foreign Lands Without Trouble.

In a circular issued by the postoffice department the general public is given directions for wrapping and mailing Christmas presents and information as to the additions to the address which may be added in writing on the outside of the parcel.

Inscriptions requesting that the parcel be not opened till Christmas or bearing greetings may be placed on the package so long as they do not interfere with the address and leave ample room for that and for the stamps. The public is cautioned against placing other stamps or stickers than postage stamps on the address side and thereby rendering the parcel unmailable.

Care should also be taken not to seal parcels with stickers, as sealed packages are unmailable at the fourth class rate.

Among the troubles of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce in the department of commerce is the arrival at this time of innumerable inquiries from people who intend to send Christmas presents to relatives and friends abroad. All or most of them want to pay at this end of the route any tariff charges that may be imposed in the country of destination, and they pester the bureau with questions as to how the payments can be made.

To these inquirers some obviously feeling remarks are addressed in the latest issue of its publication, Commerce Reports. They are told first that the bureau cannot send to each questioner the full tariff schedules of all lands or even of any one, and that therefore they should make the problems they submit more definite than they do, telling exactly what it is they purpose to send away and where. This implies that then the information needed will be given. The answer really sent, however, to all these troubled ones is that "there is no direct way in which the import duty charged by another country can be paid here, but if the package is placed in the charge of an express company provision can be made for payment of duty by the express agent abroad."

A pleasing touch of human feeling—the touch so often lacking from governmental publications—is given in the conclusion of the article in Commerce Reports from which these facts are drawn. It says:

Although there is no exemption from custom house charges for Christmas gifts, there are some conditions under which certain gifts going from country to country may escape payment. Some governments rule that wedding presents brought in by subjects shall not be taxed. Some also exempt possessions that are part of an inheritance. But the season of universal giving is not on the tariff calendar as one when the pathways between the nations shall be cleared of obstructions.

RESERVE OF DRUGS URGED.

United States in Case of War Would Face Shortage, It Is Declared.

The New York Medical Journal says that the discussion of plans for the reorganization of the army and navy should include consideration of the grave importance of an adequate reserve of medical and surgical supplies.

"If the United States became engaged in hostilities," it says editorially, "our ports would probably be blockaded. A study of the sources whence medical supplies are now obtained shows that from 75 to 90 per cent of these are either obtained from foreign sources or are dependent in some indirect way upon them. Even in supplies of domestic origin no reserves are on hand, and unless some special provision is made months would elapse after the outbreak of war before the demands of the army and navy could be met. We are now suffering from a marked shortage in surgical instruments, and if we required increased quantities of these we should simply be left without instruments."

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—For consolation in the hours of gloom following election day the Democratic leaders at Washington were quoted as turning to Wilson as a predestined candidate for 1916 and asserting that he is stronger than his party. But—is he?

The assertion has often been made. Some Republicans even are said to believe it. Yet, as a matter o f fact, the declaration cannot be defended in logic or in the light of any recorded political event.

Mr. Wilson came into politics in 1910, when he left an unstable position at Princeton to run for the Governorship of New Jersey. He polled 233,682 votes, as compared with 182,567 cast for Mr. Bryan two years before. Was Mr. Wilson stronger than his party? Or was Bryan weaker than his party? The question is open to doubt.

This much, however, is certain—In 1910 Mr. Wilson was unknown in politics and his support in that year doubtless contained many who were drawn to him by the myth which Col. George Harvey had so sedulously cultivated.

In 1912 Mr. Wilson ran for President. He was then well-known —in New Jersey at any rate— and his vote dropped to 170,289—a loss of 65,000 from the impressive figures of two years earlier; and smaller by 4,000 than that which Bryan had received in 1908. Was Wilson then stronger than his party?

Throughout the country, Wilson received 6,293,019 votes in 1912; whereas, in 1908, Bryan had polled 6,409,104. In 1896—despite the defection of the Gold Democrats—Bryan received 6,502,925 votes, which is nearly 300,000 more than Wilson got in 1912, when the population had increased by millions and when Wilson had two distinct beneficial conditions: First, the disruption of the Republicans; and, second, thev oting of many Republicans direct for Wilson for a reason which was well understood at the time. In 1900, too, Mr. Bryan showed himself a better vote-getter than Wilson, for he then received 6,358,133 votes or 65,000 more than Wilson could get twelve years later from a much increased electorate. What basis is there, then, for claiming that Wilson is stronger than his party?

This year's elections certainly afford no basis for such a claim. In Maryland, in 1912, Wilson, running for President, secured 112,674 votes; whereas Harrington, this year's candidate for Governor got 117,534. Massachusetts, three years ago, gave Wilson, for President, 173,408 votes; this year it gave Walsh, for Fovernor, 229,312. In Kentucky, Wilson received 219,594 votes; whereas this year, when he did his level best for Stanley, the Democratic candidate for Governor, only 215,000 voters responded to the hurry-up call from the White House.

No combination of figures in any election where Wilson has been a candidate or an issue bears out the claim that he is stronger than his party. The belief that he is so is merely a delusion that optimistic Democrats hug to their bosoms in order to prevent their throwing up their hands now.

COP THOUGHT IT "GOAT."

But Elks Club Steps at Natchez, Miss., Harbored Real Possum.

Natchez, Miss.—While patroling his beat on Franklin street Policeman Ed Gahan saw a mysterious animal on the steps of the Elks club. The cop, thinking that the "goat" had escaped, executed a flanking and enveloping movement and captured the animal. Believing it was the official "goat," the officer had prepared for desperate resistance, but immediate surrender was made.

He found that he had captured a possum of enormous size. The possum was placed under arrest, taken to the station house and a charge of prowling entered against him. Not being able to explain his presence in the heart of the city and especially at the Elks club, the possum was condemned to execution and fell into the clutches of the colored janitor of the city hall.

TREED BLACK CAT.

Hunters Thought It Possum and Waited All Night.

Saylersville, Ky.—Recently J. S. Adams with his two sons, Carl and Bundy, went opossum hunting. They started about 9 o'clock, and about 12 o'clock his wife began to get uneasy, and still they did not come home. Next morning she went out and got the neighbors to make a search for them, and while she was getting breakfast she looked up the hill and saw them coming.

When his wife asked him what had delayed him he said: "We were on the hill when the dog made a dive into the underbrush and then treed something. We went to the tree and thought it was a coon, and we lay down on the leaves and went to sleep. The next morning we saw that we had treed a big black cat instead of a coon."

The Observant Beggar.

"Excuse me, sir," said the panhandler, shuffling up to Dubbleigh's side, "but you couldn't let me have $15, could you?"

"Fifteen dollars!" echoed Dubbleigh. "Great Scott, man, do you for one moment suppose I'd be fool enough to give you $15?"

"No, chief, I didn't," said the panhandler, "but I sort o' hoped you'd regard it as a kind of personal amusement and swear off $14.90, leavin' me with a dime to the good."

He got it.—New York Times.

Housewives Violate Parliamentary Rules; Fists Punch the Air

New York—Plumes bristled difiantly and fists shoook angrily yesterday at one of the stormiest sessions ever held by the Housewives League. The insurgent members from New Jersey, together with several staunch adherents of Mrs. Julian Heath, founder and national chairman, had been invited to come oyer and talk about the constitution which seemed to trouble some of the members.

The women, more than a score in number,, met in the national offices, No. 25 West Forty-fifth street. They arrived at ten o'clock and it past four when the last belligerent element stepped into the elevator declaring she wouldn't be going then if she didn't have to hurry home and get dinner.

Mrs. Heath looked complacent, except occasionally when some woman attacked her violently. She wore a violet dress and picture hat and stood near the chairman's desk, on which there was a huge bowl of chrysathenums, bearing a card with the most affectionate sentiments and assurances of firm support from "several New Jersey admirers."

The first real ripple in the current of investigation came when the national treasurer. Mrs. E. V. F. Chamberlain, began reading the Housewives' League constitution section by section. Presently she came to one section which she apparently slipped over, hesitating at the words and then losing her place.

But a quick New Jersey housewife had kept her own eyes fastened on the certified copy of the constitution, and she quietly but firmly showed the members that there was evidence the reader had deleted the official organ.

That started the ball rolling andm inute by minute the women grew angrier and angrier, until finally the New Jersey officers decided to call a secret session in one corner of the room. This was presided over by Mrs. J. H. Yokum.

Miss Edith Deshler of New Brunswick, talked right up to Mrs. Yokum saying that if she had been able to keep her temper and had not shaken her fist at the members their New Jersey organization might have been able to meet peacefully in the past. "You know you lost your temper and shook your fist in our faces," shouted Miss Deshler.

SPORT MEETING ALL THIS WEEK

Auburn to Entertain State Forest, Fish and Game League—To Oppose Power Rifles.

Auburn—The committee in charge of arrangements for the exhibits at the State Convention of Sportsmen to be held here this week, say that this feature will be a most interesting one, the members having been very good in giving the use of any specimens which they have, while others who are not members of the Association have stated that they will allow any specimens which they may happen to have to be used at this time. The exhibit wil linclude specimens of fish of all species, birds, stuffed animals, pelts and skins, old fashioned knives and muskets, and it is expected that there will also be a showing of the Algonquin pottery which was excavated at Owasco Lake last Summer.

Secretary John Tryon makes public the following resolution which had been prepared by a committee appointed at the last session of the association to draft it:

Against Licensed Nteeing

"Whereas, The granting of net licenses for the taking of so-called coarse fish from the inland waters of the State of New York is invested in the Conservation Commission, an,

"Whereas, We believe that the greater part of our inland waters, not including the Hudson River and the Great Lakes, where such licenses are being granted are gradually becoming depleted of all kinds of fish, and

"Whereas, A great majority of the citizens in the counties where said licenses are granted are opposed to such granting of licenses, now therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the delegates of the New York State Fish, Game and Forest League, in convention assembled, are opposed to the granting of net licenses for the purpose of taking fish fro mthe inland waters of the State of New York with the exception of the Hudson River and the Great Lakes. And be it further

"Resolved, That we use all means in our power to obtain the passage of a law prohibting such practices."

TOWN OF VOLNEY PUPILS' EXHIBIT

Sixteen Schools Represented —Fancy Work and Bake Stuff Vied for Popularity With Produce.

Grange hall at Volney presented an interesting sight Friday night, the occasion being the annual entertainment and with it, the exhibit of farm produce. The sixteen schools of Volney were represented, and the pupils evinced the same interest as during the season when they raised produce for this and other exhibitions.

Willard Loomis, jr., won first and second prizes for his display of potatoes; first and second for apples; first and second for cabbage; first and second for field and pie pumpkins; first for squash. Especial mention is due Mr. Loomis for his ability to raise prize potatoes, but not the least of his exhibits were the ears of yellow corn and white popcorn. He won first and second prizes for the latter also. It should be mentioned as well that his exhibits were all raised on the old home farm.

The fine exhibit of white flint corn was the result of the season's work of Howard Turk, who won first and second prizes for the varieties. Master Stacy Coy followed Mr. Turk closely with a splendid line of "bloody butcher" corn; and Francis Coe demonstrated his knowledge of how to raise beets and carrots. Mable Smith convinced everybody of her knowledge of raising red popcorn.

In the fancy worok department — patchwork pillow tops—Nellie Carr walked away with first prize, but Mable Smith's exhibit of handkerchief cases won first prize, and Nellie Carr came near to the front again by winning second prize. Annie May won first and Mable Smith second for block patchwork, and for chain stitchwork Vera Chaffee won first and Mable Smith second prizes respectively. Gladys Coe and Nellie Carr won first and second respectively for their work, outline stitchwork. Mable Smith and Vera Chaffee won first and second respectively in the class for solid and outline pillow work, and Gladys Coe secured second prize for the latter work.

In the bakestuff department, Nellie Smith excelled in making candy, getting first prize; Miss Mildred, first in making cake; Miss Arthur, second; and for making bread, Annie May won first.

The entertainment was provided by the school pupils and was a fitting and pleasing accompaniment to the show.

President Pledges Aid to Suffrage

Washington—President Wilson has promised to take up the question of nation-wide woman suffrage with the leaders of Congress

For the first time since deputations of suffragists have waited upon him at the White House, the President did not evade the issue by referring to State's rights. He said:

"All I can say with regard to what you are urging at present is this: I hope I shall always have an open mind. I shall certainly take the greatest pleasure in conferring in the most serious way with my colleagues at the other end of the city with regard to what is the right thing to do at this time concerning this great matter.

"I am always restrained, as some of you will remember, by the consciousness that I must speak for others as well as for myself so long as I occupy my present office, and, therefore, I do not like to speak for others until I consult others and see what I am justified in saying."

The President received Miss Frances Joliffe and Mrs. Sara Bard Field and their escort of 300 distinguished suffragists in the East Room of the White House. There was an indicating that he regarded the mission of the women as a matter of grave political importance.

When the huge four-mile petition was partly unrolled before him, the President seemed for a moment to be fascinated by the spectacle. He was visibly impressed by this concrete illustration of the tremendous voting power already in the hands of the women of this country.

In her impressive appeal, Mrs. Field said the political party which put through the Federal amendment enfranchising women would receive the support of the suffragists.

On the other hand, she intimated the purpose of the mission was to impress upon the Administration that fact that 4,000,000 women would withhold theirv otes from a political party which ignored the enfranchised women's demand for the ballot.

SUPERVISORS ARE DIVIDED

Richland Man Willing to Have Jail Removed to Pulaski, but Wants Appropriation.

Oswego—The question of the removal of the jail from Pulaski, or its complete abandonment, was threshed to a certain extent at last night's session of the Board of Supervisors, but after passing an amendment to Mr. Riley's motion of Friday, further consideration was put over until today.

The amendment was offered by Supervisor John Parkhurst of Richland following an address in which he discussed the various phases of the jail proposition in Oswego county. The vote shows that sentiment on the question among the supervisors is about equally divided.

The amendment provides that the jail be abandoned but $3,000 he appropriated with which to remove the cells make other alterations to the building and install two steel cells to be used when court is in session.

A lively fight is expected when the proposition comes up for final action. In his remarks Mr. Parkhurst said that the Pulaski jail was established by an act of the Legislature in March, 1819, and that it had been a hundred years fight on the part of the city of Oswego to have the jail abolished.

Supervisor Charles H. Nichols, chairman of the Highway Committee, offered a resolution providing for a county system of highways as recommended in a report of the committee made last week. The resolution was accompanied by a map showing the proposed system and also a detailed description of the roads which will make up the system if the proposition is adopted.

The resolution was made a special order for Wednesday. The proposed system provides for the improvement of 150 miles of road in the county. It is estimated that $450,000 would be expended with thhe cost per mile not to exceed $3,000. The city of Oswego would pay about one-third of the total cost.

Judge Joseph H. Gill, recorder of the city of Oswego, appeared before the board and urged that a contract be made with Onondaga county for the maintenance of prisoners at the Jamesville Penitentiary. If such a contract was made he said, various classes of offenders could be dealt with properly. Under present conditions only vagrants can be sent to the penitentiary from Oswego Country.

A communication was received from Thomas H. King, chairman of the Oswego County Welfare Board, asking that $6,000 be appropriated. The matter was made a special order for tomorrow when members of the board wili appear before the supervisors.

The report of thec ommittee to approtion the mortgage tax was received showing that thec ounty's share of the tax for this year is $14,695.80.

New York—Mrs. Alexander Hamilton Rice, of Boston, Mass., and Philadelphia, Pa., who was Mrs. George D. Widener, has acquired for a price said to be $250,000 a magnificent Ispahan rug which adorned the palace of the Grand Mogul at Delhi, India. The rug was sold to her by Duveen Brothers, of this city, and now is in her villa in Newport, R. I. The report of the transaction was confirmed yesterday by Henry Duveen, who, however, declined to discuss the price of the rung.

The rug, one of the finest specimens of its kind in the world, is fifty-eight and one-half feet in length and eighteen feet broad. It was made in the latter part of the eighteenth century.

A WORD PICTURE OF THE CAMELS

At daybreak in Arabia, when a long caravna of camels from afar came down the mountain, the writer saw each one bearing on its back bales of wool, bags of Mocha coffee, spices of Araby, rugs from Persia and shawls from India.

They were on the way to the port of Aden, to there load their goods on ships to cross the Ocean.

IN THE SPORTING WORLD

Recent developments in the game of football have given to the position of center opportunities equal to those of any other on the rush line for spectacular work, and among the players in the pivotal position Center Cool of Cornell university is considered by many experts to be the best the year has produced. Cool played the same position last year, and his experience has been of great value to himself and the eleven. Although a small man for center—Cool weighs only about 160 pounds—he has been a power in the line, both on offense and defense. He is a cool, heady player of the rangy, quick acting type.

Suggestions For Golfers.

"There is no such thing for any man as eternal steadiness, but there is no reason why most golfers shouldn't develop a much greater steadiness than is shown," writes Jerome D. Travers in the American Magazine.

"It is all a matter of practicing two things—the proper use of the club and concentration or nerve control. The golfer who can't concentrate, who doesn't practice concentration, will never be able to develop steadiness, although he may be a fine shot maker and may be capable of some wonderful rounds.

"So, to put a few suggestions into compact, concrete form, the following are offered to those who desire a change for the better in their golfing steadiness or unsteadiness: (1) Practice concentration, keeping your mind on the ball as well as your eye; (2) make up your mind to accept a bad lie or some bad luck as part of the game and to be expected; (3) play each shot as it comes, without regret over past mistakes or worry over future troubles; (4) practice the short game, shots around the green, at every possible chance. It is here that scores are reduced; (5) practice with the brain as well as with the arms and legs. Cultivate brain control over muscle."

Sloman a Speed Marvel.

Apparently the Pacific coast is developing another cinder path flier in Frank Sloman, the youth who recently broke the American interscholastic record for the quarter mile by running that distance in 48 1-5 seconds. An idea of this schoolboy's speed can be gathered from the fact that, although thousands of 440 yard dashes have been run in the past fifteen years, the record has been broken but three times.

In 1901 C. Long set the time at 51 1-5 seconds, where it remained until Ted Meredith cut it down to 48 4-5 seconds in 1912 while attending Mercersberg academy. Three years later Sloman cut three-fifths of a second off Meredith's time, and if he continues to improve as Ted did after graduation from scholastic ranks the California lad will eventually rank with the great quarter milers of athletic history.

Feds to Play In New York City.

Directors of the Federal league at their annual meeting at Indianapolis definitely decided to invade New York city in 1916. The Kansas City club, whose franchise was declared forfeited, will be sent to New York and strengthened so that it "will merit the support of the New York fans."

James A. Gilmore, who was re-elected president of the league, stated that grounds had been obtained on Manhattan Island for the New York club. He said plans had been submitted for stands to seat 55,000 persons and that the league would be ready for operation in New York at the beginning of the 1916 season.

Coach Sharpe's Good Year.

This is Dr. Sharpe's fourth season as coach at Cornell. It took him three seasons to get his system running smoothly. Of course the Harvard triumph is the prime feat of his record. Sharpe has been aided materially by the prowess of Charlie Barrett, quarterback; Cool at center, and Shelton, a wonderful end.

BOY, FIVE, CROSSES CONTINENT ALONE

Tagged, He Travels Only In Care of Trainmen.

Hartford, Conn.—After a four day trip of 3,000 miles from Los Angeles to this city, traveling alone in the care of conductors and porters, five-year-old Elmer Gardiner, Jr., arrived here recently and has been busy holding receptions and telling his story at the home of his grandmother, Mrs. Henry Ammann.

The boy's father left his home in Los Angeles early in the summer to investigate a new venture in the east, planning to send for his wife and son later should he decide to live permanently in Connecticut. In his absence his wife died, leaving the little boy alone. The boy's father telegraphed $150 to a Los Angeles lawyer, intending that this should be used for Elmer's maintenance until it should be decided whether or not the boy should come east to live with his grandmother.

The lawyer, noting that $150 would be largely spent for the railroad fares between Los Angeles and Hartford, informed the surrogate he had received money with which to send the boy to Hartford, and the court signed the necessary papers.

The first intimation the father and grandmother had of this turn of affairs was when newspapers told of the boy's departure on his trip. This news was confirmed the next day by a telegram.

It was impossible to follow the train movements, and the next heard from Elmer was that he had arrived at Springfield, Mass., and was placed aboard the next train for Hartford. He jumped into his father's eager arms and immediately began a recital about the wonderful sights he saw coming across the country. A tag was fastened in the buttonhole of his overcoat, reading:

"Deliver me to my grandmother, Mrs. Henry Ammann, 46 Lenox street, Hartford, Conn."

FINDS VIPER IN CUPBOARD.

Farmer's Wife Scared by Reptile Coiled on Plates.

Bedford, Ind. — When Mrs. Ollie Marks, wife of a farmer near here, was setting supper a few evenings ago she reached into the china cupboard for a plate. She was almost "scared out of her boots," she said afterward, to find a spreading viper coiled on a pile of dishes.

As she did not wish snake for supper, she screamed until her husband came and killed the reptile. The snake was three feet six inches long.

GIVES HIS WANT AD. BRIDE $300,000 CASH

Aged Man Wins Georgia Wife, Twenty-eight, by That Course.

Atlanta, Ga.—William H. Burden of New York, who was married here recently to Miss Lulu Douglas Thomson, won his bride by means of a want advertisement.

Mr. Burden is seventy-six years old. He has been a widower for several years and has adult grandchildren. The bride is twenty-eight years old. It is generally reported that Mr. Burden settled $300,000 on her just before the wedding ceremony.

The bride is a niece of the late W. S. Thomson of Atlanta and of Mrs. Leonidas F. Scott of Decatur, with whom she has made her home since childhood. She got a substantial estate after her parents died, but most of this was spent on her art studies in Philadelphia, and she recently began to consider earning a livelihood by her own efforts.

A girl friend in Georgia ran across an advertisement which appeared to ask for a companion. The friend answered it, but after a letter or two was told that she "did not suit."

"You try it, Lulu," the friend suggested. So Miss Thomson wrote to the advertiser, received a paper with questions to be answered, filled them out and returned the paper. Apparently she "did suit," for the next mail brought a letter from Mr. Burden, who had been the anonymous advertiser.

Mr. Burden came to Atlanta and pushed his suit so successfully that he won Miss Thomson. The marriage, however, was opposed by Mr. Burden's children and grandchildren, who live in Macon, Ga., from which city Burden went to New York several years ago.

The first news of Mr. Burden's intended marriage which reached the ears of his relatives in Macon, a friend of the family said, was that the aged man went to his bank in New York and drew out $200,000 in cash, tucked it into a gripsack and left for Atlanta.

Mr. Burden's children came to Atlanta from Macon and tried to stop the marriage, even begging Miss Thomson not to wed the aged man. Both Mr. Burden and Miss Thomson, however, insisted that their marriage concerned only themselves. After the ceremony the couple left for New York, where they will live.

A TEST OF LOVE

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Lord Archibald Gray was fond of hunting, riding—indeed, all out of door exercises. Being a nobleman and a fine fellow besides, he was a pet of the petticoats. A match had been made for him by his father, the Duke of Fordham, with Lady Geraldine Stanhope, the daughter of a duke. Lord Archibald was well satisfied with Lady Geraldine and seemed to be fond of her alone till Amy Cuthbert, the daughter of an American banker, came along, and from that time no one could tell whether Lord Archibald would marry Lady Geraldine or Amy.

The Cuthberts were very rich and rented a manor house in the neighborhood where Lord Archibald and Lady Geraldine lived. This made a steady thing of the rivalry between the two girls, not that a rivalry was apparent, for what each girl felt no one knew except herself.

For one who had not a noble ancestry Miss Cuthbert was remarkably well bred. Indeed, by some she was considered more of a high stepper than her rival. She had more money than Lady Geraldine, but this was her only advantage. The truth is it was an even thing between the two girls, and it was generally believed that Lord Archibald, provided he had his choice, would marry the one he loved.

Autumn came on and with it hunting. Everybody among the aristocracy round about hunted, and parties were made up for the purpose. One afternoon a number of persons set out, mounted, Lord Archibald and his two favorites being of the party. Lady Geraldine was high minded enough to show no unfriendliness to Miss Cuthbert, and on the surface at least they were good friends.

On this afternoon the party became scattered into little groups, in some cases individuals. Lord Archibald was riding in a wood when suddenly, emerging from it, he saw Lady Geraldine and Miss Cuthbert riding together on the bank of a stream. A horn sounded on the other side, and the two girls turned to cross the stream at a shallow place.

"My God," he exclaimed; "if they cross there they'll get into the quicksand!"

He cried out with all his voice, but it was drowned by the barking of a pack of dogs. Putting spurs to his horse, he dashed down a declivity toward those who were going into danger. Having descended from the bank, they passed over a stony bottom to the verge of the stream, and their horses' hoofs began to splash the water, neither riding ahead, but side by side. Then it was noticeable that the animals were having difficulty in withdrawing their feet from the muddy bottom.

Lord Archibald goaded his horse so fiercely that in jumping over an inequality in the ground he fell and sent his rider sprawling ahead of him. The man was not hurt, but arose with an exclamation of impatience and attempted to get his horse on his feet. He failed; the horse had broken a leg. Turning to look at the girls, Archibald saw their horses floundering in the water, both animals having sunk up to their bellies. Looking once more despairingly at his own horse and realizing the impossibility of using him, Archibald ran as fast as his legs would carry him toward the girls. When he reached them the bodies of both horses were nearly covered, leaving only the shoulders above the surface.

Archibald was alone. He had nothing with which to extricate the sinking girls, and if he entered upon the quicksand he would not save them, but add a third victim. He saw one chance—a tree growing on the bank inclined over the stream, and a branch extended straight out over the point where the girls were floundering. By climbing out on the branch it might be possible to help them, though it seemed too high to enable him to do so.

Gray jumped, caught a lower branch, pulled himself up into the tree, then began to crawl out on the limb. As he proceeded his weight bent it lower, and by the time he came to the point over which the girls were sinking, by winding his legs around the branch and holding on to it with one hand, he was within reach of both Lady Geraldine and Miss Cuthbert.

By this time several persons appeared on the opposite bank and stood looking anxiously on this harrowing scene. When Archibald was in position to render assistance it was a question which girl he would first try to save. Even if he reached one of them so deeply embedded was she that it would be difficult to draw her out. It was evident that only one, if any, could be saved. All watched to see which it would be. Both girls' faces were turned up to him eagerly, imploringly. Archibald hesitated, but only for a moment. Then he extended his hand to Lady Geraldine.

It fell short, but by rocking the branch, she extending her hand, he was enabled to grasp it.

He had scarcely done so when a rope was thrown from the shore and fell between Miss Cuthbert and her horse's head. A countryman had witnessed from his home the two girls riding to quicksand and, seizing a rope, had run toward them. Both girls were drawn out by means of the rope.

There was no doubt as to which of the two favorites Lord Archibald loved. He married Lady Geraldine. Miss Cuthbert went back home and married one of her own countrymen.

The Birds' Plea

Dear kiddies, Christmas will soon be here,
The happiest time of all the year.
While you are enjoying your Christmas toys
And your little hearts filled with Christmas joys,
Please think of the wee birds out in the snow,
Where cruel winds whistle and fiercely blow.
Our home is the air; our roof is the sky;
When we've nothing to eat we freeze and die.
Dear kiddies, you live in houses
so warm,
Sheltered from cold and the blind-
ing storm.
You'll have "merry Christmas" and plenty to eat.
Oh, please give your little bird friends a treat!
We're so hungry. Dear little kiddies, please
Hang us some Christmas out on the trees.
YOUR LITTLE BIRD FRIENDS.

For the Children

Little Girl Awakening on Christmas Morning.

What a happy awakening for the little girl in bed on Christmas morning! She perhaps had sent a letter to Santa Claus to tell him her needs and desires, or maybe her mamma by skillful questioning had discovered what her daughter hoped the good saint would give her. And so the most wonderful thing has happened, for Santa Claus has brought the very presents the little girl longed for. Isn't it queer how closely Santa Claus guesses what little folks want? He seems to select the very things they like best. Surely he is a wonderfully gifted and kind hearted old gentleman. He rarely forgets his little friends.

Mysterious Chimney Swift.

Much has been learned about bird migration, but much yet remains to be learned, and the following is one of the most curious and interesting of the unsolved problems: The chimney swift is one of the most abundant and best known birds of the eastern United States. With troops of fledglings, catching their prey as they go and lodging by night in tall chimneys, the flocks drift slowly south, joining with other bands, until on the northern coast of the gulf of Mexico they become an innumerable host. Then they disappear. Did they drop into the water or hibernate in the mud, as was believed of old, their obliteration could not be more complete. In the last week in March a joyful twittering far overhead announces their return to the gulf coast, but their hiding place during the intervening five months is still the swift's secret.

Christmas Cheer.

Oh, children, you who have a Christmas, why won't you make it have a real meaning by impersonating Santa Claus? And if you cannot get through the chimney for the reason "that there ain't none" then joyously walk through the door of the poor dwelling and deposit your gift on the threshold. You do not catch the true Christmas spirit if you give only when you expect to receive in return. After you have exchanged gifts within your homes and even to your relatives near by then show your "good will to men" by making the "merry Christmas chimes" ring in the hearts of some poor tots.

Peanut Hunt—A Christmas Game.

Get about twelve packages of peanuts of different sizes. They should be hidden in vases, corners and nooks. Each child is provided with a little canvas bag and is told of the hidden peanuts. These are hunted for, and when all the children have returned with their treasure it is eaten.

How Water Melts Stone.

There are two things in rain besides the water itself that have the power to melt things, even the hardest stone, such as granite. These two things are nitric acid and carbonic acid. These acids eat away the stone so that it seems the water slowly melts it.

For Wakeful Dolls.

Some folks think that rocking spoils dolls. I don't. Do you? They sleep much better if you rock them, and if that won't put them to sleep you might tell them the story of the "Three Bears" or "Little Red Riding Hood."

Dollie's Golden Crown.

Here's my dearest dollie, dear,
When you get safely down,
Please bring to her, dear Santa Claus,
A bright new golden crown.

Don't wake her up, dear Santa, please,
She's sleeping in her booth;
Be very careful as you put
The crown on dollie's tooth.

She's eat so much candy, poor dear,
It's worn her tooth away,
And every day it aches so bad,
She'll neither eat nor play.

I tied her little handkerchief
Around the aching jaw;
She looks so very bad, poor dear,
The worst you ever saw.

I think it is a shame, I do,
To tell the solemn truth,
There isn't a dentist anywhere
To fix dear dollie's tooth.

But I am sure that you know how,
You good and wise St. Nick,
So please be sure to bring the crown,
And put it on real quick.
—Philadelphia Record.

TOWNS MORE HEALTHFUL.

Dr. T. D. Wood Ascribes the Cause to Inferior Rural Schools.

In a recent address before the Illinois state charities conference at Danville Dr. Thomas D. Wood, chairman of the committee on health problems in education of the National Education association, declared that there is more ill health among children and adults in rural America today than in our cities. Among other things, he said:

It is apparent that within the past decade the actual and vaunted physical superiority of country people and children over those living in the city has been reversed, and now it is confidently affirmed that for the entire population city dwellers are more healthy than those who dwell in rural districts. City life is more healthful than that of the country.

It is just as true, however, and startlingly significant, in view of the preceding statements, that most of our best human material for the cities and for the nation must still come from the country. If rural America is still to be a satisfactory nursery for human life it must be made healthful and attractive. It must furnish a generous fraction of the best of the population, and it must provide conditions favorable for the cultivation of the best, at least so far as the biologic and fundamental qualities of life are concerned.

The problem, then, for bringing about sufficient improvement in the healthfulness of rural life to provide a worthy birthplace and nursery for the best human stock is not simply a problem of the rural school, of the farm or of rural life in general, but it is a great, pressing problem of the nation affecting national safety, national prosperity and national perpetuity.

Rural schools are, on the average, less adequate for their use than prisons, asylums, almshouses, stables, dairy barns, pigpens, chicken houses and dog kennels are for their uses. Healthful and attractive rural schools are absolutely essential to the physical, mental, social, economic and moral well being of the children themselves and to the life and welfare of the nation as a whole. The health care of rural school children should include at least the following:

Schoolhouses sanitary and attractive, well ventilated, lighted, cleaned and equipped within and without with the health essentials.

Teachers better trained and better paid to do their logical and full share in carrying out a health program.

Health examinations, including dental inspection, once a year.

Follow-up health work by district and school nurses.

Health care in the school, including health instructions, warm school lunches, toothbrush drills and inculcation of all health habits.

Provision for removal of injurious physical defects by dental clinics, health clinics, etc.

Co-operation of all available individuals and organizations for the promotion of health and welfare of country school children.

Know What a Mole Is?

How dull the dictionary. It says "a mole is a permanent dark brown spot on the human skin." A California poetess refers to a mole as "a teardrop petrified by its own audacity."—Toledo Blade.

Takes the Right.

"Indeed, did he? I didn't know that was a case which waited for a decision."—Baltimore American.

Versatile.

It was at a reception, and the two friends had met.

"Do you know," said Ina, "it was as much as I could do to keep from laughing when Josephine was just telling us about her fiance being 'so versatile?'"

"Meaning Webb?" replied Kathleen, smiling. "Well, dear, he is rather versatile, you know."

"Nonsense!" cried Ina. "You know, Kathleen, he is a regular idiot."

"Yes," replied Kathleen, "but he's so many kinds of an idiot."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

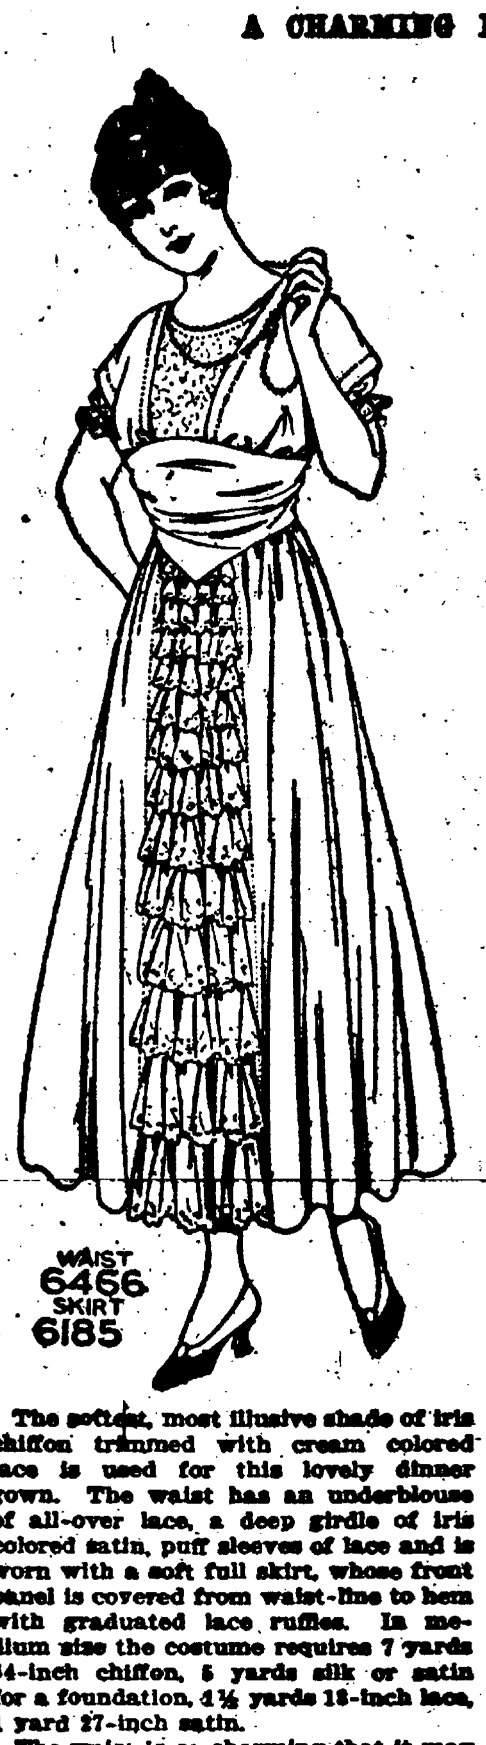
A CHARMING DINNER GOWN.



WAIST 6466 SKIRT 6185

The softest, most illusive shade of iris chiffon trimmed with cream colored lace is used for this lovely dinner gown. The waist has an underblouse of all-over lace, a deep girdle of iris colored satin, puff sleeves of lace and is worn with a soft full skirt, whose front panel is covered from waist-line to hem with graduated lace ruffles. In medium size the costume requires 7 yards 44-inch chiffon, 5 yards silk or satin for a foundation, 4½ yards 18-inch lace, 1 yard 27-inch satin.

The waist is so charming that it may be used as a separate design for evening wear. The lining is made first, beginning by pleating the front and back according to perforations. After closing the seams the back is hemmed and the belt adjusted underneath the lower edge of underbody. The front of the bretelle is indicated by large "O" perforations, and to make this the lower edges are first gathered between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above. Arrange on underbody, which, by the way, may be either of silk or lace, as preferred.

A pretty idea, too, is to make the waist in surplice effect. For this method of development close the under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Gather along shoulder seam, and at lower edge of front and back between double "TT" perforations, also 2 inches above lower edge; center-front indicated by line of 3 and center-back by 2 small "o" perforations. Arrange on underbody, armhole edges and under-arm seams even; stitch lower edges together crossing in front and back as illustrated on reverse side of envelope. Tack the shoulder edges together from large "O" perforation in underbody to the armhole edge, drawing gathers to fit.

Now for the girdle. Close the right side seam as notched. Gather along seam and gather the left side edge between double "TT" perforations; draw gathers and stitch tape 4½ inches long under gathers. Finish left side edges for a closing. Adjust, bringing lower back edge of girdle 2 inches below upper edge of skirt. Bring upper front edge of girdle to large "O" perforation near center-front of trimming piece and tack.

Close the puff seam as notched. Gather on crossline of small "o" perforations; draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape under gathers. Sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

For a more economical development of the dress the front panel could be trimmed with two or three deeper flounces instead of the series of narrow frills.

As the Twig Is Bent

Temper storms seem to be frequent among the nursery folk. One little boy of about two and a half years of age, with his screams and stamping and flinging himself on the ground, drew the attention of a whole street in pity for his mother. She could do nothing with him, so left him and went on with the other children. At a cry from the bystanders she turned, to see the boy, temporarily demented, rush off the pavement into the street. Fortunately he was rescued in time, but what a life in that home and what a future for that boy!

The incident brought to mind the urgency for a better understanding of the causes and treatment of the young child's furious temper.

It is often forgotten that neither the reasoning powers nor self control is strong enough to restrain a child's aggressive energy. The habit of restraint over the primitive propensities has not yet been set up. Consequently injudicious meat diet, nervous excitement, want of fresh air or the company of irritable, quarrelsome people fosters a mental condition liable to be set ablaze by some slight cause. The will, which can be quite strong even in a baby, is roused to exertion, and then the storm bursts and continues usually until the boy is exhausted.

Apart from the physical aspect of temper and its treatment, there are other methods to be followed. Prevention of an outburst is easier than its stoppage.

The mother or nurse should watch for the immediate cause of these storms and in future should avoid them whenever possible by distracting the attention in time or so maneuvering that the conditions are changed. Every outburst avoided is a gain to the child. It is essential in dealing with a passionate child that his whole character and propensities should be understood, so that all that is possible can be done to help him. With control established and energy directed to useful purposes, the boy stands a far better chance of developing into a man of strong character than another child of uniformly calm temperament.

INTERESTING DESSERTS.

BROWN BETTY.—Put a layer of sweetened apple sauce or chopped apples, sugared, in a buttered dish; add a few lumps of butter, then a layer of bread or cracker crumbs, sprinkled with a little cinnamon, then a layer of sauce, etc., making the last layer of crumbs; bake in oven and eat hot with cold cream.

Tapioca Cream.—In a double boiler cook a pint of milk and a heaping tablespoonful of granulated tapioca until the latter is clear. Add four tablespoonfuls of sugar and the yolk of an egg well beaten. Cook till it coats the spoon. Remove from the fire, add a teaspoonful of vanilla and half as much lemon and the stiffly beaten white of the egg. Beat it into the custard, pour into glasses for serving and set aside to become cold.

English Drop Cakes.—Cream a cupful butter, then add successively a cupful sugar, an egg, one-half teaspoonful soda dissolved in one-half cupful of sour cream, one-half cupful raisins (seeded and chopped), one-half cupful of almonds (chopped finely), one-half teaspoonful vanilla and two and one-half cupfuls of flour. Drop by spoonfuls one inch apart on a buttered sheet in a moderate oven.

Mock Cherry Pie.—Two cupfuls chopped cranberries, a cupful chopped raisins, two cupfuls sugar, a tablespoonful flour, one-half cupful cold water, two teaspoonfuls vanilla. Mix well and bake between two crusts.

This pie was such a favorite with one family last year that the home cook prepared large quantities of this filling, cooked it and sealed it in a stone jar. This will save time and labor as well as the trouble and expense of buying cranberries in small quantities. Best of all, mock cherry pie can be had on short notice.

Apple Junket.—Make the junket as usual. Peel and core three apples, cook them with a little water until they are smooth and without lumps, sweeten to taste and add a little lemon juice and grated rind. Beat up the whites of two eggs until they are stiff; then gradually beat in two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar. When the apple puree is cold mix the two together and beat until thoroughly blended. When the junket is quite firm spread the apple meringue over it and garnish with a few preserved cherries.

The Beginning of a Love Story

By F. A. MITCHEL

Is that a white cloud far up against the blue sky? If so, what means that dotted line? The dots—indeed, the whole line—moves. It is ascending.

No, it is not a cloud; it is the summit of a mountain. Those dots are climbers tied together by a rope. They seem near the top, but that is because they are so far from me. It will be several hours before they reach it.

I came to Chamonix to make the ascent of Mont Blanc. But yesterday I was slightly indisposed, and, if I remember correctly, those in the house in which I am lodged sent for the doctor, who came and said I had a fever. My window looks out on the mountain, and I long to regain my strength that I may fulfill the purpose of my coming.

My landlady partly opens my door and peeps through the crack. What means that startled expression on her face? She withdraws hurriedly, and I hear her calling, "Come, quick!"

I am lying in the snow near the summit of the mountain. Beneath me is the valley, beyond which is a succession of mountain peaks. How still is everything! From year to year, from century to century, these mountains revolve with the motion of the earth, a succession of night and day, never interrupted. It is always winter up here; at least there is always snow. I wonder if summer will ever come. Let the earth once be joggled and the inclination of its axis changed—then it may be torrid on these slopes and reptile monsters take the place of the chamois.

A face comes between me and the scene spread out before me. The latter is cold, the former warm; the one merciless, the other full of sympathy. A woman's eyes are looking into mine anxiously.

Singular that I should be lying in the cold snow with this girl looking at me. I shiver, and the anxiety on her face deepens. She takes my hand, but little warmth is imparted. She lays hers on my brow, but I gain no comfort.

I am about to speak to her to ask what this all means when she fades away as figures disappear in moving pictures. Then persons move about me, each one doing something, but the whole to me is an endless confusion. But presently the snow under me ceases to be cold, and now there is a slight warmth in my back. The face of the girl again appears before me, like an enlarged face on a screen, shutting out all else. Something of its previous anxiety is missing. Again it disappears, this time suddenly.

Then the sun shone down on me hot as molten lava. I was experienced in the heat of the sun at great heights, shining through a thin atmosphere, but I had never known anything like this. It seemed as if it were burning out my vitals. Meanwhile the scene about me was changing. I was cold; then hot, but I was not on the mountain. I was nowhere. I simply felt the heat and the cold and did not know which to dread the more.

Now and again that sweet girlish face flitted before me. Sometimes I could see her figure fading, not near by, but at a distance. Others came and went, but I took no notice of them. They were like shadows to me. But she—she was individual and always the same. Her hair and eyes were brown, her face oval, her complexion fair, with a touch of red in her cheeks.

Again I was lying in bed beside my window. There were the mountain and the dotted line where it was before, but now instead of moving upward it was descending. I felt an inexpressible relief from suffering and realized that I had been very ill and was in a state of convalescence. My landlady was standing at a table pouring a liquid from a vial into a glass. She turned and, seeing me looking at her, put down the vial and the glass and came to me.

"What has been the matter?" I asked her.

An expression of relief came over her features as she told me I had been very ill—indeed, was still very ill. I must be quiet and not excite myself.

I soon fell into a slumber, all the while conscious of a restfulness that was delightful. How long I slept I know not, but as soon as I awoke my landlady brought me a bowl of broth. I undertook to feed myself, but was too weak. She gave me a few spoonfuls of the broth, which was all I cared for at the time.

As I grew better I felt a desire to know whether the girl who had appeared to me during what I now realized was delirium was a creature of fancy or flesh and blood. I described her to my landlady, and she said: "She must be the American girl in the next house. The tourists have all been interested in your case, and this young lady came in to see you. She has been of great service."

"Please tell her," I replied; "that I am convalescent and ask her to come to see me, that I may thank her for her attention."

When the girl came I recognized her at once as the object of my dream or whatever it was. She looked at me with a hopeful expression.

"You have been in to see me before," I said. "I am under an obligation to you."

"Not at all," she replied. "But I am surprised that you have been conscious of my presence. You were delirious."

"You took my hand."

She blushed slightly. "I supposed you were not aware of it."

It marked the beginning of a love story, but of the story I shall maintain silence.

Picking a Horse.

A British cavalry officer, speaking of horses, said:

"Give me a free hand and I should pick a roan—that is, for good temper and quick learning. Dark grays and blacks are mostly strong and hardy, and so are dark chestnuts. As a general rule light chestnuts and light bays are nervous and delicate. A rusty black's a sulky pig nine times out of ten. Then, again, there are 'white stockings,' as they call them. You know the old saying, 'One white leg's a bad un, two white legs you may sell to a friend, three white legs you may trust for a time, four white legs you may lay your life on.'"

Nutmegs as Medicine.

A drowsy state after meals is what we should welcome, for it is the most favorable condition for good digestion. Nutmegs may produce it because their effect is to increase the flow of gastric juice. The nutmeg is much used by doctors as a remedy in weak digestion. If one has a keen appetite he does not need nutmeg, for appetite is the most powerful stimulant of the flow of gastric juice. If the appetite is not good the digestion will be feeble, and then the addition of a little nutmeg will be found of benefit.—London Answers.

Man's Limitations.

Man has done wonders since he came before the public. He has navigated the ocean, he has penetrated the mysteries of the starry heavens, he has harnessed the lightning and made it light the great cities of the world.

But he can't find a spool of thread in his wife's workbasket; he can't discover her pocket in a dress hanging in the closet; he cannot hang out clothes and get them on the line the right end up. He cannot hold clothespegs in his mouth while he is doing it either. He cannot be polite to somebody he hates. In short, he cannot do a hundred things that women do almost instinctively.

That Petticoat Flounce.

This season the petticoat flounce is usually meant to distend the bottom of the dress skirt with which it is worn—usually, but not always. The favorite flounce is deep, but it is handled in various ways, sometimes being simply gathered and having from one to several tiny ruffles atop of it to obtain a desired bouffant effect. A pretty model is that flounce which is accordion plaited and which has about its edge, run through the hem as through a casing, a cable cord to distend it. The smocked flounce is of course lovely and a beautiful garment which the girl with [illegible] plenty of leisure may make.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S MESSAGE

twenty-five coast submarines, two gunboats and one hospital ship; the second year two battleships, one scout cruiser, ten destroyers, four fleet submarines, fifteen coast submarines, one gunboat and one fuel oil ship; the third year two battleships, one battle cruiser, two scout cruisers, five destroyers, two fleet submarines and fifteen coast submarines; the fourth year two battleships, two battle cruisers, two scout cruisers, ten destroyers, two fleet submarines, fifteen coast submarines, one ammunition ship and one fuel oil ship, and the fifth year two battleships, one battle cruiser, two scout cruisers, ten destroyers, two fleet submarines, fifteen coast submarines, one gunboat, one ammunition ship and one repair ship.

The secretary of the navy is asking also for the immediate addition to the personnel of the navy of 7,500 sailors, 2,500 apprentice seamen and 1,500 marines. This increase would be sufficient to care for the ships which are to be completed within the fiscal year 1917 and also for the number of men which must be put in training to man the ships which will be completed early in 1918. It is also necessary that the number of midshipmen at the Naval academy at Annapolis should be increased by at least 300 in order that the force of officers should be more rapidly added to, and authority is asked to appoint, for engineering duties only, approved graduates of engineering colleges, and for service in the aviation corps a certain number of men taken from civil life.

If this full program should be carried out we should have built or building in 1921, according to the estimates of survival and standards of classification followed by the general board of the department, an effective navy consisting of 27 battleships of the first line, 6 battle cruisers, 25 battleships of the second line, 10 armored cruisers, 13 scout cruisers, 5 first class cruisers, 3 second class cruisers, 10 third class cruisers, 108 destroyers, 18 fleet submarines, 157 coast submarines, 6 monitors, 20 gunboats, 4 supply ships, 15 fuel ships, 4 transports, 3 tenders to torpedo vessels, 8 vessels of special types and two ammunition ships. This would be a navy fitted to our needs and worthy of our traditions.

But armies and instruments of war are only part of what has to be considered if we are to consider the supreme matter of national self sufficiency and security in all its aspects. There are other great matters which will be thrust upon our attention whether we will or not. There is, for example, a very pressing question of trade and shipping involved in this great problem of national adequacy. It is necessary for many weighty reasons of national efficiency and development that we should have a great merchant marine. The great merchant fleet we once used to make us rich, that great body of sturdy sailors who used to carry our flag into every sea, and who were the pride and often the bulwark of the nation, we have almost driven out of existence by inexcusable neglect and indifference and by a hopelessly blind and provincial policy of so called economic protection. It is high time we repaired our mistake and resumed our commercial independence on the seas.

With a view to meeting these pressing necessities of our commerce and availing ourselves at the earliest possible moment of the present unparalleled opportunity of linking the two Americas together in bonds of mutual interest and service, an opportunity which may never return again if we miss it now, proposals will be made to the present congress for the purchase or construction of ships to be owned and directed by the government similar to those made to the last congress, but modified in some essential particulars. I recommend these proposals to you for your prompt acceptance with the more confidence because every month that has elapsed since the former proposals were made has made the necessity for such action more and more manifestly imperative. That need was then foreseen. It is now acutely felt and everywhere realized by those for whom trade is waiting, but who can find no conveyance for their goods. I am not so much interested in the particulars of the program as I am in taking immediate advantage of the great opportunity which awaits us if we will but act in this emergency. In this matter, as in all others, a spirit of common counsel should prevail, and out of it should come an early solution of this pressing problem.

SHOULD AGREE ON POLICY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Recommends Early Adoption of Measures Giving Them Fuller Justice.

The president recommends the early adoption of bills for the alteration and reform of the government of the Philippines and for rendering fuller political justice to the people of Porto Rico, which were submitted to the Sixty-third congress. The president refers to the increased cost of carrying out the plans for the armed forces of the nation and tells of the fiscal problems confronting the government.

On the 30th of June last there was an available balance in the general fund of the treasury of $104,170,105.78. The total estimated receipts for the year 1916, on the assumption that the emergency revenue measure passed by the last congress will not be extended beyond its present limit, the 31st of December, 1915, and that the present duty of 1 cent per pound on sugar will be discontinued after the 1st of May, 1916, will be $670,365,500. The balance of June last and these estimated revenues come therefore to a grand total of $774,535,605.78. The total estimated disbursements for the present fiscal year, including twenty-five millions for the Panama canal, twelve millions for probable deficiency appropriations and $50,000 for miscellaneous debt redemptions, will be $753,891,000, and the balance in the general fund of the treasury will be reduced to $20,644,605.78. The emergency revenue act if continued beyond its present time limitation would produce during the half year then remaining about forty-one millions. The duty of 1 cent per pound on sugar if continued would produce during the two months of the fiscal year remaining after the 1st of May about fifteen millions. These two sums, amounting together to fifty-six millions, if added to the revenues of the second half of the fiscal year would yield the treasury at the end of the year an available balance of $76,644,605.78.

The additional revenues required to carry out the program of military and naval preparation of which I have spoken would, as at present estimated, be for the fiscal year 1917 $93,800,000. Those figures, taken with the figures for the present fiscal year which I have already given, disclose our financial problem for the year 1917. Assuming that the taxes imposed by the emergency revenue act and the present duty on sugar are to be discontinued and that the balance at the close of the present fiscal year will be only $20,644,605.78, that the disbursements for the Panama canal will again be about $25,000,000 and that the additional expenditures for the army and navy are authorized by the congress, the deficit in the general fund of the treasury on the 30th of June, 1917, will be nearly $235,000,000. To this sum at least $50,000,000 should be added to represent a safe working balance for the treasury and $12,000,000 to include the usual deficiency estimates in 1917, and these additions would make a total deficit of some $297,000,000. If the present taxes should be continued throughout this year and the next, however, there would be a balance in the treasury of some $76,500,000 at the end of the present fiscal year and a deficit at the end of the next year of only some $50,000,000, or, reckoning in $62,000,000 for deficiency appropriations and a safe treasury balance at the end of the year, a total deficit of some $112,000,000. The obvious moral of the figures is that it is a plain counsel of prudence to continue all of the present taxes or their equivalents and confine ourselves to the problem of providing $112,000,000 of new revenue rather than $297,000,000.

How shall we obtain the new revenue? We are frequently reminded that there are many millions of bonds which the treasury is authorized under existing law to sell to reimburse the sums paid out of current revenues for the construction of the Panama canal, and it is true that bonds for the amount of $222,432,000 are now available for that purpose. Prior to 1913 $133,000,000 of these bonds had actually been sold to recoup the expenditures at the isthmus, and now constitute a considerable item of the public debt. But I for one do not believe that the people of this country approve of postponing the payment of their bills. Borrowing money is shortsighted finance. It can be justified only when permanent things are to be accomplished which many generations will certainly benefit by and which it seems hardly fair that a single generation should pay for. The objects we are now proposing to spend money for cannot be so classified, except in the sense that everything wisely done may be said to be done in the interest of posterity as well as in our own. It seems to me a clear dictate of prudent statesmanship and frank finance that in what we are now, I hope, about to undertake we should pay as we go. The people of the country are entitled to know just what burdens of taxation they are to carry and to know from the outset now. The new bills should be paid by internal taxation.

NATION'S SECRET FOES SHOULD BE CRUSHED.

Gravest Danger to Country Comes From Within Our Own Borders.

The president says that the precise reckonings of the problem to be met are set forth in the report of the secretary of the treasury.

I have spoken to you today, gentlemen, upon a single theme, the thorough preparation of the nation to care for its own security and to make sure of entire freedom to play the impartial role in this hemisphere and in the world which we all believe to have been providentially assigned to it. I have had in my mind no thought of any immediate or particular danger arising out of our relations with other nations. We are at peace with all the nations of the world, and there is reason to hope that no question in controversy between this and other governments will lead to any serious breach of amicable relations, grave as some differences of attitude and policy have been and may yet turn out to be. I am sorry to say that the gravest threats against our national peace and safety have been uttered within our own borders. There are citizens of the United States, I blush to admit, born under other flags, but welcomed under our generous naturalization laws to the full freedom and opportunity of America, who have poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life, who have sought to bring the authority and good name of our government into contempt, to destroy our industries wherever they thought it effective for their vindictive purposes to strike at them and to debase our politics to the uses of foreign intrigue. Their number is not great as compared with the whole number of those sturdy hosts by which our nation has been enriched in recent generations out of virile foreign stocks, but it is great enough to have brought deep disgrace upon us and to have made it necessary that we should promptly make use of processes of law by which we may be purged of their corrupt distempers.

America never witnessed anything like this before. It never dreamed it possible that men sworn into its own citizenship, men drawn out of great free stocks such as supplied some of the best and strongest elements of that little, but how heroic, nation that in a high day of old staked its very life to free itself from every entanglement that had darkened the fortunes of the older nations and set up a new standard here—that men of such origins and such free choices of allegiance would ever turn in malign reaction against the government and people who had welcomed and nurtured them and seek to make this proud country once more a hotbed of European passion. A little while ago such a thing would have seemed incredible. Because it was incredible we made no preparation for it. We would have been almost ashamed to prepare for it, as if we were suspicious of ourselves, our own comrades and neighbors! But the ugly and incredible thing has actually come about, and we are without adequate federal laws to deal with it. I urge you to enact such laws at the earliest possible moment and feel that in doing so I am urging you to do nothing less than save the honor and self respect of the nation. Such creatures of passion, disloyalty and anarchy must be crushed out. They are not many, but they are infinitely malignant, and the hand of our power should close over them at once. They have formed plots to destroy property, they have entered into conspiracies against the neutrality of the government, they have sought to pry into every confidential transaction of the government in order to serve interests alien to our own. It is possible to deal with these things very effectually. I need not suggest the terms in which they may be dealt with.

I wish that it could be said that only a few men, misled by mistaken sentiments of allegiance to the governments under which they were born, had been guilty of disturbing the self possession and misrepresenting the temper and principles of the country during these days of terrible war, when it would seem that every man who was truly an American would instinctively make it his duty and his pride to keep the scales of judgment even and prove himself a partisan of no nation but his own. But it cannot. There are some men among us and many resident abroad who, though born and bred in the United States and calling themselves Americans, have so forgotten themselves and their honor as citizens as to put their passionate sympathy with one or the other side in the great European conflict above their regard for the peace and dignity of the United States. They also preach and practice disloyalty. No laws, I suppose, can reach corruptions of the mind and heart, but I should not speak of others without also speaking of these and expressing the even deeper humiliation and scorn which every self possessed and thoughtfully patriotic American must feel when he thinks of them and of the discredit they are daily bringing upon us.

What is more important is that the industries and resources of the country should be available and ready for mobilization. It is the more imperatively necessary, therefore, that we should promptly devise means for doing what we have not yet done—that we should give intelligent federal aid and stimulation to industrial and vocational education, as we have long done in the large field of our agricultural industry; that at the same time that we safeguard and conserve the natural resources of the country we should put them at the disposal of those who will use them promptly and intelligently, as was sought to be done in the admirable bills submitted to the last congress from its committees on the public lands, bills which I earnestly recommend in principle to your consideration; that we should put into early operation some provision for rural credits which will add to the extensive borrowing facilities already afforded the farmer by the reserve bank act adequate instrumentalities by which long credits may be obtained on land mortgages and that we should study more carefully than they have hitherto been studied the right adaptation of our economic arrangements to changing conditions.

Many conditions about which we have repeatedly legislated are being altered from decade to decade, it is evident, under our very eyes and are likely to change even more rapidly and more radically in the days immediately ahead of us when peace has returned to the world and the nations of Europe once more take up their tasks of commerce and industry with the energy of those who must bestir themselves to build anew.

In the meantime may I make this suggestion? The transportation problem is an exceedingly serious and pressing one in this country. There has from time to time of late been reason to fear that our railroads would not much longer be able to cope with it successfully, as at present equipped and co-ordinated. I suggest that it would be wise to provide for a commission of inquiry to ascertain by a thorough canvass of the whole question whether our laws as at present framed and administered are as serviceable as they might be in the solution of the problem. It is obviously a problem that lies at the very foundation of our efficiency as a people. Such an inquiry ought to draw out every circumstance and opinion worth considering, and we need to know all sides of the matter if we mean to do anything in the field of federal legislation.

No one, I am sure, would wish to take any backward step. The regulation of the railways of the country by federal commission has had admirable results and has fully justified the hopes and expectations of those by whom the policy of regulation was originally proposed. The question is not, What should we undo? It is whether there is anything else we can do that would supply us with effective means, in the very process of regulation, for bettering the conditions under which the railroads are operated and for making them more useful servants of the country as a whole. It seems to me that it might be the part of wisdom, therefore, before further legislation in this field is attempted, to look at the whole problem of co-ordination and efficiency in the full light of a fresh assessment of circumstance and opinion, as a guide to dealing with the several parts of it.

For what we are seeking now, what in my mind is the single thought of this message, is national efficiency and security. We serve a great nation. We should serve it in the spirit of its peculiar genius. It is the genius of common men for self government, industry, justice, liberty and peace. We should see to it that it lacks no instrument, no facility or vigor of law, to make it sufficient to play its part with energy, safety and assured success. In this we are no partisans but heralds and prophets of a new age.

TONIGHT'S THE NIGHT—COME TO THE HALL

ALDERMEN HOLD LAST REGULAR 1915 MEETING

Mayor Fox opened the meeting of the Board of Aldermen last night, by advising the members to attend tonight's Chamber of Commerce reception, adding as follows:

"You men want to be present at this meeting of the Chamber of Commerce and you will see a little oxygen injected into the movement."

Last night's session was the last regular meeting during the present administration, but some time during the month a special meeting will be held to receive and pass upon bills against the city, and to adjust other items, then good bye to the Fox regime.

The City Chamberlain presented his annual report and Alderman Foster offered a resolution that the report as well as that of the Commissioner of Charities be accepted. Approved. A resolution was passed authorizing the City Chamberlain to pay the city's obligations as they come due before the next special meeting of the Board.

Salary Increases Wanted

City Clerk Scudder read a communication which had been received from the Police and Fire Commissioners, recommending that the monthly salary of the fire department captain be increased from $66 to $70, and that of the night captain at police headquarters be raised from $72 to $80.

Mayor Fox stated that it was an impossibility to increase city [illegible] were justly entitled to the increase, adding that a number of city employees who must be trained men in their line and upon whom much responsibility rests are receiving a wage of only $1.50 a day. The mayor ended the subject by saying that if the Councilmen were to grant all demands a budget of $140,000 would be required. The budget now calls for the distribution of $93,000.

City Clerk Scudder advised the Board that there is no money on hand to pay the policemen's salaries coming due on December 15th and to supply the poor fund. No solution could be found to the problem. The excise fund is exhausted and it is possible that the money will be raised in anticipation of the budget for next year. A special meeting will be called by the mayor to take care of this matter.

Dr. Hall's Claim Approved

A resolution to cancel assessment on R. E. Borst for personal taxes was introduced by Alderman Baker and approved. The assessment was claimed to be erroneous. Mr. Borst operated a grocery store but discontinued its use before 1913. The tax was for 1913 and 1914.

Dr. Hall's claim against the city for $172, incurred in the year 1908, was virtually settled, when Alderman Distin offered a resolution to pay the bill. Approved.

The Doctor related to the Board the circumstances surrounding the case which caused commotion during this and preceding administrations, especially in regard to the man Spencer, who was hurt in a premature explosion of fireworks during a celebration in 1908. Dr. Hall was assigned to the case, the administration recommended that the bill be paid but no further heed was given the subject and the case has been passed over by several successive administrations.

Dr. Hall advised the Board that he had shown receipts to Mrs. Hannis, the city accountant, and that she had endeavored to adjust the case by referring to old records. Mrs. Hannis found instances where taxes remained unpaid, but Dr. Hall was able to produce receipts showing that these items had been paid. Mrs. Hannis informed the Doctor that she has been unable to find certain cash books, so that the receipts which Doctor Hall now holds must answer in making of adjustments of the indebtedness. NEW YORK'S PAPERS ATTACK AND DEFEND PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

THE WORLD

Not since the Civil War has any other President given to the Congress such momentous "information of the state of the Union" as President Wilson gave it in an address dealing almost wholly with the issue of national defense [illegible].

No other part of that address was so momentous as those paragraphs in which the President asserted that "the gravest threats against our peace and safety have been uttered within our own borders."

Unless this session of Congress is alive with the inspiration of "America First," unless it is willing to subordinate everything else to that cardinal principle of patriotism, the future of this republic is darker than it has been at any time since the Confederacy reached its high tide on Cemetery Ridge at Gettysburg.

THE SUN

We congratulate the Hon. Woodrow Wilson (and likewise the country) upon the singularly felicitous circumstance that the President has had the courage and the patriotism to modify in a marked degess his previous attitude with respect to two of the greatest questions now demanding the attention of the Sixty-fourth Congress, namely:

1. National preparation for military and naval defence;
2. Theg overnment's relation to the nation's railway system, and other oppressive and restrictive forms of paternalistic interference with matters belonging to private initiative and endeavor.

THE EVENING POST

No one can read President Wilson's message to Congress without feeling that into some parts of it he put a great deal of heart, while in other partions he is rather cold and perfunctory. If we were to judge by fervor of expression, we should say that the subjects which most deeply interest the President are peace, liberty, justice, the rights of man, the independence of nations, pride in America. In his proposals for increasing our military strength, he displays no warmth. It is rather as ad isagreeable necessity, to his mind, that they seem to be put forward. Perhaps at this point his pen was hampered by remembering his message of a year ago. Then he was for refraining from doing anything which might show that "we had been thrown off our balance by a war with which we have nothing to do." There spoke the instinctive Wilson, undoubtedly. In now accepting the plans of the War and Navy departments for enlargement of our military power, he is doing something alien to his characteristic impulse.

THE STAATS-ZEITUNG

The late inimitable and lamented Mark Twain once told the story of a stage coach on a Western run, for passage in which first, second and third class tickets were sold. A prospective passenger, unacquainted with the habits of the line and quite Scotch in his theories of economy, purchased a third class ticket, said nothing and mounted the coach. When it approach the first hill on its route the driver drew up and called out: "First class passengers, keep your seats! Second class passengers, get out and walk! Third class passengers, get out and push!"

The President's address of yesterday to the Congress leaves no doubt that he is attempting to drive the American coach of state on

SPEEDWAY ON CITY STREET AMBITION OF THE HORSEMEN

Owners of fast steppers, who delight in speeding up a bit now and then, have in mind a plan to secure permission to use one of the city's paved streets as speedway. The interested ones have announced their selection of a street to be West First street south of Broadway, but they made not known their method of procedure to obtaining consent to their petition. All this to come later.

In the meantime, or until something more definite is made known, the people of the city should become acquainted with the horsemen who pride themselves in owning steppers that have or are able to win marks. While names of the men who would like to have a speedway are withheld for the present, the following list of names will serve as a guide to those who might be seen behind nags, provided of course, the proposition goes through. Among the prominent owners of fast horses are:

Charles Jones, James Decker, Guy Garrett, Merton Reynolds, James Case, Fred Blake, John W. Stevenson, and George DuBois of Minetto.

Tomorrow James Decker's colt and Edward Jones' pacer will complete in a brush for a stake of $50. A number of enthusiastic supporters of both horses have also placed some money on the side.

Steven Decatur, owned by Fred Blake, of Bowens Corners, and Dukelate, owned by Edward Jones, will race next Monday.

The local horsemen desiring to secure a speedway have announce [illegible] is laid out a street for the use of speeding horsemen.

LONDON PAPERS SEE END TO THE MONROE DOCTRINE

London—President Wilson's message proved of unusual interest to the British press, as shown by the editorials in the morning papers.

In the view of "The Daily News," it is doubtful whether the Monroe Doctrine will ever be tenable again, experience having shown that the United States can no longer relp on political isolation founded on geographical detachment, which has largely lost its meaning."

"The Daily News" argues that it is only the British navy which today stands in effective defence of the Monroe Doctrine, and that "if Germany were victorious in this war the United States' guarantees of the independence of the states of South America would not be worth the paper on which that doctrine is written."

Admitting that President Wilson's claim that the American policy of neutrality has been of enormous value to the world is justified, and in its operation has worked to the incalculable advantage of the Allies, "The News" refers to President Wilson's difficulties in dealing with the German campaign owing to constitutional restrictions, and says:

"President Wilson has the courage and executive genius for an emergency, and we do not doubt that his demand for powers to deal with the situation will be readily granted."

"The Daily Chronicle" says: "After the amazing revelations of German machinations, which appear still far from complete, one would be surprised if the United States tolerated the present conditions of things much longer. It would be strange if the American people did not insist on its government taking strong measures to restore security of life and property on American soil and in American ports."

PREPAREDNESS FOR THE RAILWAYS

In any scheme of national peparedness the railways must play an important part.

This is strongly argued in the address made before the International Trade Conference in this city by Mr. George Dallas Dixon, vice president in charge of traffic of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The importance of the transportation lines in the countries now at war is so plain that he who runs may read it. While adequate and efficiently equipped railways are necessary to the prosperity of domestic trade and industry, they are in this country of vast distances vitally important as a military precaution.

Although the solvent railways are being aided by the expansion of business, about one-third of the country's mileage is still in the hands of receivers. Mr. Dixon's demand for fair treatment from federal and State governments should not fall on deaf ears. N. Y. Herald.

GRAMMAR AS IT IS TAUGHT

At the National Council of Teachers of English held in Chicago last week Edwin Farley of New York city criticised the present time-honored manner of teaching English grammar to such purpose that a committee was appointed to consider means of simplifying that study and to eliminate useless parts of it. We don't know how the teachers of grammar will feel about this, but we are quite sure that Mr. Farley will have behind him the unanimous and enthusiastic support of the boys and girls of America, who will be perfectly content and supremely happy if the committee decides to eliminate all of it. Mr. Farley has been a teacher of English many years, and two years ago he was president of the New York State Association of Teachers of English. Most of the time spent in teaching grammar, he asserts, is time wasted. "What does it matter," he asks, "if a man is unable to pick out the objective complement and the nominative absolute?"

What, indeed? How many men or women who have gone through the public schools, or even the colleges, could pick out such things? All who can, please signify by saying "aye." Profound silence!

"Grammar," says Mr. Farley, "not only does not teach correct speech, but often is a hindrance to it. When a man is thinking of syntax and trying to talk at the same time he is doing too much. There is a collision that is fatal either to the syntax or the thought. (Prolonged applause from the eighth grade.) A man may be able to parse to the queen's taste, but that won't help him to speak English correctly."

Probably if the radical and supercourageous utterances of Mr. Farley were to result in the elimination of the miseries of grammar as it is now taught and the establishment of a practical method of teaching English, the result might be looked upon with fear and trembling by some. But will it result disastrously?—Auburn Adv.-Journal.

DISABILITY DAMAGES

The Court of Appeals has decided that Jacob Schwab shall receive total disability damages for the loss of his hand. Schwab was already a one-handed man when the accident happened under the Compensation Law. The employer contended that only one hand was lost in the accident in its employment, and that as the law provides for the loss of one hand, the commission was not authorized to allow for total disability.

Something can be said on both sides of this question, for, on the one hand, the company is compelled to pay for a much more serious accident than actually happened in its factory. The company employed a one-handed man and is now penalized for it.

On the other hand, the employe is totally disabled, and the principle of the Compensation Law is that an industry shall bear a share of the burden of the injuries which its employes receive.—Utica Observer.

CAMERAS & SPEEDEX FILM

The Speedex here shown is the Ansco de luxe. Two things make it such a wonderful camera—the Ansco Anastigmat lens working at F 6.3 and the accurate Optimo shutter with a speed of 1/300 second. These enable you to catch rapidly moving objects and take snapshots on dull days, to surmount seemingly impossible conditions. Three sizes. Let us demonstrate the Speedex as well as the many other Ansco models from $2 to $55.

COME OUT TONIGHT

Tonight's mass meeting called by the Chamber of Commerce should be attended by every person interested in the welfare of Fulton. Indeed, the meeting will be attended only by persons who are interested for these alone never need coaxing or urging. And whatever difference of opinion may be held regarding individual members of the Chamber of Commerce, it should be laid aside and the Chamber considered as a unit.

Secretary Hollenga is a man of training and ability, and his message for the future workings of the Chamber should meet with respect—and united action with support.

Running a city's business is a great big job. If we knew how to run ourselves and had the time and were so inclined we should not need Secretary Hollenga, or any other secretary. The fact is we don't know how to keep ourselves, and Mr. Hollenga has demonstrated his efficiency in other cities, so here's the opportunity for all honest persons to swing into line.

The city hall should this evening be crowded to the doors, that the welcome given the new secretary may be big enough to cheer him on his good-sized task.

WASHINGTON POLITICAL NOTES

Newspaper polls of Congress relative to preparedness must soon give way to a real show-down at the Capitol. We predict that Bryan will control enough Democratic votes to defeat the President's plan as a party measure.

In 1911 the Republican majority in Congress gave way to the Democrats. The last Republican Congress made total appropriations of $2,054,000,000. The Democrats—with a Republican Senate to hold them down—proceeded to appropriate $2,118,000,000. In the following Congress, the Senate being also Democratic and with a Democrat in the White House, the appropriations rose to $2,231,000,000. When some Democrat begins to talk about "Republican extravagance" this figure will come in handy.

David S. Barry writes thus to the Providence "Journal": "Nobody knows better than the Secretary of the Treasury how depleted the daily balance fund is becoming; even the new method of Treasury book-keeping, designed to lull the public into a false sense of security until the danger point shall have been passed, does not fool him." And Mr. Barry might have added truthfully that it doesn't fool many other people any more.

When Claude Kitchin, Democratic floor leader in Congress, says that four-fifths of the majority membership will stifle their convictions and vote for preparedness under the President's orders, he opens up some interesting speculations regarding the status of constitutional government in this country.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condititon of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Start a Bank Account, Urges Southern Journal

Along with its campaign for bigger crops per acre and better selling methods, The Progressive Farmer expects to hammer unceasingly the overwhelming need for saving as well as making. We believe that every farmer in the South should have a bank account, however small, and there will never be a better time than right now to begin. How will it help you to put your money in the bank? Here are some of the ways:

1. A bank is the safest place to keep money, and it is actually dangerous to keep any considerable sum of money about the home. Doing so is simply an invitation to burglars and murderers. Of course it is important that you put your money in a sound bank, manned by officials in whom you have confidence; but there is now hardly a section of the South without such banks, and 90 per cent of all our banks are far, far safer than the practice of keeping money at home.

2. It is a good business. Farming is a business; why not conduct it as such? Other business men have their banks in which they regularly deposit their surplus funds, with which they establish their credit and obtain loans at fair interest rates. Is there any particular reason why we should not run our business in the same way? On the other hand, there are dozens and dozens of reasons why we should,—why, as a matter of fact, it is the only sensible way in which it can be conducted.

3. It encourages thrift, that splendid attribute that we usually associate with strength and character. We all admire the man who, with temptations to spend wastefully all about him, can resolutely say no to them all; we know that any nation blessed with men of such a breed has in it elements of strength and power that will make it great. One of the finest things you can hope for for your boy is that he be thrifty and strong in self-denial, and you yourself can do few better things than set him an example.

4. It is insurance against a destitute old age. There is no more pathetic thing in the world than an old couple, broken by toil and poverty, their children gone, little to hope and live for, condemned to fight on year after year for their very bread. Let us in the summer of life and strength so work and save that when the winds of life's winter blow upon us, we can face them without fear.

5. It promotes buying on a cash basis. So long as we are dragged down by the credit system millstone that curses the cotton country, we must not expect any great progress, individual or collective. There is just one way to get away fro mthis evil, and that is to put your business on a cash basis and keep it there. This is going to mean self-denial and possibly some actual hardships, but it is better for a year to do without many actual necessities than to go on forever paying tribute to a system that grinds men and women and children down into the dust of hopeless poverty. Put some money in the bank, and when you buy, buy for cash, at cash prices. Then, if you haven't enough money to buy all you need, do without it, we say, rather than go into bondage again.

Get in touch with the banker in your town, and do it now; very often he's a mighty good man to know.—The Progressive Farmer.

NEW CHARACTERS IN O'HARA'S NEW COMEDY

Augustus Pitou, sr., author of Fiske O'Hara's new play, "Kilkenny," in which the favorite Irish actor-singer is shortly to be seen in this city, has introduced several quaint and interesting characters in the new comedy. One of the most important is Murphy Kale, a blind piper, who figures prominently in the play's plot. He has been stricken blind by a flash of lightning on the night his only daughter runs off with a stranger who has won her affections, and one of the dramatic incidents of the play is the reunion, after years, of mother, father and daughter. "Kilkenny" is said to be the best play Mr. O'Hara has yet appeared in, and he has been provided with a number of new songs which he will render during the play's action.

RED CROSS SEALS HELP AND PROTECT

Christmas Messengers Work the Year Around for Tuberculosis Sufferers

How Red Cross Christmas Seals not only bring comfort, but provide safety and protection for those who haven't tuberculosis, is illustrated by a story which reached headquarters today.

Working as a compositor in a small newspaper office in an Indiana city, she fell a victim to tuberculosis through some one's carelessness. She was only nineteen and the sole bread-winner for a little family group which consisted of herself and her grand-parents. Her fellow workers noticed that her cough became chronic and that day by day she grew thinner and thinner, but she never confided her troubles to any one. She just "kept on the job." Through an unknown channel the King's Daughters learned of the case, and investigation proved that the girl slept at night on a pallet laid on three chairs so that she could be near the two old people whom she was supporting.

Physicians pronounced her case as hopeless, and she was refused admittance to the state sanatorium for early cases for this reason. She knew little about the danger of spreading the disease to others until recently, but she is now being cared for at home through Red Cross Seal funds and is taking the recognized precautions to prevent her infection from spreading to others.

N. Y. Scout Campaign Uninjured by Seton Thompson's Retirement

New York—The effect of Ernest Thompson Seton's attack upon the Boy Scouts of America was regarded by the Boy Scout authorities here yesterday as abortive, in so far as any bearing it might have been calculated to have on the financial campaign to raise $200,000 for the movement in New York. James E. West, Chief Scout Executive, declared that Mr. Seton's claim that he organized the Boy Scouts of America is not borne out by the facts:

"The attitude of Sir Robert Baden-Powell and others in permitting Mr. Seton's assertions along such lines has merely been one of gentlemanly courtesy," said Mr. West.

"The originator of the movement of course, was Sir Robert Baden-Powell," Quoting from a letter which he received recently from Sir Robert, Mr. West road:—"I should like, in the first place, to congratulate the Executive Board on the exceedingly temperate and fair manner in which you have dealt with the case. As regards Mr. Seton's references to me, they are not quite in accord with my recollection or with historical facts."

Mr. West added:—"The officials and members of the Executive Board of the Boy Scouts of America are willing to leave to the judgment of the people of New York and throughout the country whether the board's action in disposing of Mr. Seton as an official in the scout movement was for the best interests of the boys of our country.

GERMAN RADICALS WANT EARLY PEACE DECLARATION

Berlin, Monday, via London.—The Executice Committee of the radical party, which, next to the socialists, is regarded as strongest in the support of any peace movement, has adopted the following resolutions applying to the coming debates in the Reichstag:—

"The Executive Committee of the radical party regards with pride and gratitude the great successes which Germany and her allies have won in the world far, and, conscious of the power, self,sacrificing spirit andn untiring will of the German nation and army, expresses confidence that success is bringing about peace, for which the world is longing, will soon be attained.

"The committee enters a protest against the unjustified preteisions of our enemies to prescribe the terms of peace for us, and is convinced that these terms will not impose upon the German Empire, at best, the restoration of the status quo ante, as our enemies seem to think, but rather permanent protection against outside attacks and a permanent increase in its strength and prosperity and, so far as its safety requires, in its territory as well."

OLD EMPLOYES RETURN TO ROYFROFT

East Aurora—Rupert, the Red One, immortalized by the late Elbert Hubbard, has returned to the Roycroft shop and is at his old desk again this morning after an absence of eight years. His real name is Lyle Hawthorn, and during the early history of the Roycroft he was private secretary and general office man for Mr. Hubbard. Hawthorn resigned eight years ago and took a position in Keene, N. H., His return to "the fold" this morning was the signal for greetings from all the old employes.

There has been a general "coming back" of former employes of the shops for the past two or three months. "Cy" Rosen, head printer, returned a few weeks ago after having been gone for five years, being employed at Niagara Falls. Karl Kipp, the artistic craftsman, who established a shop of his own in this village in 1911 and left the employ of "The Fra," has again returned to the fold and is now at the head of the arts and craft department of the present reorganized Roycroft. Roycroft trad is booming, according to a statement issued by Elbert Hubbard, 2d, now in charge of the institution.

"You know," he said last evening, "we had to have the old boys back again—couldn't get along without them, now that father is gone. And more are coming back, too," he added with emphasis.

Made since 1846—Hanford's Balsam.

DISCOURAGED AT BAGDAD REVERSE

London, Monday, 2:27 a. m.—In their editorials the London morning newspapers express great disappointment over the severe check of the Mesopotamia campaign, which they admit precludes any prospect of an early renewal of the advance on Bagdad. The Times says:

"Although British reinforcements are believed to be at hand, we think the public must make up its mind to wait for a considerable time before the minarets of Bagdad are sighted by the British troops." and proceeds to criticise the conduct of the campaign, asking why an attempt was made to capture the city at the end of water communications 600 miles in length with a single division and upon what military grounds it was decided to exchange the admittedly strong position of Kut-el-Amara for an open and populous city without natural defences and apparently thronged with Turkish troops.

The editorial closes with the statement that "a valuable and cheering campaign has now been badly marred."

Many Children Have Worms

Worms are a common childhood ailment. They make children irritable, nervous and restless, besides robbing the body and mind of proper nourishment. Watch your child. Examine the stools and at first signs of worms give your child a treatment of Kickapoo Worm Killer. They kill the worms, act as a laxative and expel the worms and poisonous waste. Tone the system and help restore your child's health and happy disposition. Only 25c. at your Druggist.

PULASKI JAIL TO BE GIVEN UP

Supervisors Decide Finally to Maintain One Prison Only—To Spend Money on Courthouse.

The county jail at Pulaski was abandoned yesterday by the Board of Supervisors by a vote of 24 to 1, all the members present, except Mr. Parkhurst of Richland, voting for the amended resolution of Mr. Riley of this city. But Mr. Parkhurst got compensation for losing the jail in the shape of an appropriation of $3,500 for improving the court house at Pulaski.

It was necessary before the vote could be taken to straighten out a parliamentary tangle. Mr. Riley asked that the resolution of Mr. Parkhurst be divided into two questions, one for abandoning the jail and the other for the appropriation. (The resolution is printed with last night's proceedings).

Chairman Siver put the question by Mr. Riley and it was adopted.

The motion to abandon the jail was as stated. The second resolution referring to the expenditure was then submitted and was adopted by a vote of 19 to 6, as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Pierce, Wilson, Duane, Fuller, Arnold, Hall, Courbat, Harris, Parsons, Callison, Inman, Wallace, Jackson, Dowling, Parkhurst, Vincent, Vant, Lord, Nichols.—19.

Nays—Messrs. Pomphret, Lennox, McNamara, Woods, Riley, Martord.—6.

It was a case of the city against the country, the negative votes all being from the cities of Oswego and Fulton. The following were absent: Messrs, Soule, Gayer, Rough, Barker, Harter, Sheldon.

Chairman Siver did not vote.

Sheriff Buck will arrange to have the prisoners transferred to the Oswego jail in a day or two.

Child Welfare Board

Thomas H. King, chairman, and James Buckley of Altmar and County Superintendent of the Poor C. A. Stone appeared before the board and were accorded the privilege of the floor to explain the request of the Board of Child Welfare for $6,000 appropriation for th coming year.

Mr. King explained that the law contemplated th eassistance of widows with dependent children, under certain restrictions. The person so aided must have been a resident of the county or city for not less than 2 years previbusly, and her deceased husband must have been a citizen of the United States and a resident of the State. The amount allowed for assistance cannot exceed the amount it would cost for the board of a child in an institution. The sum asked for, Mr. King said, was the minimum at which thew orth of the law could be tested in this county. He read extracts from Governor Whitman's opinion in approving the bill.

Mr. Buckley explained that the appropriation called for was the smallest that could be used to advantage as the applications are numerous. He sid that some counties were withholding appropriations while others made allowances of from $30,000 to $60,000.

Superintendent Stone said that the applications now numbered 30, and 40 were expected by January 1, Help is given for a period of six months anly and is extended if warranted. Not more than $150 to $200 per year would beg iven any one family. Mr. Stone said that the number of children in families asking for help ranges from 1 to 9, with an average of 4.

Mr. Wallace moved that the matter of an appropriation be continued as a special order until one week from today. Carried.

By Mr. Hall—That the report of the committee on mortgage tax be taken from the table and adopted. Carried.

Mr. Wallace presented the report of thec ommittee on equilization. Over one day.

By Mr. Nichols—That the prayer of Amboy lodge No. 650, F. & A. M., for refunding of taxes and appropriating $5.18 therefor, be granted. Carried.

CASES STARTED FOR MILK ADULTERATIONS

Torrey A. Ball, of Oswego, attorney for the State Agricultural Department has started penalty actions against T. L. O'Brien, William H. Horr, jr., and Harold R. Seaman, asking $1100 in each case for alleged adulteration of milk. Mr. O'Brien is alleged to have furnished until below the herd test to the Bowens Corners cheese factory on July 5th, 1915; Mr. Horr to the Cook Milk and Cream station at Central Square on March 21st, 1914, and Mr. Seaman to the Co-operative Cheese factory at Amboy on September 11st. 1914. There is no allegation that this milk was deliberately watered; the complaint simply alleging that the milk delivered on the days in question and tested by State inspectors did not come up to the standard.

General Dissatisfaction.

Tiny Elsbeth was taken by mother to an afternoon tea, fashionable, but where the various ladies present were well acquainted and indulged too freely in gossip. The little girlie sat very straight and still, listening to all that was said. Critical remarks were made about absent friends, and even guests who took their departure were discussed with some freedom.

Elsbeth edged closer to her mother and remarked in a solemn whisper: "Nobody seems jus' exactly satisfied with nobody, does they, mamma?"

N. Y. PAPERS ATTACK AND DEFEND MESSAGE

similar lines. The third class Americans are inferentially defined by Mr. Wilson to be German and Irish Americans. They can get out and push— and they probably will. The second class includes each gentlemen as Messrs. Roosevelt, Choate et al., who do not agree with Mr. Wilson except in being sufficiently un-American to be pro-British. They may walk. The first class Americans—those who swear by the cross of St. George—are Woodrow Wilson, and, if there is room left on the seat, those who approve of Woodrow Wilson as Chief Executive of the United States. They alone are permitted to ride up the hill of President approbation.

Mr. Wilson named neither the individuals nor their nationality whom he invited, but so carefully prepared had been the soil in which the seed was to be planted that the allusion could not miscarry. The President meant those American citizens of foreign birth who have found repellent to their conception of American ideals the whole policy of the present administration, from anglicizing American spellings to anglicizing American liberties.

THE FATHERLAND

The administration hopes to make the position of German sympathizers so unpleasant that their political support will be valueless to Mr. Wilson's opponents. The administration likewise hopes by its "frightfulness" to intimidate those Americans who, without possessing pro-German proclivities, deplore the miserable failure of the Wilson administration to protect the American flag against seizure by Great Britain. Is the administration willing to go to any length, even to the extent of provoking war with Germany, in order to save its political neck?

Mr. Wilson has asked Congress for special laws to curb the propaganda of hyphenated Americans. We understand that the administration will request the amendment of the Sherman anti-trust law. Do we understand that this law will send J. Pierpont Morgan, Joseph H. Choate and C. M. Schwab to jail for their pernicious activities in behalf of the Allies, or is it directed solely against those American citizens who uphold the standards of authentic Americanism, who are protesting today as their ancestors did in 1812, against the base surrender of American rights to British aggression?

THE NEW YORKER HEROLD

We knew long ago that this traffic in arms and munition and the doubtful neutrality, as persisted in by Washington, would make this country a hotbed of European war passion. The attack against the German-Americans made in the Presidential message is the most poisonous blossom from this hotbed of passion.

Why these eternal accusations of plots against American industries? Where is the proof for such accusations? Why does not the administration bring those proofs into the courts? There is nothing behind that talk of plots, otherwise the mill of the courts would have made a little more noise. Them ountains have labored and have brought forth a few little mice in the shape of only a few indictments

If there are more laws necessary to make crimes against the safety of the country impossible, then, we say, let us have them! We are not afraid of them. They won't hit the German-Americans, that great lawabiding body of American citizens, except it be meant to create laws of exception against the German-Americans to suppress their press and their free exchange of opinion. But we do not believe that Congress is to be had for laws of exception.

The "domestic enemy" paragraph of the message is nothing but a sign of the nervousness which has taken hold of the President since his policy has been submitted to such a sharp criticism (and not alone from the German-American part of the population). In Congress this part of the message will only meet with a shaking of the head. We rely upon Congress.

A WORD PICTURE OF THE CAMELS

At daybreak in Arabia, when a long caravna of camels from afar came down the mountain, the writer saw each one bearing on its back bales of wool, bags of Mocha coffee, spices of Araby, rugs from Persia and shawls from India.

They were on the way to the port of Aden, to there load their goods on ships to cross the Ocean.

Preventive for Croup

The fact that croup can be prevented has been proven time and again. Mrs. Myron DeGroff, Baldwinsville, N. Y., writes, "I can certainly recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for croup in children. Whenever mine have been threatened with an attack, a dose or two of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has fixed them up all right."
